may own. What is denied one class may be denied the other. There is, therefore, no discrimination within the civil rights clauses of the Constitution."

Rules of Fixtures

A "FIXTURE" is any article permanently attached to real property, such as a theatre building. All fixtures belong to the purchaser of the building or to any one who forecloses a mortgage. Therefore, such fixtures cannot be legally removed without consent of the new owner.

For example, in Alwes v. Richheimer (47 S. W. [2d] 1084), it was disclosed that a theatre owner installed in a theatre building articles as seats, fans, a picture machine, a pipe organ, and a drop curtain.

A person who held a mortgage on the building foreclosed the mortgage, and litigation arose over the question whether the theatre owner could legally remove these articles. In holding the theatre operator not entitled to remove the same, the court said:

"The only question presented by this appeal is whether the articles of furniture and fixtures in the Commodore Theatre are fixtures, and therefore a part of the realty covered by the first and second mortgages, or whether they remain personal property, and not covered by said mortgages. * * * We think the articles enumerated above are fixtures because, not only are they attached to the building, but are used and are useful in connection with the operation of the building as a theatre or moving picture show, the only purpose to which it is adapted."

Liability on Film Contract

GENERALLY SPEAKING, a theatre owner is liable in damages for failure to fulfill a valid contract to exhibit motion picture films. However, he is not liable if for any reason the distributor has failed to comply with state censorship laws.

For illustration, in United Artists Corporation v. Mills (12 P. [2d] 785), it was shown that a theatre owner contracted with a film distributor to exhibit and pay rental on certain films. The theatre owner refused to exhibit the films and the distributor sued for breach of the contract. The theatre owner contended that he was not liable on the grounds that the contract was unenforceable for two reasons: First, the contract was void under the anti-trust law of the state; and, second, the motion picture censorship law of the state had not been complied with, because the Censor Board of the state had not been permitted to inspect the films.

It is interesting to observe that the higher court held the theatre owner not liabile for breaching the contract, and said:

"The statute relates to exhibition of motion pictures. Its purpose is to prevent the public exhibition of indecent, salacious, and otherwise offensive and morally degrading pictures. To carry out the purpose, a board of inspection is created, and a picture must be passed by the board before it may be publicly exhibited. * * * To make the regulation effective, the statute nullifies a contract between distributor and exhibitor for exhibition of a picture, unless there has been inspection, and the court holds this is a reasonable regulation."

Picketing Held Unlawful

THE VARIOUS courts have held that picketing is a legitimate means of economic coercion, if it is confined to persuasion and is free of molestation or threat of physical injury or annoyance. It is a privilege which may be invoked only when some lawful justification for its exercise exists, and by lawful justification is meant the bona fide exercise of some right.

Therefore, as a general rule, the courts have held that picketing, in the absence of a lawful strike, is unlawful. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is Moreland Theatres Corporation v. Portland Moving Picture Machine Operators' Protective Union (12 P. [2d] 333).

The facts of this case are that a theatre corporation owned and operated several theatres in the same city. Only one union employe, who was the motion picture machine operator, was employed in each theatre and all of these had either been discharged or had quit of their own accord before picketing of the theatres was commenced. It was contended by the theatre corporation that in the absence of a contract for a specified term of employment it had a right to discharge the union operators, and the operators likewise had a right to quit their services whenever they pleased and, therefore, it was unlawful for the union, of which the ex-operators were members, to picket the theatres.

Therefore, the theatre corporation filed suit and requested the court to grant an injunction against further picketing of its theatres on the grounds that the primary object and purpose of the picketing was not to benefit the union, but to injure the corporation's business and prevent patrons from entering the theatres.

It is important to know that the higher court held the picketing of the theatres, under these circumstances, to be unlawful, and stated the following important law:

"In conducting the theatres, the plaintiff was transacting a lawful business. The right to transact such business is a property right, the exercise of which without unlawful injury or interference by others is protected both by the Federal Constitution and by the Constitution of this state. * * * The same right to operate his business without unlawful interference extends to an employer as much as it does to any other person. * * * Regardless of what may be the weight of authority upon the question of whether picketing without a strike is lawful or unlawful, it is clear that before picketing, in the absence of a lawful strike, can be lawful, there must be some actual bona fide dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, and that, in the absence of both, there can be no unlawful justification for picketing in any case. Again, picketing is unlawful when the primary object of the picketing is not to benefit the combination but to injure the business of the employer or the person picketed. * * * The primary object and purpose of this picketing was not to benefit the union, but to injure the business of the plaintiff. * * * From this it follows as a necessary deduction that, when the purpose of the combination is illegal, every act done in furtherance of it is illegal, even though the act may be innocent in itself."

Infringement of Copyright

INFRINGEMENT of a valid copyright exists when the infringer performs any act which is based upon copying a copyrighted work. In other words, it is not necessary that an infringer of a copyright actually copies the copyrighted work in detail, but if the produced work results from any information received from reading or seeing the copyrighted work, infringement exists.

For instance, in the late case of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Distributing Corporation v. Bijou Theatre Company (59 F. [2d] 70), the legal question involved the right of a motion picture producer to read a copyrighted book and dramatize it without producing speech or dialogue contained in the book. This court explained the copyright laws, as follows:

"When the film is put on an exhibiting machine, which reproduces the action of the actors and animals, we think it does become a dramatization, and infringes the exclusive right of the owner of the copyrighted book to dramatize it, as well as his right as owner of the copyrighted drama. * * * In other words, the artist's idea of describing by action the story the author has written in words is a dramatization. It is not necessary that there should be both speech and action in dramatic performances, although dialogue and action usually characterize them. * * * If moving pictures may be used for dramatizing a novel, when the photographs are used in that way they are used to infringe a right which the statute reserves."

MOTIOGRAPH DELUXE SOUND EQUIPMENT

CINDERELLA THEATRE COMPANY, INC.
13311 E. JEFFERSON AVE.
DETROIT, MICH.

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co. October 8, 1932

Gentlemen:

Assuming that every conscientious manufacturer is interested in the way his product conducts itself in the field, I thought perhaps you would be glad to hear of the splendid satisfaction your equipment is affording us in the Cinderella and Roosevelt Theatres in this city.

As you are undoubtedly aware, the Cinderella is quite a large house, seating something in excess of two thousand (2,000) people, while the Roosevelt is somewhat smaller, having a capacity of only seventeen hundred (1700) seats.

Sound, in the Cinderella Theatre, in which I serve as operator, was until the installation of Motiograph De Luxe Equipment, a good deal of a nightmare; this statement will be borne out by the several manufacturers of sound outfits with which we have at different times been equipped, and I must add, to their sorrow and our embarrassment.

This house, perhaps I should explain, is of a narrow and extremely high construction, as you will understand when I explain that we enjoy a throw of approximately one hundred and forty (140) feet and an angle of throw of nearly twenty-six (26) degrees. In the Roosevelt Theatre, good sound is easier of attainment; the unbroken wall space is much less and the house is lower and wider.

Since the installation of your DELUXE SOUND EQUIPMENT AND PROJECTORS, nearly a year ago, we have not had a single necessity for service and for the first time since we have started running sound pictures, we feel assured that we will be able to run a complete program without interruption and that we are giving our patrons sound as good if not better than any other house in the city.

This testimonial is entirely unsolicited and you may use it in any way that you think will be to your advantage.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed)
GLENN A. HARNDEN

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 109, No. 5 October 29, 1932

EXCLUSIVES AND TOMORROW

SALES policies, in this and other industries, often take little cognizance of the consequences on the morrow. Just now it seems the exclusive run idea is being exploited without a deal of consideration of what sharp diminution of circulation must inevitably do to individual star values. There is no substitute for circulation in the process of making fame. This constitutes no final argument against the exclusive run idea, but it does present the inescapable fact that if exclusive run values are to be maintained a vast deal of the automatic advertising value of multiple exhibition will have to be replaced by other effort, and by expenditures.

The motion picture industry was founded in self-made wealth by reason of its ability to purvey machine-multiplied and machine-presented entertainment to the millions at a low cost and a low unit sale price. That is the principle of the machine as a factor in modern life.

If there is to be exclusive run product of consequence and the principle is to be enduringly applied to motion picture distribution it will perforce be limited to a special phase and sector of the industry. It will be a sector which engages itself in the advantages of the sound picture art form, but limits its marketing to something akin to the Broadway run and road show coverage of the speaking stage. That is a not unreasonable development and one which can very possibly better serve considerable metropolitan regions. That, however, cannot be the permanently dominant activity of the screen.

There is healthy benefit in ample consideration of and debate about the exclusive run policy. It is a part of the eternal process of trial and error by which the industry evolves. It is safe, however, to assume that the industry, broadly, will be ruled ultimately by the characteristics of the mechanism, a device for inexpensive repetitive production and wide retail delivery. That will be the business of serving the millions. There may be, and undoubtedly should be, a profit in serving not the millions but the hundred thousands and mayhap the thousands. But there are other businesses. Nothing needs to be done about all this, meanwhile, because the basic natural forces in final control are always at work and eventually effective. Profit consists in working with them.

"O'MALLEY O' THE SUN"

WE have come into the noon and afternoon years of the lives of the men who have seen Broadway become the street of the screen. They are passing now, one by one, as the slow first falling of the leaves of autumn. Last week we recorded the death of Mr. Moses L. Malevinsky and now we have to enter on the roster of the past the name of Mr. Frank Ward O'Malley, dead and buried at Tours in France, where he went to write and muse over the troves of his years of glamorous, dramatic newspapering on the Great White Way. As "O'Malley of the Sun" he was a national figure in journalism, the feature newswriter ideal of every aspiring cub from Manhattan to the Golden Gate. He was a friend of Broadway and the show world, knowing all and telling the public only what a decent concept of the news demanded. He was a founder of the "Forty-second Street Country Club" and officially breakfasted at "Jacks." The hand which types these lines in fond memory, raised with him many a friendly glass there, when all of us, and the motion picture, were younger.

FOR THE AGES

A COMMITTEE of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is endeavoring to be of assistance to a government project for the preservation of motion picture films as archives. However, as Mr. W. H. Carson, chairman, unofficially remarked the other day, if today's motion pictures are to survive for the service of ages to come, something other than nitro-cellulose base film will have to be the vehicle. The industry has had enough experience now to know that the effective life of a negative or print is hardly much more than a generation, and prolongation by the costly and tedious duping process has decided limits of practicality owing to the loss of detail at each step of removal from the original.

Many film fragments now passing out of existence if preserved could one day become as precious as the original fonts of Gutenberg type would be now. Speculatively motion picture technicians have discussed picture transfer to non-corroding platinum tapes and kindred devices, but unfortunately the funds of the future to be thereby enriched are not available for the costly processes involved. It will be just a ripping bit of joke on us if it chances that the cave drawings of Dordogne and the pre-alphabet pictographs of antiquity, the early ancestors of the motion picture of six to ten thousand years or more ago, should survive beyond the records of the facile cameras of the screen.

NEVER, until the arrival of Mr. Ernest W. Fredman, editor of the "Daily Film Renter," had we been aware of the total inadequacy of the cables and ordinary methods of conveying intelligence overseas. From him at first hand for the first time we learn that in Great Britain everything is rosy in general and in the motion picture industry in particular. Cheerio!

How the studio spends the production dollar

THE first analysis of basic production costs to be compiled since sound succeeded silent motion pictures came out of Hollywood this week, and it shows for the most part that the guardians of the studio purses have revised the production budget since 1926 so as to increase the amounts available for the purchase of stories and the development of scenarios. Undoubtedly sound itself brought about the increase, since it ushered in a pronounced trend toward the use of books and plays, as against studio originals.

Here is the way the production dollar stood in 1926 and in 1932, contrasted, and based on actual expenditures of the representative production agencies:

Actors' Salaries	$0.25	$0.25
Directors, Cameramen and Assistants	.10	.13
Scenarios and Stories	.10	.15
Sets (Manufactured)	.19	.10
Studio Physical Administration (Management, Cutting, Assembling and Titling of the Film)	.20	.23
Costumes, Gowns, etc.	.03	.03
Locations (Rent of Grounds and Properties and Transportation)	.08	.03
Raw film	.05	.08

The proportional graphs are based on total expenditures of the representative production agencies. That for 1926 is taken from similar data published by Exhibitors' Herald in March, 1927.

It is important to note that the split-up is on the basis of each dollar actually spent. There has been in recent months a tendency to lower production costs, which would mean that fewer dollars as a whole are expended on a production, although the percentage of any one item may continue to bear the same relation to the dollar expended as it did before costs were lowered.

There has been a saving in location charges and in manufactured sets. This saving has been diverted to stories, directors' and cameramen's salaries, and on raw film. Sound increased the costs of raw film over silent productions because of the necessity of using additional raw stock. In comparing the 1932 budget with 1926, it is interesting to note that actors' salaries and costumes, gowns, etc., are the only two items which continue with identical proportions.

VITAPHONE SUIT VS ERPI EXTENDS WARNER AND AT&T BATTLE LINES

Electrical Interests Make Counter Move by Filing General Denial to Anti-Trust Charges of Stanley-Warner

The legal battle between Warner companies and American Telephone and Telegraph interests was extended along further lines last week when the Vitaphone Corporation, a Warner subsidiary, filed an injunction suit in chancery court at Wilmington, against Electrical Research Products. The electrical interests made a counter move later in the week with the filing of a general denial in U. S. district court, Wilmington, to the anti-trust charges which Stanley-Warner brought a few months ago. The answers were filed individually by John E. Otterson, president, on behalf of Erpi; J. H. Ray, vice-president of Western, for that company, and C. M. Bracelen, vice-president, for A. T. & T. Stanley Company of America, a Pennsylvania theatre circuit controlled by Warners, was the principal defendant against the electrics. Complainants in additional suits, to which the electrics also filed answers last week, include General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio Company.

Hugh M. Morris, Wilmington attorney and former judge of the federal court, solicitor for Stanley-Warner, filed a motion for a preliminary injunction.

Erpi, Western and A. T. and T. denied that they have violated the Clayton or Sherman act as charged by Stanley. All three answers were similar, stating that Western was in the business of manufacturing and selling telephone apparatus, and that Erpi at all times after May 18, 1927, has been in the business of granting to various corporations licenses to electrically record and reproduce sound in synchronism with and independently of talking and projection of motion pictures and of leasing, and occasionally selling, equipment and apparatus for same and leasing and providing repair and replacement parts for such equipment and apparatus and rendering service in connection with maintenance and operation of such equipment and apparatus.

The defendants said they believed that the business of manufacturing apparatus and equipment is a local and intrastate business and the business of leasing and selling is intrastate business in some instances and in others interstate business, and the business of producing and distributing, in the case of certain producers who are licensees of Erpi, is an intrastate business only.

Defendants say that prior to 1920, the development and research department of the defendants and the engineering department of Western devoted much time and effort and expended large sums of money in vacuum tubes.

The defendants also say that the rights and licenses, granted by agreements pertaining to the manufacturing, use, lease and sale of apparatus for electrical recording and reproduction of sound in coordination or timed relation with the taking or projection of motion pictures for theatrical purposes and to the electrical recording and reproduction of sound independently of motion pictures for theatrical purposes, were non-exclusive. Also, that Western undertook commercial development of electrical recording and reproduction of sound, entered contracts and granted various licenses under patents and that Western at the time was the only apparatus, method and system with the use of which sound records of a quality sufficient for motion picture purposes could be recorded and reproduced. Others, it was said, would have resulted in the presentation of such inferior quality as to defeat the object of the enterprise and place in jeopardy the investment not only of Western and Vitaphone, but every theatre owner and operator who would install it.

The defendants declare that all agreements are lawful in all respects and that the provisions therein are reasonable and necessary and that Warner was interested and cooperated with Western in the development and applied to defendants for contracts with them as sole distributing agent throughout the United States. Warner, Wesern and the former's associates reached an agreement whereby Vitaphone also entered in on the agreement, it is said. The defendants aver that Vitaphone and Warner have derived great financial benefits which they retain and continue to enjoy.

Pursuant to the agreement, and under an old licensing agreement which was terminated, Vitaphone has been paid and has received and accepted 37½ per cent of all royalties paid to Erpi by licenses under the agreement, say the defendants.

The defendants asked the bill of complaints be dismissed.

The following filed depositions in the suit: John E. Otterson, president of Erpi; George E. Pratt, vice-president of Erpi; Herbert M. Wilcox, vice-president of Erpi; and A. E. Lichtman, of Washington, D. C., general manager of Lichtman Theatres. Mr. Lichtman's deposition says that out of his 15 theatres, 14 are equipped by Western and supplied by Erpi and that Lichtman Theatres have invested approximately $102,985 in theatre sound reproducing equipment, with approximately $101,725 attributable to Erpi.

Depositions were also filed by Carleton R. Sawyer, of East Orange, N. J., recording engineer of Erpi; Joseph P. Maxfield, of Maplewood, N. J., consulting engineer of Erpi, Alfred E. Goldsmith, of New York, vice-president and general engineer of RCA and vice-president and in charge of engineering of RCA Photophone; Walter E. Holland of Philadelphia, vice-president in charge of engineering for Philadelphia Storage Battery Company; Samuel L. Rothafel of New York, director of theatres of Radio City; Ray H. Manson of Rochester, N. Y., vice-president and chief engineer of Stromberg Carlson Telephone and Manufacturing Company; Elmer E. Bucher of Montclair, N. J., assistant vice-president of RCA; Edgar S. Bloom, president of Western Electric; George A. Giles of Belmont, Mass., treasurer and managing director of the George A. Giles Company, operating a circuit in Massachusetts; Edward Ansin of Brookline, Mass., president of Interstate Theatre Corporation; Leo Brecher of the Little Carnegie, Douglas, Roosevelt, Odean and Lafayette theatres of New York City; and Arthur W. Weil of New York, counsel for Erpi.

In the suit of General Talking Pictures against Erpi, Western Electric and American Telephone, the defendants also filed answers through Mr. Otterson. Mr. Ray and Mr. Bracelen. Hugh Morris, for the complainant, also moved for a preliminary injunction.

John E. Yarnack, engaged in the general field of telephone, telegraph, radio and "talkies," and formerly development and test engineer of Heyer Products Company, Inc., of New Jersey, filed an affidavit in support of the plaintiff's application for a preliminary injunction. Mr. Yarnack said that Erpi's service charges are many times the cost of manufacture and that the theatre owner is compelled to pay under contract.

M. A. Schlesinger, president of the plaintiff General Talking Pictures, also filed an affidavit in support of the preliminary injunction.

Affidavits were filed for Erpi by Edward M. Fay, treasurer of Emery Amusement Company, operating houses in Providence; David Bernstein, treasurer of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer; Louis B. Hoffman, formerly employed by De-Forest Phonofilm Corporation; Harry Gard Knox, vice-president of Erpi, and Paul L. Palmerton, export manager of Erpi.

In the Duovac suit against Erpi, Western and A. T. and T., answers were also filed by the defendants. Affidavits were filed for Erpi by Mervin J. Kelly, vacuum tube engineer of

For Your Convenience on November 8

RECORD ELECTION RETURNS ON THESE TWO PAGES. So that its readers may have a convenient means of charting the presidential race as the returns are reported over the radio or elsewhere, MOTION PICTURE HERALD publishes the following form, with the electoral vote of each state indicated in the first column. It should be remembered that election of President and Vice-President is by electoral vote, not popular vote. The candidate getting a majority of the total vote of a state, receives all of the votes of that state in the Electoral College. . . . In order that the actual election returns may be compared with the pre-election prognostications, a consensus of leading straw-polls is indicated (see key below). At time of going to press, these indicated the probability of 110 electoral votes for President Hoover, 217 electoral votes for Roosevelt, and 204 electoral votes as doubtful. Total electoral votes are 531, making 266 necessary for election.

KEY TO STRAW VOTE INDICATIONS:

25 PER CENT DIALOGUE REDUCTION ORDERED FOR UNIVERSAL PICTURES

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Decrees Change in New Scripts to Restore World Appeal Impaired by Introduction of Sound

Elimination of at least 25 per cent of the dialogue in every script now in preparation by Universal writers has been ordered by Carl Laemmle, Jr., vice-president in charge of production at the Coast studio, as one solution of the problem of re-establishing worldwide appeal in talking pictures by increasing their dramatic action. Mr. Laemmle issued instructions for immediate major changes in preparation and picturization of all product and voiced a policy of utilizing only stories which will draw patronage overseas as well as in the United States.

Mr. Laemmle emphasized the necessity of greater concentration on natural, dramatic action. Dialogue in Universal pictures must be cut to "the bare necessity," the executive has ordered.

Screen "Too American"

"The screen, once a universal language, has become too American for its own good," said the Universal production executive. "The fact that the screen now has a voice is no longer a novelty, and like public speakers the movies must realize that the best speech is always in a few forceful, impressive words. I insist that in future Universal pictures dialogue be cut to the bare necessity. It seems obvious that the importance of mere dialogue has been over-emphasized; pictures have become too chattery, too much 'talkie,' and we have catered too much to American slang, wisecracks and local subjects even for American audiences, which insist on a wide variety of subjects and locales.

"The future of talking pictures is to make them moving pictures of interest to all the world. Producers must at once adopt a greater appreciation of a world viewpoint. Survey of the world situation could not be accomplished in any less time than we have taken to make our analysis but the remedy for the existing ills in production must be provided without delay."

Mr. Laemmle said that "returning to a silent technique will not solve our problem." He added: "There is no reason why we should adopt the technique of the stage—we must create our own universal 'style' of story presentation. Universal is not going to rush story purchases. We are only interested in plays, novels and stories that will be as interesting and entertaining to German, French, Australian and African audiences as in America. Foreign countries need our product and we need this market. We must get together on what is best for that market and Universal proposes to be first.

Must Think in Terms of Action

"For months we have been working towards a new goal; now the change becomes the order of the day. In 'Airmail' we have a dramatic, physical picture with a minimum of dialogue—a story as true in Germany, South America and Asia as in America. The same is true of 'Nagana' and 'The Mummy' and will be even more true of 'Black Pearl,' 'The Invisible Man,' 'Only Yesterday' and other pictures soon to enter production.

"A majority of our current Universal pictures have been written directly for the screen and we have found these originals productive of our great progress—written without limitations and directly to emphasize dramatic action.

"The new technique demands that every man and woman interested in producing talking pictures think in terms of movement, action instead of mere sound and voice. Musical backgrounds will be a part of the new technique and frequently employed to add spirit and mood to dramatic and romantic scenes but the use of music in future sound pictures will be a decided departure from former uses and frequent abuses.

"The change will come first from more discriminate selection of story material; then more novel scenario preparation and finally in more painstaking direction and film editing. Producers have learned a great deal from experience and now they must bring about definite changes. They will and the new sound pictures will restore normal theatrical interest."

Mrs. Julia E. Case has been selected as chairman of the new board of censors of Everett, Mass., appointed by Mayor Michael C. O'Neil.

"DAILY NEWS" NAMES 11 GREATEST FILMS

Setting forth what it terms "our own views on the movies," the Daily News, New York newspaper, last week editorially published "an All-American list of great pictures—to date." The list follows:

The Birth of a Nation
Broken Blossoms
The Miracle Man (silent)
Tol'able David (silent)
The Four Horsemen
The Kid
Over the Hill (silent)
Humoresque
The Big Parade
Anna Christie (talking)
Smilin' Through (talking)

The editorial goes on to pay tribute to the acting of Norma Shearer, starring in MGM's "Smilin' Through," currently playing on Broadway. The film is called a "great picture," the editorial writer indicating that "we liked it more than the silent version."

Lasky Will Make Eight Each Year For Fox Release

Jesse L. Lasky has signed a contract with Sidney R. Kent, Fox president, providing for the production by Jesse L. Lasky Productions of eight features a year for a term of years for Fox at its Movietone City studio. Fox will finance the production of the films and distribute them, placing its facilities at the disposal of the Lasky organization.

Mr. Kent's statement with regard to the deal said in part: "It is important to this industry that Jesse L. Lasky will continue to produce motion pictures under the most favorable circumstances."

Mr. Lasky, in announcing the completion of the contract, said: "I studied the field at length and considered many offers before deciding my future course. These offers included plans for the financing of independent production as well as association with some of the major producers. . . . The only pictures that are accorded public acclaim today, and the only ones that are profitable to the producer, are those that are outstanding and different in theme and treatment. Each picture must have inherent within itself a distinct and obvious reason for its production. . . ."

Associated with Mr. Lasky will be James Cowan, executive manager; Hector Turnbull, associate producer, and Harry Chandlee, at present in New York in search of material. Mr. Cowan was general manager of the Paramount Long Island studio until it closed last spring. Mr. Turnbull was a writer and associate producer for Paramount for 15 years. Preparations will begin immediately, with Mr. Lasky already on the Coast. The first of the product will be released about March 1.

Dr. Wingate to Coast To Assume MPPDA Post

Dr. James B. Wingate, former New York State censor chief, has left New York to assume his post in Hollywood as head of the studio relations division of the MPPDA, where he will be charged with the interpretation of the production code. He succeeds Colonel Jason S. Joy, now with Fox.

Irwin Esmond of Albany, appointed as successor to Dr. Wingate, has taken active charge of the administration of the board of censor of New York.

Pathe News Conducting Straw Vote

What is said to be the first nationwide celluloid straw vote is now being conducted by Pathe News. A Pathe camera-sound crew has visited nearly every section of the country and will continue until election day. The results are released each week as a special feature of each reel.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

STORM FREAK. The ruins of the Tres Bandares theatre which was devastated by the recent hurricane that swept over Porto Rico. This picture was taken by E. M. Hall, assistant export manager of Erpi, who points out the adjoining building, housing Erpi offices, was unharmed.

A BALL'S-EYE VIEW. That will be the novel experience permitted by sequences in RKO Radio's "The Sport Parade." Director Dudley Murphy is shown instructing a technician concerning a camera concealed within a cork-filled football which Murphy devised.

A SHOWMAN'S APPROVAL. Of a comedian's technique. Ed Fay of Fay Theatres, Providence, R. I., is shown congratulating Joe E. Brown, Warner star, at the Warner home office.

BACK IN FILMS. Glenda Farrell, who went back to Hollywood and played a role in Warners' "I Am a Fugitive."

GRID HEROINE. Inasmuch as June Clyde contributes much of the incentive in Universal's "The All American."

HALF THE JOURNEY. At this stage, Genevieve Tobin arrived in New York, coming from Europe. But the trip continued to Hollywood, to work in Fox's "Pleasure Cruise."

J.D. Clark Resigns From Paramount

The resignation of John D. Clark, western divisional sales manager of Paramount, became effective Tuesday. Mr. Clark is scheduled to become assistant to Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film Corporation, in a few days.

Since entering the Philadelphia exchange in 1913, practically all of Mr. Clark's activities have been identified with Paramount. He was promoted to be branch manager at Philadelphia and afterward assigned to the western division as special representative. About 10 years ago he was appointed manager of that division.

Fox Planning Changes In Financial Structure

Edward R. Tinker, chairman of the board of Fox; Herman Place, a vice-president of Chase National, and A. John Michel, formerly Paramount comptroller and now with Fox, are working in collaboration with President Sidney R. Kent on a plan designed to effect additional writeoffs in the Fox financial structure.

Mr. Kent anticipates a trip to Hollywood late in November, which will be followed by a second trip to London in connection with the Fox 48 per cent interest in the Gaumont British company.

Quillan Wins Playoff In Quigley Tourney Division

Eddie Quillan last Sunday won the playoff of the tie for low gross in the actors' division of the Second Annual Motion Picture Golf Tournament, sponsored by Quigley Publications on the Coast, with a score of 83. The playoff on the low net went to Jack Kennedy.

Vitaphone Suing Erpi; New Move In Warner Fight

The new Vitaphone injunction suit against Electrical Products involves licensing agreements for use of talking motion picture producing and reproducing equipment.

The bill of complaint asks that the defendant be enjoined from granting any further licenses of the same nature, for the same fields and in the same territory as the license granted by defendant to complainant on May 18, 1927, without making provision whereby full information with respect to the gross revenue derived by the licensees from the exercise of such license shall be readily accessible to complainant, and that no such license shall be granted by defendant at a rate of royalties less than eight per cent of the gross revenue derived from the exercise of such licenses without the consent of the complainant unless provision is made whereby complainant shall receive quarterly on account of the royalties paid by such licensees an amount equal to three per cent of such gross revenues.

The complainant also asks that the defendant be enjoined from cancelling, terminating or modifying any license granted by it and now existing in the same nature and in the same fields and territory and the license of the complainant and from waiving any indebtedness due from any license under any existing licenses.

The court is also asked to enjoin complainant from claiming or alleging, except in answer to the suit, that the new license agreement between claimant and defendant has been broken, terminated or forfeited by reason of failure of complainant to pay royalties at the rate of eight per cent of its annual gross revenues and to enjoin complainant from directly or indirectly engaging in the business of producing and marketing products defined in the new license agreement without disclosing all revenues derived from such business and without paying complainant three per cent. of the gross revenues.

The court is further asked to enjoin complainant from granting any license to any corporation except one mutually satisfactory to complainant and defendant and in which complainant shall be given the opportunity of acquiring a substantial stock interest and from transferring or liquidating the defendant corporation's assets.

"WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME"

Due to indications that it can again be of service to an important sector of exhibition activity the department entitled "What the Picture Did for Me," which was for many years a feature of the Exhibitors' Herald, will be instituted in Motion Picture Herald, beginning with an early issue.

Due to the growing trend toward classification of theatres, by the automatic influences of differences in locales, differences in sectional taste, differences in buying power and kindred factors, it is at this time particularly important that the exhibitors shall be outspoken, articulate and expressive of all that constitutes or bears upon their operations and operating problems.

Exhibitor reports on "What the Picture Did for Me" to appear in Motion Picture Herald will be limited to concise expressions on performance as box office merchandise, statements of fact helpful to fellow exhibitors, not expositions of personal opinion.

SERVICING IS ESSENTIAL TO SOUND, SAYS WILCOX

Efficiency of Service Engineers Is Measured Largely by the Absence of Emergency Calls, Declares Erpi Vice President

The motion picture is still engaged in making its adjustments to sound, and the manifestations are to be observed all the way from the stages of Hollywood to the exhibitor and the screen. Further, the process is likely to be continuous for some years to come, first by reason of the fact that the research laboratories of the great engineering organizations which created and delivered sound are two or three years, at least, ahead of the field of performance in the technique of sound recording and sound reproduction, second because the whole relation is complexed by an array of commercial phenomena running through production, distribution and exhibition.

Maintenance service, and charges for that service, is currently the subject of much interest and discussion in the industry, more particularly the exhibition branch. And largely that centers in the operations of Electrical Research Products, Inc., which has installed approximately 6,000 theatre equipments, or about half of those in operation in the United States.

On the side of the exhibitor, under the pressures of the day toward reduction of operating costs, the discussion is on the issue of charges for the service rather than the question of the necessity for it. On the Erpi side is the view that the sound equipment of the theatre, sold on a 10-year lease basis, is itself the mechanical element of a continuing service, which consists of the delivery of sound, of a certain quality and continuity, to the theatre screen and audience, and that as continuous attention and service is obviously necessary to obtain this result, the most economical method is through a nation-wide organization of specially trained technicians backed with staff work.

300 Emergency Calls a Month

The nature of the sound reproduction apparatus, a highly complex mechanical and electrical device, in effect an extremely sensitive musical instrument, has made it impossible thus far to construct an equipment, which can be permanently adjusted and left in operation for an indefinite period, like an ironclad mine pump or a sealed refrigerator mechanism. Someone has to keep a talking picture equipment in adjustment and repair to keep it working properly. Progressively sound equipment in general is less and less subject to failure and breakdown. The indications in fact are that both the operators of the equipment and the engineers who service it are becoming more proficient, the apparatus better in design and construction. In fact, Erpi has long maintained traveling instructors and key city classes for operators of sound equipment.

The administration of Erpi service is under the charge of H. M. Wilcox, vice-president in charge of operation. On his desk in New York all of the affairs of the national service organization center.

Discussing continuity of operation of theatre equipments, Mr. Wilcox remarks that while in December of 1928, when there were about a thousand equipments in service, there were about a thousand emergency calls, or one a month per theatre; now, with some six thousand equipments at work, the emergency calls average only about 300 a month.

"Our whole service organization is imbued with the spirit of the showman's slogan, 'The show must go on,'" says Mr. Wilcox, "and the efficiency of the service engineers is to a considerable extent measured by the absence of emergency calls."

Erpi has 300 and odd service engineers, who work out of some 30 offices and who are available at nearly 200 telephone emergency addresses which are the equivalents of offices in terms of service. Each engineer carries certain minor repair parts in his kit, while at each of the 30 offices a complete stock of repair parts is maintained, representing an inventory averaging upwards of $250,000.

The charge to Erpi equipped theatres for this service is $15 a week for the smaller equipments, $20 for the intermediate type, and $40 for the largest installations. The present average for the 6,000 theatres is approximately $17 each a week. Obviously the proportion of sound service expense to the larger theatres is vastly lower than to the lesser houses.

Called Operating Problem

"The present standards of Erpi service," says Mr. Wilcox, "are those evolved in practice from the beginning of installations of Western Electric equipment, and the records of my office seem to prove that this quality of service attention is essential to the exhibitor. No electrical equipment has yet been evolved that does not need service, from motor car ignition to oil burners, refrigerators, radio sets and all the gadgets of modern life, including the telephone. The degree of service required is in proportion to the complexity of the apparatus and the subsequent hazards of breakdown at some point—the more points, the more hazard."

The observation was made that radio sets seem to run along for months on end without very much attention. "They do," responded Mr. Wilcox, "and there is about as much similarity between a radio receiving set and a talking picture equipment as between a spade and a steamshovel; and furthermore the radio set is not performing to an audience that has paid an admission fee for listening to it nor is there any illusion to be maintained comparable with that of the motion picture. Also bear in mind," he insisted, "that a considerable part of the service that Erpi delivers to the theatre in the person of the service engineer is really in the background of the big organization and the laboratories at work continuously on the problems of sound equipment."

"I have of course heard," admitted Mr Wilcox, "numerous demands for a reduction in service charges, but I have yet to hear of an instance in which this demand was coupled with a request that the service be discontinued. To me it is an operating problem, a question of reduction of service costs, which automatically means a reduction of service. That is simple to state, but not simple to do, even if it were deemed wise. The service is made up of the attention of men, which means offices, payroll and travel. My figures show that if we cut the service calls in half, the result would be a reduction of less than 25 per cent in cost, even admitting that there would be no corresponding increase in emergency service calls as the preventive service was reduced. As an operating proposition, service maintained at the present standards means a continuation of present costs. The constructive solution to the problem is to get more people into the motion picture theatres, and this cannot be accomplished by permitting any deterioration in the quality of entertainment delivered to them. My honest conviction is that the relatively small saving resulting from a relatively large dilution of servicing is a pennywise and pound foolish policy."

The array of analytical reports filed in Mr. Wilcox's office, covering as they do some five years of theatre sound operation and 6,000 wired houses, begin to have some of the qualities of the actuarial records of insurance companies. While it is not possible to say what will happen to any one sound equipment in any one week or month, it is possible from the survey of Erpi's performance sheets to forecast with amazing accuracy just how many amplifiers will develop trouble, what part of those troubles will be caught in advance of breakdown by the service engineer and what proportion or number of them will result in emergency calls. It is possible, too, to anticipate just how many projection room fires there will be, how many tubes will fail in service, how many fuses will blow out and in fact down to very fine detail just about everything that will happen among those 6,000 machines. The happenings are, however, averages spread over the whole 6,000.

Service operations are necessarily based on these records, which automatically concentrate attention on the trouble spots, whether they are mechanisms or persons. The tendency is therefore toward the continuous elimination of sources of difficulty, reflected in the curve that depicts the fall from the thousand trouble calls per thousand equipments in the fall of 1928 to the 50 calls per thousand of today.

The service reports for the typical month of June in Mr. Wilcox's office show that a total of 348 emergency calls were made among 6,119 installations and that the average time nationally in getting the service man to the scene was 39 minutes, while it took him on an average 18 minutes, in show time, to clear the trouble. In the larger cities the total clearance time is much less, averaging better than 30 minutes.

"But," says Mr. Wilcox, "the general principle is to apply preventive attention. The idea is somewhat like the Chinese doctor system—he gets paid as long as the patient is well. The real value is not in curing breakdowns, but in preventing them. This, coupled with the delivery of a quality of product acceptable to the ears of the public, is the objective. If this is done, then the price paid, in proportion to the other operating costs of the industry, is a small item."

No Tax on Critics' Passes

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has ruled that no admission tax is to be imposed upon tickets or passes used by motion picture critics of newspapers specifically for the purpose of reviewing films.

"OUTLINES OF A CORKING GOOD FILM"

That's DeCasseres' Idea of "When Ladies Meet"; Five Other Plays Come into Critic's Purview

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

WHEN LADIES MEET

When ladies meet—well, the Greeks had a word for it. It is borborygmus. It's in the dictionary and it's a perfectly nice word.

In Rachel Crothers' new comedy, "When Ladies Meet," we have the outlines of a corking good picture for the grand old triangle trade. But this is the triangle puzzle from a very lofty standpoint, so lofty at times that even the Pennsylvania Board of Censors will snore on it.

To wit: Mary Howard, novelist. Rogers Woodruff, married, her publisher, in love with Mary. Jimmie Stevens, gorgeous souse, in love with Mary in alabaster-sentimental way. Mrs. Bridget Drake, a brilliant widow (high, epigrammatic comedy, which in the hands of Spring Byington is the gizzard of the show). Finally, Mrs. Woodruff, the wife of the publisher. Smart dialogue. Definite and vivid characterization.

The core is this: In one of Mary's novels she declares that a husband's sweetheart can go to the wife and spill the beans and all will be hunkey-dorey.

How does it really work out in real life? Well, that's when the ladies meet (at Mrs. Drake's country house). Life works one way while Mary's novels work another. The romance blows up. The wife will have no triangle in her life. And she quits the hubby.

Now, it was Jimmie the stew who brought about this meeting of the two women and so, I presume, claimed his reward.

Frieda Inescourt, Walter Abel, Herbert Rawlinson and Senena Royle were excellent.

RENDEZVOUS

There's a smoking hot crime picture in this play, "Rendezvous," by Barton MacLane, produced by Arthur Hopkins. The slaughter of actors is tremendous. And the idea that frames the slaughter is rather novel.

Jim Oakley, head of a beer bootlegging gang, has learned his shooting philosophy of life in the trenches (which we see with a murder or two in the prologue). That philosophy has taught him that life and the sacredness thereof is of no more importance than the bellyache of a nit on the nose of a gnat.

In the city in which he works his beer racket with his former buddies in France, there is another gang headed by Tony Rossalino.

Now, Rossalino owns the judge, the big political boss and the leading lawyer of the town. These four fellows are always smearing up the Oakley gang.

So this is the big idea that enters Jim Oakley's gassed mind: kidnap the judge, the political boss and the lawyer and shoot them in the name of a new Declaration of Independence. Oakley pays off his gang and becomes a John Brown.

The big scene is the bumping off, the judge by suffocation and the political boss by enforced suicide, in Oakley's hideaway; the breaking in of the Rossalino gang (there is a skirt with them), and a grand slaughter of Rafts and Robinsons.

But another Harper's Ferry went wrong. Third act: Oakley in the death-house. The skirt, who has chucked Rossalino for Oakley, goes to the chair (teary-deary farewell through the bars), and Oakley himself cheats the chair by dying of heart failure in his cell.

As a play it has the grand idea of shooting all our corrupt officials by bootleggers. It doesn't work out: it's phony. But with one of the gang actors in it, it would clean up on the screen.

CRIMINAL AT LARGE

This play by Edgar Wallace has the best suspense interest of any crime play that I have seen for a long time. Without much action, it held the audience tensely guessing for over two hours. It's a hit.

It opens in the chief inspector's office in Scotland Yard. A doctor and a chauffeur have been found strangled to death at Mark's Priory, an old English country house.

The house is tenanted by Lord Lebanon, his mother, a girl whom his mother wants him to marry, two mysterious roughneck grooms and another servant.

The doctor who has been strangled has a mysterious tie-up with the mother. In the second act the Scotland Yard men are at work in the house. There has been no robbery. There is no conceivable motive for the crimes.

Lord Lebanon is a young fellow (remarkably well-acted by Emlyn Williams). It is he who is the strangler. He is insane. He learned the strangling trick in India. He confesses to the inspector just at the end of the play and shoots himself. The suspicious grooms were his keepers.

The mother's queer actions are to protect the son. She knows. The room that is never opened, and which the police are about to break into, is Lord Lebanon's padded cell when be becomes violent.

"Criminal at Large" is a perfect Edgar Wallace. And it has a background of aristocratic family descent that lifts it out of the gang-class of plays. Alexandra Carlisle and William Harrigan do some fine work in this play as the mother and the inspector.

I LOVED YOU WEDNESDAY

This brittle piece of cut glassware is for the high-hat and spats crowd.

Is there a monocle movie belt? If so, "I Loved You Wednesday," by Molly Ricardel and William Du Bois, is a fine bit of caviar.

Since action has gone out of fashion in so many of the pictures, this might go over some. All the more as it is an opportunity for swell dressing, close-up bare-backing, top-hatting, and has a speakeasy in it patronized by those who swill only from bottles with the rare French labels made down in Greenwich street.

Paris: Vic Meredith and Randy Williams (married) have a tearful farewell in the Luxembourg Gardens. Randy's rich wife has ordered him back to the apron strings.

New York: Vic is now a famous dancer who travels with her feminine osteopath and has a boodled sap on her string.

Of course Vic and Randy meet again. So do Vic and Randy's wife, who is a bit of a big-timer herself with a nit-wit at her heels. They meet in the swell speak. And there is a lot of fake verbal fencing on the part of all four.

It's all neat but faky as the labels on the bottles.

About the fifth reel Vic makes up her mind to skip with Randy. But Randy's wife gets wind of it, and in a clever ruse gets Vic out of the apartment. Randy looks at his wife and says laughingly, "You dished me again!" Curtain. It's good hooey for a Parisian-minded director.

OL' MAN SATAN

Will "The Green Pastures" ever get to the screen? This, one of the greatest plays of the century, would make motion picture history in the hands of a director with imagination. And it would break down the lie that the public is in back of the religious censorship—as big a fiction as that concerning prohibition.

"Ol' Man Satan" is a follow-up on "The Green Pastures." It is by no means as good—couldn't be. But it contains moments of great beauty in its thirty-six scenes.

The story, by Donald Heywood, is a Negro mammy's idea of the rise and fall of Satan. The Lord doesn't appear in this saga, as He does in "The Green Pastures," but Satan is there, and so there are more popular picture possibilities than in the Connolly-Bradford masterpiece. For nothing films so well as vice. There is no drama in virtue, as Cleopatra said.

NEWSPAPER CRITIQUES ON PICTURES DECRIED

E. M. Fay, Exhibitor, and Joe E. Brown, Actor, Meet; Agree That Desire for Entertainment, Not Education, Brings Patrons

"There's nothing the trouble with pictures except newspapers," cryptically remarked Edward M. Fay, exhibitor, to Joe E. Brown, actor, when they met last week in the Warner office in New York. "The fourth largest industry is constantly being torn down for no good reason," he added. "A great many syndicated articles are prejudiced for various reasons, but the public fortunately pays little attention to newspaper criticism."

Mr. Fay, who at one time toured the country as a violin soloist on the Keith circuit, is today a leading exhibitor—a partner of M. E. Comerford and Frank C. Walker—operating theatres in Providence, Rochester, West Philadelphia and other cities.

Entertainment Comes First

Speaking as an exhibitor telling a star what he—and presumedly the public—would like to have in pictures, Mr. Fay stressed the need for entertainment and amusement. "People never come to a theatre to be educated," he said. "They want clean, wholesome entertainment. After all, that is the only kind that lasts. The other things are passing fads—gags and so forth."

Mr. Brown agreed with this idea and went on to say that he thought Hollywood was trying harder to accomplish its work well than any other industry. "We work harder and we are criticized a great deal," he said, "but when it comes to criticism by an exhibitor—well, that's worth more to me, by far, than all the criticisms of critics in print. You are the only ones who really know the public's reaction. You have to; you study it night after night. Take comedies, f'rinstance. They're hardly ever funny in a cold projection-room showing. But your criticism is constructive. You get the public's point of view and you won't buy something you can't sell."

On Newspaper Critiques

That was Mr. Fay's cue to exclaim: "Well, I look at about 300 pictures a year. And let me tell you that the average newspaper critic is terrible. He very seldom gives his own personal reaction in writing his criticism after he has seen a picture. Why, I've stood in a theatre and seen critics laughing their fool heads off . . .. but, boy, when you saw the reviews the next day! I really don't know what all the shooting's for. There are really very few pictures that haven't got something worth while. Pictures with the human touch are the ones that reach home. I really believe that a man's character carries out from the screen just as it does across the footlights."

Mr. Brown found it quite easy to agree with Mr. Fay's comment on the "human touch picture" and added: "We must make pictures for the masses—not classes. Oshkosh is on the map, too. Broadway gags are never appreciated in the sticks and that isn't anything against them—the small-towners, I mean. No, when it comes to producing good pictures you've got to give them something that strikes home and that lasts."

As an afterthought, Mr. Brown said he believed that during the past six years the 10 best pictures for each year were far from being the best in box office records. "I don't think that more than three pictures in any one year, taken from the lists of the best 10, were among the best 10 in box office," he said.

Which may or may not have caused Mr. Fay to look at his watch, exclaim that he had to catch a train, pump Joe's hand and then bolt from the office.

RCA Cleared in Infringement Case

The United States Supreme Court this week absolved the Radio Corporation of America of the charge of infringement of valuable radio patents on devices which enable radio receiving sets to operate on ordinary alternating current. The patents were held by the Dubilier Condenser Corporation, which held that RCA was infringing them. The federal court at Philadelphia dismissed the charges and held the patents invalid. The Supreme Court, by denying the Dubilier Corporation a review of the case, automatically affirmed the decision of the federal court.

Except in the specific instance of the suit, there is no wide significance to the action of the Supreme Court, RCA continuing to manufacture those devices it has under patent without interference. The litigation has been carried on over a period of some three years, a federal court in Delaware originally holding that the patents were valid and being infringed by RCA. The Philadelphia court reversed the decision.

Percival D. Lowell and Francis W. Dunmore are the inventors who made the discoveries they sought to patent while employed by the Bureau of Standards. The Dubilier Corporation had been given exclusive licenses under the patents and the test of their validity was brought about when the company instituted suit. The government has a case currently pending before the Supreme Court seeking to be declared the owner of the patents because they were developed on government time, indicating the value the government places on the patents.

Anti-Trust Suit Against Warner Set for December 1

The action of the Department of Justice against Warner Brothers, charging violation of the Clayton anti-trust law in the acquisition of a controlling interest in First National, has been set for trial December 1, in the federal district court for the southern district of New York.

It is anticipated, however, by both the office of the attorney general and counsel for Warner Brothers, that a further postponement of the trial will be approved.

Amusements Show Improved Receipts

by FRANCIS L. BURT

Washington Correspondent

Marked improvement in the amusement industries in August is reflected in September collections of the admissions tax, but a tremendous betterment of business must come about before this levy returns the revenue of $3,500,000 a month originally anticipated, it is disclosed by figures just compiled by the Treasury Department.

Receipts of the internal revenue bureau last month, it was stated, included $1,641,-143.24 from admissions, against $1,322,695 in August, an increase of nearly $320,000. The September collections, however, were less than half of what is needed monthly if the return from this source during the current fiscal year is to be up to the original estimate of $42,000,000.

Compared with September, 1931, when $134,839 was obtained from the admission tax, which at that time applied only to admissions in excess of $3, the collections last month showed an increase of $1,506,303. From July 1 to September 30, collections—covering admissions between June 21 and August 31—totaled $3,307,530 against $537,-128 last year, an increase of $2,770,401.

Although the revenues from the miscellaneous provisions of the 1932 revenue act are increasing steadily, they are, as a whole, materially under estimates made last spring, and many of the levies are returning so small a revenue that the Treasury Department has undertaken an exhaustive study of the tax situation with a view to recommending changes in the law when Congress convenes in December. These changes will include the repeal of certain taxes which cost too much to collect.

The failure of the tax law to provide adequate revenues is reviving the demand for a general manufacturers' excise tax, to which a number of industries subject to the present taxes have given their approval.

This, however, it is anticipated, will NOT mean a lightening of the tax on admissions, which is one of the eight new taxes bringing in more than $1,000,000 a month out of the more than 25 new levies imposed by the law.

While it is believed the Treasury will not make any new recommendations with respect to the admission tax unless the situation becomes more serious than it now is, any suggestions that might be offered will be toward a further lowering of the present 40-cent exemption rather than a raising of it.

Franklin, Depinet Elected As Directors of RKO Radio

Harold B. Franklin, president of RKO Theatres, and Ned E. Depinet, vice-president in charge of distribution of RKO Radio Pictures, have been elected to the board of directors of RKO Radio Pictures and RKO Pathe, it was announced by Merlin H. Aylesworth, president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation. The elections took place at the meeting of the directors of the companies on October 21.

KENT TALKS WITH ALLIED-MPTOA; MASS MEETING PLANS PUSHED

Fox President, Who Took Lead in 5-5-5 Contract Movement, Joins in Informal Conferences With a Joint Committee

Sidney R. Kent late last week established the first contact between a distributor and a joint Allied-MPTOA committee regarding problems of exhibition. Informal conferences held in New York at which Mr. Kent, president of Fox Films, discussed the situation with exhibitor leaders, and the formation of definite plans for holding protestation mass meetings of theatre owners at Chicago, November 28, and at New York on December 1, were the highlights of this week's developments in the current campaign to obtain correction of socalled "ills" of theatre operation, being conducted jointly by Allied States Association, headed by W. A. Steffes, and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, M. A. Lightman, president.

Mr. Kent, who, while sales manager of Paramount, took the lead three years ago in launching the 5-5-5 contract, which never was adopted, personally invited Mr. Lightman and Ed Levy, representing MPTOA, and H. M. Richey and Sidney Samuelson, of Allied, to an informal round-table discussion of "some pressing industry problems."

Plans in Work for Mass Meetings

The little group met last Friday and continued in session Saturday morning. It was pointed out later that Mr. Kent acted individually and in no way represented any distributor other than Fox. Neither Mr. Kent nor exhibitors would discuss the exact nature of their discussions, but it was indicated that consideration had been given to the subject of a new uniform contract. "We merely discussed general industry problems," Mr. Kent said, "with a view to determining what definitely is at fault and what can be done in the way of correction." He said that a second meeting in a few weeks appeared likely.

On October 15, it was pointed out in Motion Picture Herald that "the reaction of the larger producer-distributors to the standard form which will be drafted jointly by Allied and MPTOA will determine the future action of these national organizations regarding their proposed concerted drive for congressional legislation for the industry." Mr. Kent's recent action on behalf of Fox was the first evidence of distributor interest in the situation. In the meantime, it was indicated this week that future contract discussions with all distributors and subsequent adoption of the new agreement would precede the ironing out of other exhibitor problems which are included in the joint Allied-MPTOA campaign. These embrace zoning, protection, block booking, cancellation privileges, possibly some form of arbitration, elimination of exclusives and the creation of an industry conciliation board, as advocated recently by Abram F. Myers, general counsel of Allied. A joint committee, including Mr. Lightman and George P. Aarons, of the MPTOA, and Mr. Myers and Herman Blum, for Allied, is at work on a new draft, which, it is expected, will include many of the problems already mentioned, principally elimination and cancellation clauses and possibly an arbitration system. In the meantime the attitude of distributors is one of watchful-waiting, pending submission to them of the exhibitors' proposed contract agreement.

Invitations in the form of "pep" messages to attend the mass meetings at Chicago and New York were being extended exhibitor members this week by the various state associations affiliated either with Allied or MPTOA. Mr. Lightman and Mr. Steffes jointly will preside at both sessions and plans were going forward to bring out a record number of theatre owners to act on the program adopted by their leaders in September. The New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, an important exhibitor body not affiliated with either of the two national organizations, and headed by Charles L. O'Reilly, indicated that it will attend the New York mass meeting, which probably will be held at the Hotel Astor. Allied's New Jersey unit will hold a preliminary meeting in New York, at the Hotel Lincoln, November 1, to discuss what the "defense plans" will be, and also to confer on the machinery for accomplishing the joint program.

Edward G. Levy, New Haven; George P. Aarons, Philadelphia; Julius Charnow and Sidney Samuelson, of New Jersey, were appointed to a committee this week to meet on Thursday to work out details for the New York mass meeting December 1. "Nothing will be permitted to interfere with the holding of this meeting," said Mr. Samuelson, who is president of Allied in New Jersey.

"I have consulted with all members of the committee," said Mr. Samuelson, "and it is absolutely certain that the New York mass meeting will go down in history as the greatest meeting of independent exhibitors ever held in the eastern part of the United States. The members of the committee have assured me that attendance from their respective territories will be record-breaking, and despite rumors to the contrary, the meeting will absolutely and positively be held, for the purpose of acquainting the independent exhibitors of the east with the Chicago program and to achieve the aims and objects of the joint platform. Interest in the meeting is at fever heat."

Lightman Denies He'd Resign

Mr. Lightman has returned to his headquarters in Memphis following conferences with Mr. Kent in New York and also with Mr. Samuelson regarding the mass meetings. Mr. Lightman said that he is not contemplating resigning as president of the MPTOA, at least until current problems of exhibitors are straightened out by distributors. He indicated that inter-industry efforts to correct the problems were under way. Mr. Samuelson and Mr. Lightman issued a joint statement, which said: "Both exhibitor organizations have many things to discuss as a result of our Chicago conferences, but our position may be determined by any constructive plan offered by distributors, if that plan would offer immediate relief and would restore confidence and establish harmony and satisfactory working conditions. By the same token, however, we cannot allow anything to retard our progress in the development of the Chicago meeting plan until we get actual results."

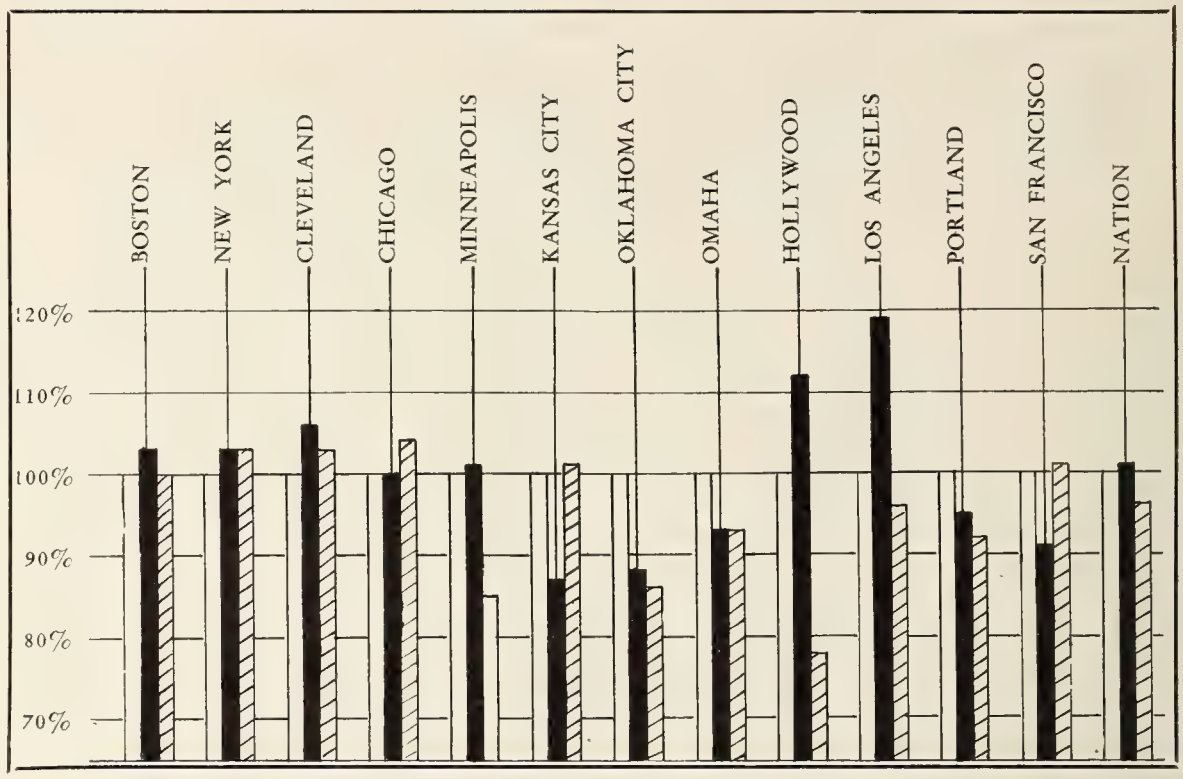
Lightman and Steffes Will Preside Jointly at Sessions in Chicago on November 28 and in New York on December 1

Members of Allied States have been sent questionnaires requesting information on the new selling policies of various distributors. Among other things, the national organization is asking exhibitors to indicate if they have signed contracts for premiums. The questions are: "Are you asking increases over last year?" "Are you accepting less than last year?" "Asking guarantees and percentages?" "Selling exclusive runs?" The following distributors are listed: United Artists, Universal, Columbia, MGM, Paramount, Warner-First National, Fox, RKO Radio, World Wide.

Action was taken this week against block booking and exclusives at the regular meeting of Allied of New Jersey. The unit is planning to fight exclusives should distributors sell their pictures on this plan in the New Jersey territory.

Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, Inc., an independent state unit, voted to affiliate with the MPTOA. It has a membership of about 350 theatres, with offices in Boston, and James J. McGuinness is executive secretary. In announcing the affiliation, Mr. McGuinness said his organization is against political regulation of the industry, but it wanted to work for a fair standard contract, voluntary modification of block booking, return of arbitration, and united opposition to unfair and discriminatory taxation.

Await National Action



At Kansas City Jay Means, president of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, said he would favor joining an amalgamated national organization. A proposal to affiliate with Allied is held in abeyance pending outcome of the Allied-MPTOA conferences. The organization cooperates with the MPTA of Kansas and Missouri. Local independents object to joining the MPTOA because it lists producer-owned circuits in its membership.

Lester F. Martin, secretary-treasurer of the Allied Theatre Owners of Iowa and Nebraska, said at Nevada, Iowa, after attending ten regional meetings of exhibitors, that better product and concessions permitting exhibitors to eliminate or cancel unsuitable pictures were the only solution of conditions in those two states. He protested against exclusive runs.

Allied theatre owners of Detroit have decided to maintain their ban on double featuring, with two concessions, one permitting double bills on Sundays and the other limiting the practice on one change a week to three days.

PUBLIX DECENTRALIZING CIRCUIT, SHIFTING AUTHORITY TO THE FIELD

Changes Include Outright Sales, Pooling, Delegating Operation To Local Circuits, Giving Divisional Heads More Authority

The chart, based on MOTION PICTURE HERALD's listing of box office grosses, compares the relative changes in receipts during recent weeks this year and last year with the preceding weeks in 1932 and 1931. The 100 per cent white bars represent the business done in each city during three weeks from September 4 to September 24, 1932, and the black bars show the box office receipts for the succeeding three weeks, September 25 to October 15, 1932. Using the 100 per cent white verticals to represent the grosses for three weeks to September 26, 1931, the cross-hatched bars show the business done in each city for the succeeding three weeks to October 17, 1931. The bars under the heading "Nation" represent the total figure for all twelve cities combined.

The circuit structure of Paramount Publix Corporation, largest theatre operator in the country, is currently undergoing changes of a radical nature and of importance to the industry at large. Decentralization of operation and executive administration appear to be the principal factors in the movement and the direct results expected are increased efficiency, more favorable economic reactions and an added inpetus to the development of independent theatre activities. The means adopted by Publix in decentralizing certain of its vast theatre properties in several important locations embrace outright sales, pooling of theatre interests with other operators and turning over of operation of certain houses to local circuits. Also, in order to "strengthen and fortify local management and to build up the company's most strategic spots," Publix this week assigned certain theatre executives and division managers at the home office to the field in order to affect localized operation.

The company announced that "a new policy of localized responsibility and concentrated showmanship will be put into effect throughout the circuit and will mean not only an increase in executive authority but also in the responsibility of theatre managers." Local autonomy subject to New York supervision will exist in such matters as theatre policy, price changes, all film booking, labor negotiations and the like. Budget control, matters of general company policy will continue to be handled in New York.

With the changes effective this week, 50 per cent of the Publix circuit is now on basis of localized operation, according to Sam Dembow, Jr., home office executive.

Executive changes in line with the shifting of authority to divisional supervisors in the field and which will transfer numerous home office executives, were announced on Wednesday as follows: John Balaban will supervise Balaban and Katz Theatres, Chicago; Great States Theatres of Illinois and all Canadian operation, with headquarters in Chicago. David Chatkin and Milton Feld will remain at the home office as advisory assistants to Sam Dembow, Jr., in company administration. Mr. Chatkin, in addition, will concentrate on partnership deals and the New Jersey territory. Mr. Feld will continue to handle New York and will act as New York contact on de luxe operation and in all matters pertaining to stage shows and talent.

Harry Katz will operate the Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky division from New York. Martin J. Mullin is transferred from northwest divisional director to head of New England theatres, with headquarters in Boston. Robert J. O'Donnell will be in charge of Texas theatres not included in the Paschall division, with offices at Dallas, with W. K. Jenkins as assistant. The Finkelstein and Rubin division will be operated by John J. Friebl, headquarters in Minneapolis, and L. J. Ludwig, his assistant. The Comerford division in Pennsylvania will continue under supervision of George Walsh, operating out of Scanton. G. Ralph Branton has been transferred from New England to the Iowa and Nebraska territory, with headquarters in Omaha.

Herman Wobber, general sales manager of the western division of Paramount Publix, resigned Monday to join Fox West Coast Theatres in an executive capacity.

While the announcement of realignment of Publix division managers said that R. J. O'Donnell and William K. Jenkins would be in charge of a group of Texas theatres, it has been reported that they have formed an independent partnership to take over 25 Publix theatres in Texas and one in New Mexico with Mr. O'Donnell assuming presidency of the new corporation and Mr. Jenkins taking on executive vice-presidential duties. Although final details of the acquisition have yet to be completed, pending financing arrangements, it is said that the new partnership would assume control, on an option which they hold, effective within 60 days. Theatres involved are at Fort Worth, Dallas, Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Galveston and El Paso, all in Texas, and at Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Another deal is already in operation. W. E. Paschall is now in control of the former Dent circuit of Publix houses, including practically all properties in the Southwest which are not embraced in the O'Donnell-Jenkins arrangement.

Negotiations to turn over operations of 19 Publix theatres in New Jersey to Walter Reade, former operator of the group, are understood to be near consummation. Mr. Reade will operate his former properties in partnership with Publix. Mr. Dembow said the deal was still indefinite.

Publix disposed of its holdings in Florida some months ago to E. J. Sparks, who originally sold them to the corporation, and also theatres in all other states of the southern Atlantic seaboard to the Kincey-Wilby interests. Persistent rumors in New Orleans and New York say that E. V. Richards may take back the entire circuit of Publix-Saenger theatres in Louisiana, and if this deal were to materialize, Paramount Publix would be out of direct southern operation entirely, in both eastern and western divisions.

Four Publix theatres in Minnesota have been turned over to Eddie R. Ruben, former Publix division manager in the Northwest. Mr. Ruben acquired on a long term lease the Publix properties at Brainerd, Waseca, Faribault and Willmar.

Evidence of new interest in the pooling trend was indicated by a deal between Publix and Fox West Coast Theatres, operated by the Skouras Brothers for Fox, whereby West Coast will operate Publix houses at Alburquerque, New Mexico and at Casa Grande, Mesa, Phoenix, Somerton, Tucson, Winslow and Yuma, in Arizona. Charles Skouras will have charge of the division, which will be booked by Fox West Coast.

INTERNATIONAL FILM LEAGUE IS ORGANIZED

Announced as Non-Profit Group; Sponsors Expected To Be Primarily Interested in Pushing Foreign Pictures

The International Cinema League announced its formation last week in New York. Although it was said that the League was created as a non-profit making group for the advancement of motion pictures as an international art, it appears that the sponsors primarily intend to further the interests of foreign films in America. The association will be composed of several independent and self-sustaining committees, including a committee on industry cooperation, committee for public relations, committee for the use of foreign language films in education, and an art and repertory committee. Membership of the committee has not yet been fully determined, according to Edward B. Ginsberg, director of the League, which has headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

Personnel and Companies

Included among the trustees of the League are Alvin Johnson, Harry Elmer Barnes, Alexander Bakshy, Karl K. Kitchen, Marie B. Macdonald, Gilbert Seldes and Harry P. Sampers. Distributors and exhibitors of foreign films will be represented by Leo Brecher, David Brill and Arthur Ziehm in the committee on industry cooperation. Among the organizations already participating are the Protex Trading Corporation, Capital Foreign Attractions, Inc., World Trade Exchange, Inc., Little Carnegie Playhouse (New York), and the Hindenburg theatre (New York).

Although the recent growth of foreign films in America has been marked, said Mr. Ginsburg, their popularity in large Eastern cities has outstripped their progress in the national field. It was said that a common experience of out-of-town theatres has been to book one or two European films as an experiment, find that they draw rather well at the box office and then experience difficulty in obtaining information concerning other pictures of that type.

Catalogs of Foreign Films

The industry cooperation committee of the League is designed to meet this situation through the compilation and issuance of complete catalogs of foreign films that are available. An information service also will be maintained at the League's headquarters.

The qualitative development of the international cinema as a medium of culture will be encouraged by the League. This will be done through aiding and recognizing significant creative forces already at work, rather than through censorship. Important works of such directors as G. W. Pabst, Rene Clair, Serge Eisenstein, Karl Froelich, Julien Duvivier, Erich Pommer and others, as well as that of leading actors, will be selected periodically for recommendation. These will be discussed through the League—possibly in a magazine to be issued under the direction of the arts and repertory committee—by the artists themselves. An award of annual prizes also is planned.

Negotiations are already favorably under way for the official employment of approved foreign language motion pictures in education, it was said.

As an important means of fostering interest and stimulating progress in the pictures, the formation of a library of important films of the past and periodic repertory showings under the supervision of an advisory council of critics are a part of the League's program.

To Elect Academy Officers on Nov. 1

Officers and branch chairmen of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast will be selected on November 1, following the annual election of board members and executive committees. Friday, November 18, has been set as the date for the annual awards banquet, at which new officers will be installed. Candidates for awards were recently announced and balloting is in progress by the 850 members.

Officers are elected by the board of directors, consisting of 15 members, with one representative from each of the five branches elected annually for a three-year term. New board members for the coming year are: actors, Sam Hardy; directors, John Cromwell; producers, B. P. Schulberg; technicians, J. Theodore Reed; writers, Oliver H. P. Garrett.

Motion picture film editors, who are members of the technicians' branch, plan to organize an editors' section within the Academy. I. James Wilkinson, film editor representative on the technicians' executive committee, has organized a meeting for a discussion of the proposed organization.

Consolidated Net $198,663 For Three Months to Sept. 30

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., reports a net profit of $198,663, equivalent to 49 cents per share on the 400,000 shares of $2 preferred stock, for the quarter ended September 30, 1932. This is after depreciation, federal taxes and other charges. Last year the net for the same period was $328,228, or 24 cents per share on 524,978 shares of no-par common stock, after preferred dividend requirements.

For the nine months ended September 30, 1932, consolidated net profit was $685,273 after depreciation, federal taxes and other charges, equivalent to $1.71 a share on the preferred stock. This compares with $1,152,068 for the first nine months of 1931, equal to $1.05 a share on 524,978 no-par common shares after preferred dividend requirements.

New Film Guild Formed To Show Motion Pictures

The Film Guild of America, a new organization set up on a national basis with headquarters in New York, aims to provide for the "untouched 10 per cent" of potential theatre-goers occasional programs to be given in club houses, auditoriums and the like and in theatres where showings can be arranged on a cooperative basis with exhibitors. The plan calls for a split to civic, church and educational groups who cooperate.

A national organization committee is headed by F. M. Delano, former secretary of the New York Electrical Society and field representative of the committee on research exhibits of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Junior membership branches also are contemplated.

Mr. Delano said the organization is "non-profit-making" and added: "We hope to avail ourselves of the various independent sound projection rental services now in existence in the key cities" for communities where these facilities are not already available.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

The continued success of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers is practically assured under the able guidance of Hal Horne, of United Artists. Mr. Horne, who is noted along the Rialto for his witticism, has instilled a pleasant bit of merriment into the weekly luncheon forums of the AMPA, at Sardi's. Last week Mr. Horne showed to what extremes he will travel to keep the membership happy. Bowing to the will of a few strong Irishmen, President Horne ordered the management to serve to every one a heaping portion of corned beef and cabbage—take it or leave it. It was a very rare dish for many at the gathering and several found it desirable, if not necessary, to sprinkle the plate with ketchup. One chap tried hard to make his waiter understand and the situation became tense until Mr. Horne stepped in. Dropping the gavel, Hal rushed away from his presidential throne, donned a waiter's jacket, to the embarrassment of a pair of heliotrope suspenders, dashed to the kitchen where he obtained the ketchup sauce and then ran back to the table just in the nick o' time.

No member is permitted to work as a second assistant, at $75 weekly, unless there is a first assistant of the same union employed on the job.

After seeing our picture in last week's Motion Picture Herald pictorial section, Al Zimbalist wrote in to ask how much we would charge to haunt a house. Mr. Zimbalist is a publicity expert and chief punster for the Warner theatres in Newark.

WE were glad to hear that Freddie Schader's esthetic sense is beginning to assert itself at last. Mr. Schader was for many years a Broadway reporter. He left New York two years ago to exploit the Fox theatre at Detroit.

Mr. Schader went out the other day and brought back a unique and interesting exhibit, the work of M. Moise Potvin. As a result, the lobby of the Fox looked more like an art gallery. Whole miniature homes with figures of humans, books, telephone, rugs, dogs and paintings on the wall—all carved from wood and impressively realistic—comprised the exhibit. There were more than a score of complete works on display, representing more than 20 years of handiwork by M. Potvin, who was on hand to explain in detail the manner in which he executed his carvings. There was no charge to any one.

In some of the exhibits the figures essay a series of lifelike movements which were actuated by hidden machinery driven by miniature motors. One in particular, The Village Blacksmith, a la Longfellow, depicted the interior of a smithy's shop, with two horses, one being shod and occasionally turning its head to watch the smithy at work. There are more than 35 distinctive movements in this scene. The horses wag their tails, the smithy pumps the forge and stirs the fire, another is at work on the anvil and a third saws at a work-bench. A country boy is sharpening his knife at the grindstone and a rural visitor is waiting with his white plow horse for a shoeing as he sits watching two patriarchs who are arguing over checkers.

The collection includes the usual Ten Nights in a Barroom scene and also Home, Sweet Home, and a A Face on the Barroom Floor. The Old Violin Maker is on hand standing at the side of A Little Bit of Ireland.

It will be known as 'Cynara.'"

The motion picture industry may have indirect representation in the presidential cabinet, if and when the country's voters decide to send Franklin Delano Roosevelt to the White House to succeed Herbert Hoover. Already the more confident Democrats about Capitol Hill are beginning to speculate avidly upon the makeup of Governor Roosevelt's cabinet. Jesse Jones, Texas capitalist, is mentioned by them as a possibility for Secretary of the Interior. Mr. Jones spent much of his fortune erecting motion picture theatres in his native state. Publix bought up many of these structures.

We are unable to visualize at the moment how Mr. Jones could benefit the picture business in his position of boss of American Indians and in charge of reservations, national parks, forestry, navigable streams and irrigation dams. He might, however, lend a hand in persuading Melvin Traylor, Chicago banker who is suggested for the treasury post, to go easy on taxation.

An army of statisticians and accountants has finally balanced the ledger on the last Olympic event in Los Angeles. The good news heard by the sponsors was a cold $1,000,000 profit, if that much coin can be termed cold. The affair lasted only a few days and no doubt the tremendous net made some of Hollywood's producers wonder. The show was the most costly ever staged and made more money than any other. On one occasion, 105,000 people, many from the studios, paid $3 a squat to see a parade of athletes and to hear a few dignitaries with gold badges mumble words of glory about sports and javelin throwing to the youth of the land.

A few bugs of the countryside put to work some of the best minds of the illuminating laboratories at Nela Park in Cleveland. More and better bugs are the result. Weakness of the old style lamps of 1,000, 1,500 and 2,000 watts, used in open type flood lights, was discovered when careless night bugs would strike the bulb head on, stick, roast and burst, causing moisture cracks in the lamps. The resultant loss ranged from $4 to $5 per light, according to size. Laboratory experts took the matter in hand and developed a new lamp, white frosted inside and made of heavier glass which will stand moisture without cracking. The prices were revised to $9.25 and $13 per light.

COOPERATION OR FEDERAL CONTROL

To the Editor of the Herald:

My viewpoint herein expressed on the subject of federal control does not come officially as president of the Allied Theatre Owners of Michigan, but rather as an individual, because at the present time there are a lot of things I would like to know about it myself. I always feel that a "wise man will change his mind and a fool never will," and while I may at present be in the dark, with more facts at hand I could construct a better line of thought around the problem.

In the first place let me say this: if all independent theatre owners in America were united into a harmonious organization there would be little or no need of outside control, for that to my mind is just what federal control would be, and I shall always feel that our dirty linen should be washed within the industry and kept from the public gaze. I am sure that even the producers would rest their case with a decision made from representatives of a large percentage of exhibitors, and surely it is possible to do this. One has to but scan the headlines in nearly every trade journal and he will see remarks from both the producers and theatre owners to the effect that there is a lack of cooperation or confidence, or something.

Having spent the major portion of my time in this industry as a branch manager or film salesman, I cannot help but feel that if there could possibly be more confidence placed in the various representatives of the producer, these representatives who are the salesmen or direct contact men with the exhibitor, we could in a very short time iron out our existing difficulties. Back of all this turmoil I think is a panicky situation brought about by depression, and if the view of the exhibitor could actually be brought back to the producer without fear of bringing forth a dismissal from the company, what a wonderful check on the entire country would be the result, for overnight any important issue could be analyzed and existing evils be rectified. The trouble on that side of the fence is that they employ these men to bargain for their wares, and still don't trust them, and rarely will even seriously take their advice. This lack of cooperation breaks down the morale of the producer. On the other hand a large majority of exhibitors distrust the sincerity of their leaders and this in consequence damages the morale of its organization. But I dare say that we as exhibitors are closer to harmony than the other group.

Unquestionably, there must be certain laws to govern the industry, but some of the issues at hand are very hard to measure by the yard stick and a rule that could be applied to one could injure another and so on down the line. Some are satisfied with certain regulations and others can really show where it would be a hardship to change. In such cases you would simply have to abide by a majority and drastically wipe out the minority.

This we do not wish to do, for such things usually grow into monopolies and this brings us back to where we are now. Better and stronger organization always brings forth more capable leaders and better understanding, and it is within providence to have a group of men chosen from both sides of this great industry that can work out a solution to the problem.

My chief worry at the present time is to get the proper selection of pictures for my patrons, and some of the pictures that have been coming through show clearly that representatives of producers either dare not or will not relay the comment to their executives. I join the countless number of exhibitors in saying that we are driving away patrons every day.

I read with much interest in your columns that Congress is disappointed with the results obtained from the tax, and one has but to look around at other tax levies, etc., to see the possible reason. No doubt Congress had a tabulation on all of the theatres that were prospects to come under the act, and did not reckon with the number that would drop below the ruling. Since the check levy thousands of business houses are drawing one check to pay all their bills, and by the same token are walking around to pay their bills and avoid the extra cent postage. These things are bound to happen, and are not to be wondered at.

In my opinion, had not this so-called depression come as it did, by this time or maybe a little later we would have nearly all been out of business, for the numerous racketeering ideas of adding cost to the exhibitor since the advent of sound would surely have forced us out. We have learned a lot, we have shown that we could get together and work out of difficulty through this crisis, and right now if we would place our best foot forward and become associated into a better bond of friendship and understanding, we could make for a better and brighter future.

I have made many dear friends among producers, distributors and exhibitors, and would hate to think that I could not trust my destiny to them in joint conference.

Ray Branch, Secretary-Treasurer,
Hastings Strand Theatre, Inc.,
Hastings, Mich.

RUBBER STAMPS

To the Editor of the Herald:

Hollywood's rubber stamps are now not only imitating each other's stories, but closely duplicating each other's names for pictures.

My suggestion is this, that next year only one picture be made and that it be given a single title, and that it be released forty-eight times during the year by each of the major releasing companies.

The advantages of this are obvious. The super-men would not have to waste hours trying to duplicate names, they would not have to keep spies in each other's studios to duplicate sets, situations, and plots. A single laboratory could run off the entire product of the industry from a single negative.

From the standpoint of the Motion Picture Producers Association, that is riding so plainly to a heavy fall, the new setup would be ideal. Standard contracts would not be necessary (and I note that they are very worried that they will not be able to get the standard contract across); they would be able with the single negative to handle the exhibitor, and the whole industry could thus end in a glorious muddle of imbecility, unparalleled in history.—Herman J. Brown, Inland Amusement Company, Nampa, Idaho.

P. S.—After profound meditation I have the following idea to offer to still further telescope production. The suggestion is this: Zasu Pitts now appears in all pictures of all producers—this in line with the mighty idea of trading players—a great idea as it makes the whole industry use a single stock company, and prevents the lack of sufficient brains to break in new and utilize old talent from being too easily perceived by the public. In line with this idea, why not have Zasu Pitts play all the parts in the single production. Great, ain't it? Zasu could be easily made up for male parts and could thus by doubling and double exposure be at once heroine, hero, villain, and also (think of it!) a mob. She might hold branches in her hand and play a tree and save scenery. It may be possible to also work her as a pack of bloodhounds by trick photography and makeup. She could thus pursue herself off a cliff.—Herman J. Brown.

HEAVING BRICKS

To the Editor of the Herald:

I have read with considerable interest your recent article which defended the picture personalities who are taking part in the political campaign. I am heartily in accord with this defense and have no fear that the industry has been in politics since the first "somebody" started legislative regulation and I have found it quite convenient on certain occasions to sit down and talk personally with a legislator whom I knew. Haven't you?

With other members of the picture industry I visited Governor Roosevelt's train during its stay in Omaha. We had the pleasure of meeting some prominent representatives of the nation and some in other walks of life. Among them was C. C. Pettijohn. Being a lifelong Democrat, he certainly could not be criticized from a political angle, nor do I believe he could be mentally or morally degraded by being a party on a private train carrying the nominated presidential candidate of the United States, his wife, his children and press representatives of our greatest newspapers.

Some of the guys in the industry should be hod carriers. They are always heavin' bricks.—C. E. Williams, President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Nebraska and Western Iowa.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Trouble in Paradise

(Paramount)

Drama and Comedy

Calling this picture a melodramatic comedy is about the best way we know of describing a story that is smartly sophisticated, gayly glamorous, yet so simply constructed that entertainment elements that average audiences appreciate are readily evident.

It has drama, romance, comedy, suspense, surprise—all expertly welded by Lubitsch's touches. If you don't get behind it with a bang-up campaign you won't be playing fair with your patrons.

The easy rhythm that characterizes the entire production has been made possible by a happy selection of players and by direction that just about tops anything that Ernst Lubitsch ever has done before. The cast is glove fitting with Miriam Hopkins and Kay Francis hitting on all eight cylinders, and Herbert Marshall, who played opposite Marlene Dietrich in "Blonde Venus," making a hit that should endear him with patrons who understand clever acting.

The story is simple. It's about a pair of clever crooks who pull a big job in Venice and then move on to Paris. There Marshall becomes private secretary to Kay Francis, owner of a big perfume business and fabulously wealthy. He takes the job only in order to get the money, but no one can blame him for falling in love with the glamorous Kay. His pal, Miriam, suspects that she is going to be chiseled out of her share of the loot as well as her man, so she upsets the romantic applecart and then the pair ooze off to Berlin. Kay Francis is contented with the memory that her affair with Marshall was worth the 100,000 francs he stole.

But it's the Lubitsch finesse that really makes the picture so good. For instance, your patrons should get a great smash out of the first novelty—a garbage wagon gondola on the Grand Canal of Venice operated by a grand opera-singing gondolier. Then by the way the tense situations are broken up by surprising dialogue and little bits of unlooked for action. All this makes a kind of entertainment, with an element of suspense, that should hold the undivided interest of the patrons.

"Trouble In Paradise" is the kind of picture on which you can put your personal endorsement as one of the most enjoyable of the current season.

Don't be afraid to spend a little extra money in exploiting "Trouble In Paradise," and while you make your advertising appeal dignified, don't allow it to create the impression that the picture is too sophisticated for average consumption. While it is smart and clever all the way through, it should be appealing to both the intelligentsia and the rank and file of fans.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Rackety Rax

(Fox)

Farce Comedy

This piece of farce comedy has everything necessary to make people laugh. Against the elaborately modernistic background of the "McGloin Enterprises," it satirizes the commercial aspect of all sports. Knucks McGloin is the super-racketeer. He has a finger in everything. Fighters, wrestlers, social welfare workers, politics, bootlegging—all have been "organized" to the height of perfection, with an efficiency system that puts the best conducted business to shame. On top of it all there is a high-powered publicity department that takes care of the McGloin propaganda in amazing fashion.

But it's all in fun; all put on, acted and directed with but one idea—to provide the maximum number of laughs, and that it hit its mark is evidenced by the fact that it kept a projection room full of critics in spasms of laughter from start to finish. It's a load of giggles until an unexpected election victory of the reform ticket puts the "McGloin Enterprises" in the nine hole.

Then when McLaglen goes to a football game and sees a crowd of 90,000 in attendance and he asks who "cuts up" the loot, the real fun begins. He buys a run-down college. Making it coeducational, he installs his "mugs" and a bunch of night club cuties as the student body. For his bootball team he lines up a score of the toughest looking gorillas that walk. And what they don't do to the opposing teams, with the aid of brass knuckles, armor plated headguards and what-not, just simply can't be done.

Everything is rosy until Gilotti, a rival racketeer, muscles in. He buys a college too, but, unlike McGloin, he keeps it quiet until the day of the big game. Then the rival teams meet, and while there isn't much football, there is a comedy gang battle as an anti-climax that is a side-splitting farce. The close of the picture is one of those throwbacks to the old silent two-reel days, with McLaglen and Fields being blown up by a bomb that has been attached to Field's car by McLaglen's right hand man.

Because "Rackety Rax" is such a bunch of unadulterated burlesque foolishness, it should find a happy reception with patrons, and whether your theatre is located on Broadway in New York or up a side street in the smallest town in the country, there is no reason why it shouldn't do tremendous business if people are looking for entertainment that will make them laugh.

Its novelty, the speed with which it moves, its striking backgrounds, featuring startling sets, plus the snappy way in which everyone in the cast from McLaglen down handles his part, makes it one of the season's most different pictures. The musical comedy twist that has been woven in with the "cutie-co-eds," who form the nucleus of the cheering section and put on stunts that no college or high school cheer leader ever dreamed of, is one of the picture's highlights.

You don't have to worry about playing this picture only during the football season; it's good for any time in the year. Adults should enjoy it immensely and it has been so cleverly put together—with everything that it tackles being ridiculed—that the youngsters should enjoy it just as much.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Little Orphan Annie

(RKO Radio)

Comedy-Drama

While this picture is primarily children's entertainment, there is still enough in it to capture the imagination of the grownups. The story is the one that has been made so well known by the Harold Gray cartoon strips that are circulated in many newspapers throughout the country. It concerns Little Annie, the troubles she is up against, not the least of them being an orphaned little boy placed in her care, their subsequent trip into the orphan home, an adoption and Annie's adventures as she pays a night call on her protege.

Though at times, particularly at the beginning, the picture is a little too weepy, the personality of Mitzi Green sticks out all over it, and her sage observations and her beyond-her-years wisdom pull it out of the over-tragic vein.

For your juvenile patrons you have the "kid" leads, Mitzi Green and Buster Phelps, to offer as the first medium of enkindling curiosity. This is seconded by the powerful influence of the Howard Gray cartoon strip, backed by the fact that it is a child's story, told with drama, pathos and human interest, laid out in a clear, concise way, understandable to juvenile minds.

Adults should find in "Little Orphan Annie" entertainment that will stir their emotions. They, particularly, should get a kick out of May Robson, playing the grim-visaged, scathing-tongued old dowager, and Mrs. Stewart, who adopts little Mickey and comes to love the tot.

There are several ways in which the picture may be exploited into better than average box office business, despite its lack of outstanding cast names. First, naturally, come tieups with the "Orphan Annie" newspaper strips. The editors should be easily persuaded to work out all sorts of tieups ballyhooing the picture.

There is much that can be done around Mitzi Green. She continues her imitations—this time with the four Marx Brothers, in "Horsefeathers," as her subject—which suggests that you might start contests for your own juveniles to imitate Mitzi Green imitating the stars, or let the youngsters pick the favorites they want to mimic.

If you try to sell this picture solely to child audiences, you will get only the returns that accrue to children's admissions, but if you go after the adults with a human interest appeal in both the story and the cast, you may get results that will surprise you.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Six Hours to Live

(Fox)

Drama

In a measure fantastic in conception, and rather unsual in treatment and theme, this offers the exhibitor excellent exploitation possibilities, and at the same time is executed with sufficient dramatic effectiveness to assure an entertaining feature for the audience.

There is much to work with in the title, indicating as it does the theme of the picture, the action and reaction of a man, strangled to death, who is restored to life, but knowing that that restoration must be only for a period of six hours, after which he inevitably will return to his state of death. There is no reason why the exhibitor, in capitalizing this focal point, should not spread a bit, dramatizing the idea in his selling with a view to arousing the curiosity of his prospective patrons.

Names are not lacking, with Warner Baxter in the lead, Miriam Jordon, a screen newcomer, performing ably and attractive in appearance; John Boles, who doubtless has a certain following, despite a more or less protracted absence from the talking screen. George Marion, as the physically warped scientist, gives an able characterization, while Beryl Mercer and Halliwell Hobbes offer familiar names in the support.

The story: Baxter, diplomat from the mythical state of Silvaria, stands in the way of a complete accord at a world commerce conference which he believes would ruin his nation. Numerous agencies as a result are after Baxter's life. Miss Jordon, at whose home he is staying, is in love with him and consequently says no to persistent Boles. On the eve of the final vote, Baxter is strangled to death and the great scientiest, Marion, through a ray he has invented, with much electrical display, restores him to life—for six hours.

Miss Jordon misunderstands his sudden reversal of feeling when he tells her to go to Boles and forget him. Gifted with some sort of divining power, he sees into the future, visions past occurrences at which he was not present. He arrives at the conference exactly in time to cast his vote against the treaty, thus destroying the work of the meeting, and frightens his murderer into a state, we gather, of perpetual dread. Before he dies he destroys the machine, believing it a terrible instrument of mental torture.

The story is a bit far-fetched, perhaps, but the audience will fall into the spirit of the theme and, having done so, will be entertained. The capability with which Baxter handles his role makes for greater plausibility. Strike the note that nothing is impossible in the realm of science, and put before the patrons the thought of what each would do if, after death, he were restored to life—with only six hours to live.

A fair return may well be derived from the picture if it is sold on the basis of the unusual, the strange. Nothing it in should be objectionable for children, but at the same time there is probably little in it to interest them particularly.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by William Dieterle. Story by Gordon Morris and Morton Barteaux. Screen play and dialogue by Bradley King. Cameraman, John Seitz. Sound, Al Von Kirbach. Release date, October 16, 1932. Running time, 80 minutes.

David Golder

(Protex Trading)

Drama

A French screen drama, this production must of necessity face a selling obstacle in this country by reason of the French dialogue, though the use of numerous superimposed subtitles in English makes it possible to follow the story without knowledge of French, yet whereas there are a considerable number of people who understand German, there are comparatively very few whose knowledge of French is at all workable. Consequently, the intimate theatre in the large metropolitan center may best offer this film to fair return.

Again it must be noted that the action of the film, also from the standpoint of the audience in this country, moves slowly, with highly emotional sequences dragged out. The story, in brief, recounts the manner in which a former Polish-Jewish immigrant boy, David Golder, who has risen to a position of industrial and financial power in Paris, is drained of every cent by a hard-bitten wife and her paramour, and by a lively young thing who is his daughter.

In bad straits finally, he suffers an attack of heart trouble and decides to give up his work. The daughter, about to marry a wealthy elderly man, pleads with Golder that he give her sufficient means to marry the young man she loves, and Golder assents. In Russia he concludes an important deal with the Soviet, but on the return by boat falls ill and is assisted by a boy of his own kind. Seeing in the lad the boy he himself was once, he gives him money for a start in life, and dies.

The emphasis on the internal struggle of individuals as recorded in facial expression and the like, is carried to an extreme which in many cases appears unnecessary. Harry Baur, as Golder, offers an excellent and difficult characterization; the others in the cast cannot be rated as highly.

There is a definite possibility that high school students might be drawn to the showing for practice in the study of French.—Aaronson, New York.

Red Haired Alibi

(Capital)

Drama

Though its climax and conclusion hardly carry through in the fashion one is led to expect from earlier sequences and the film as a whole, this independent picture, a Tower production, contains considerable entertainment, is handled rather effectively and should stand up reasonably well in a midweek spot surrounded by a well-rounded program of diversified short subjects.

The only really advantageous selling name in the cast, which on the whole is good, is that of Grant Withers, who recently has appeared in but few pictures, but did at one time have a following which perhaps has not forgotten him. It is in a measure unfortunate that Winters has a rather minor role, but nevertheless it will not be stretching the point too widely to bill him conspicuously. Merna Kennedy, in what amounts to the title role, turns in a good performance as the small town girl who comes to New York, becomes innocently involved with a gang leader and is forced to pose as his wife. Leaving him when he is in danger of arrest for murder, she marries wealthy Withers, without telling him the story. The gangster returns, attempts to extort money and she, meeting him at a night club, shoots him. Accused of murder, she is about to give herself up, when the detective, an unusually human sort, discovers with too great simplicity that the gun which killed the gangster was not the same as that Miss Kennedy had used. Thus the day is saved and the picture ended.

Theodor von Eltz demonstrates ability as the suave gang leader, while Miss Kennedy's work warrants a top spot in selling the picture. Purnell Pratt and Huntley Gordon are familiar names as well. The others are more or less unknown. The title is intriguing, and is borne out in the instances where Miss Kennedy becomes the redhaired alibi for von Eltz.

The fact that the film is an adaptation of a novel by Wilson Collison may mean something. At any rate, it is worth noting in copy.

Hit the angle of the girl who accidentally becomes involved despite her earnest efforts to toe the line, and finally gains happiness only to be in danger of having it snatched from her. A fortunate accident saves her from the consequence of a criminal act for which she unquestionably was justified.

Midweek and good shorts is the best play, with no appeal for children.—Aaronson, New York.

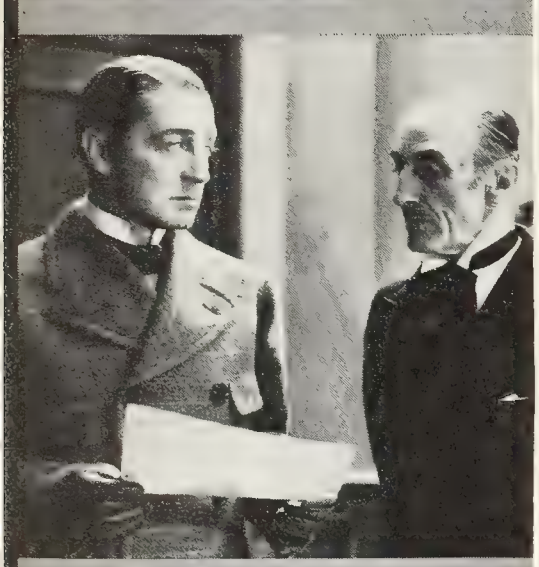
The Pride of the Legion

(Mascot)

Drama

Including a portion of fast action and based on police vs. gangster complications, this picture contrives to be entertaining and is reasonably well done for its kind, chiefly by reason of the capable performances.

For the juvenile appeal Rinty, the offspring of Rin-Tin-Tin, late famed dog star, takes a prominent place in the cast. The animal assumes the place left vacant by the death of his father not long ago, and seems to carry on in the best tradition of the sire.



Specifically, the theme of the film centers about the efforts of a policeman, whose nerve has been shattered by an explosion of which he has been the victim in preventing a holdup, to regain that nerve and his place on the force after resignation. Giving up and leaping into the river, he is saved by Lucien Littlefield, as a cobbler, and the dog, Rinty. Littlefield's daughter, played by Barbara Kent, offers the romantic interest with the policeman, Victor Jory.

Jory, an unknown, whose name will likely enough mean little or nothing, is extremely capable, handling himself with an intelligent restraint which is noteworthy. For the exhibitor who plays this film and others of the same classification, it would be well, perhaps, to accord Jory a bit of extra attention. He will not disappoint and can stand the build-up for probable future performances. The other cast names are good—Miss Kent, Littlefield, Glenn Tryon, Sally Blane and Ralph Ince. J. Farrell MacDonald is his usual capable self, but does not justify too important billing since his role is a minor bit.

Sell this along the action lines, hitting it from the angle of the man who made a desperate and finally successful effort, with the aid of a girl, to come back after losing his nerve and much self-respect. Do not neglect the able successor of Rin-Tin-Tin, whose beauty and intelligence is an asset to the picture and should be especially important in attacking the juvenile citadel of patronage.—AARONSON, New York

Heart Punch

(Mayfair)

Drama

Where there is a goodly number of boxing fans among the patrons, this should have a certain appeal, and the same is true for the small town audience. Of its kind the film is reasonably entertaining.

The names are fair marquee material, with Lloyd Hughes and Marion Shilling sharing the lead and supplying the romance. The best line in selling the picture is the angle of the fighter who returns to the ring to earn sufficient money to save the girl he loves. The story is by no means new in theme or execution, but the second of the two fighting sequences in the film does offer a bit of fast action which looks good from the fight standpoint.

Hughes accidentally has killed an old friend with a punch to the heart. Giving up the ring he finds the sister of the dead fighter, Miss Shilling, and they become engaged. She discovers that he is the cause of her brother's death and breaks the engagement. When the manager of the cafe in which she works pays too close attention, she shoots him and is tried for murder. To pay the expense of the trial Hughes goes back to the ring on a winner-take-all basis and wins in the last round. The reconciliation follows, when Miss Shilling learns what has happened.

There is little opportunity in handling this film to do anything extraordinary. Selling it as straight entertainment, with a punch in the fight sequences, and more or less concentration on the boxing angle, probably will produce the best results.—AARONSON, New York.

Vanity Street

(Columbia)

Comedy Drama

The combination of detective work and chorus girling in two of the principal characters permits of a wide latitude of appeal in placing this production before the community.

Several names merit broadcasting in billing and advertisements. There is Charles Bickford as the young detective who hides his sympathetic nature under a gruff exterior. Helen Chandler is a stage star of scarcely restricted moral fiber, but gullible and evoking something of pity because of the generosity with which she hands out her earnings to a lover who plots to rob her. Mayo Methot is the chorus girl whom Bickford befriends. And Raymond Hatton makes the most of the small role assigned to him.

The title lends itself to several lines of attracting interest though it has no particular significance in the development of the theme. There is the contrast of the third floor back and the gaily lighted way of affluence. Every town has its "Vanity Street."

There is audience appeal in the story of the detective who helps the impressionable young chorus girl to success, only to have her fall in love with him while he brusquely ignores her, until she's accused of murder and he rescues her. There is the star who "high-hats" the producer once too often, kills her lover after he has tried to betray the young girl, then is captured when she returns to his apartment to hunt for the money which he has stolen from her.

The players and the title are the best bets.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

Her Mad Night

(Mayfair)

Drama

In Irene Rich and Conway Tearle this production presents two veteran names to the exhibitor in placing the subject before the community.

It is a sophisticated picture, with the world-wise daughter (Mary Carlisle) jangling a ring of keys to various bachelor apartments, though carefully explaining that she has used none of them.

The theme is primarily one of mother love. Irene Rich and Conway Tearle fall in love abroad a liner, and she finds that his ward is her own daughter. Kenneth Thomson, who has been intimate with the mother, has given his key to the daughter. With all that, he still coolly tells Tearle that his marriage would be a mistake. Thomson has one incriminating letter from Miss Rich which the daughter tries to get at his apartment. Thomson comes in. When he attempts to embrace her she draws a pistol from a desk and in the struggle he is shot. He calls it only a scratch and seats himself upon a davenport. Miss Rich comes in and makes her daughter leave. The police find Thomson is dead and arrest Miss Rich. Tearle defends her, in vain. There is a march past the death cells to the electric chair with a Negro singing "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen." The parade is halted by a reprieve. The daughter has returned from a cruise and has told the story of the struggle.

There are ponderous stretches of dialogue that retard the action, before and during the trial.

The names, and the story woven about a mother's love for the guardian of her own daughter, and her willingness to die to shield them both, present the best media for drawing community attention.—ROVELSTAD, New York.

King Neptune

(United Artists)

Splendid

Another striking example of the most unusually effective results Walt Disney has achieved with the use of color in the Silly Symphonies series of animated cartoons. King Neptune, a rotund monarch of the deep, is amused by various types of fish and mermaids, until a pirate ship's crew captures the golden haired mermaid. The fish rally to the call to arms and proceed to bombard the ship in odd, amusing fashion. Neptune calls forth a storm to rout the pirate vessel and the mermaid is saved. While the youngsters should call this a real treat, it is no less effective for the oldsters. This group of subjects sets a new high mark in the production of animated cartoons and is definitely worth special billing.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Berlin Today

(Vitaphone)

Interesting

E. M. Newman, who produces the Travel Talk series for Vitaphone, here makes a cinematic tour of the city of Berlin, turning the camera toward numerous points of interest which together form a representative picture of the city as a whole. There is a certain definite interest and a wide appeal in the subject, picturing as it does the European counterpart of America's New York or Chicago. The subject has that perennial interest which makes it adaptable to any type of film program.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Sea Spiders

(MGM)

Excellent

Filmed on and about the beautiful Island of Tahiti in the South Seas, this subject is both excellent scenically and interesting dramatically. The producers have contrived to put dramatic punch into a travelogue, with underwater and surface pictures of the famed native pearl divers of southern waters. Seen in close-up are shots of the diver who collapses from a too lengthy submersion and another whose foot is caught in the shell of a huge clam. Both are rescued by their fellows.—Running time, 9 minutes.

TOO BUSY TO WORK

HE HITS AMERICA SQUARE IN THE HEART

A lovable Rogers that will make this country chuckle, cheer and choke back sobs. A work-dodging, freight-hopping, care-chasing knight of the road...who helps everybody but himself...and smoothes the bumps for a couple of young lovers. If heart is box office, this is S.R.O.

New Company Plans to Make Foreign Patents Available

Amerika-Interessen, Inc., organized as the American unit of A. G. Fuer Amerika-Interessen, has opened offices in New York. The company operates in London, Berlin and Paris, and makes available in other countries patents, processes and devices which have proved successful in manufacture in the country of their origin. The purpose is the surmounting of tariff barriers which make prohibitive the export of manufactured products of certain types.

According to Botho Lilienthal, president of the corporation, 100 devices suitable for immediate exploitation in this country have been selected to start the American company. The devices cover a wide range of implement, including electrical devices, air conditioning equipment, temperature indicators, machine tools and appliances and others.

Never during the entire depression did Consolidated lose its faith in the future of our industry. We did all in our power to help it through the lean years. We lowered our prices to bedrock. We've been liberal with credit and terms. And when called upon, we lent our customers huge sums of money at a time when it was difficult to get money elsewhere.

We have lent millions and are willing to lend more millions. Right now we are financing independent productions on a larger scale than ever before, believing it our duty to exert every effort to relieve the present shortage of productions.

Not only by loans are we demonstrating our faith but also by the establishment of Consolidated Park—world's greatest film laboratory with a capacity of over one billion feet of "Certified Prints" per year, and by dedicating it to furnishing a COMPLETE laboratory service to the industry.

Our organization is trained to cooperate. It knows the importance of speed . . . is accustomed to meet the instant demands characteristic of the industry. When overnight service is required, our plants can operate 24 hours a day.

Every precaution is taken to guard your negatives against all possible dangers. And the utmost secrecy is maintained to provide the same measure of safety for the originality of your ideas.

Only by sending your negatives to Consolidated can you realize the countless advantages in quality, cooperation and speedy service of an institution with 20 years' experience that has proved its faith in the industry.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Kearney, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

Kearney is about the cleanest, snappiest town in the state of Nebraska. The state Normal school and Teachers' training college are located here and Kearney is the alfalfa center of the world. That's what makes Kearney such a good town. Then, too, Mr. Rose, who manages the Publix theatres, has a lot to do with it, for he's a pleasant, congenial gentleman who knows what Kearney desires in entertainment, and that's what he gives Kearney. Nebraska ought to have a lot more Kearneys and a lot more managers like Mr. Rose.

We stopped at Lexington to see Ralph Falkinburg, who operates Lexington's popular amusement palace, but he had just left for North Platte to attend a football game between Lexington and North Platte. There was no darn sense in his doing that when we were coming to make an unexpected call on him, but that's the kind of a guy he is, and, just for that, we are about half glad that Lexington got skinned, although outside of the Neligh High school team and the Cornhuskers, we are never very particular who wins.

At Cozad we ran into another football game, between Cozad and Cambridge, and of course we found Mr. Hagadone, the manager of the Rialto theatre, out there as one of the referees, with a pocket full of stage money and offering to bet on Cozad. He wanted us to stay and see the game but we told him we were a working man and the only thing that would induce us to cease our labors was duck shooting and bass fishing, none of which we have done for so long that we wouldn't know a mallard from a mudhen or a bass from one of Elmer Gailey's bulheads. Mr. Hagedone told us that business was beginning to show some slight improvement but was still some little ways from "just around the corner."

North Platte, Neb.

This is the town made famous by Bill Cody, otherwise known the world over as "Buffalo Bill." Originally North Platte was on the fringe between the United States and nothing west. At one time when you left North Platte for the west you had to have a guide and a darn good rifle. Today you have to have a good set of tires and a lot of Christianity if you travel the Lincoln highway. While we know nothing about it personally, we were told that the town still retains some of her early-day customs and that one so inclined can get it in the raw or "aged in wood" to suit his fancy.

Unlike Tombstone, Arizona, North Platte does not have a "Boothill Cemetery" where people were buried with their boots on, but in the early days they did discourage the custom of a lot of people from putting their brands on other people's cattle, and usually the courts did not have a great deal to do about it.

Mr. Ernst is the new manager of the Fox theatres. Two are operating and one is closed. He recently came here from southern Colorado, where he managed theatres for the Fox organization. The Fox was playing "American Madness" when we called, a story of wildcat speculation and a run on a bank, and if our opinion on pictures amounts to anything with you we would advise you to play this one on a positive guarantee, but we are not advising you. Bobby Snyder will take your change at the Fox box office and she will make you glad to lay down your dough. She says that in spite of her best efforts she is still single, with nothing but hazy prospects ahead. Come on, you North Platte boys, wake up and snap out of it.

Gothenburg is another alfalfa hay and sugar beet town, and between the hay and beets and Glen Van Wey, who manages the Sun theatre, Gothenburg is moving right along at the head of the procession. Glen took us up to his home and introduced us to Mrs. Van, who started rolling up her sleeves and said she was going to get us a supper. Now, that's what we call service, but we couldn't stop, much as we would have liked to do so.

Glen says he has no complaints against the film companies, as they have treated him very nicely. He says he has tried out a new system. His regular prices are ten and twenty-five cents, but once a week he advertises to admit anybody for ten cents between 9 o'clock and 9:30, and he said that it has been a winner, for it has dragged them out of their cars and off the sidewalks and into the theatre, and he has played to as high as 735 people at his second show and that it seemed to have no material effect on the attendance at the first show. This might be worth trying by those of you who have trouble getting them in at your second show. When in Gothenburg look Glen up; he's a swell guy.

There is still a closed season on jazz orchestras and radio crooners. We were in a cafe to dinner last night and trying to read President Hoover's Cleveland speech and there was a jazz orchestra and a crooner on the radio. We called the waitress over to our table and said to her, "Say, Girtie, are there any crazy people in this cafe that you are trying to entertain"? And she replied, "Why no, not that I know of. Why"? And we replied, "Well, then, go and turn that damthing off."

Scottsbluff, Neb.

At Ogalla we met our old friend A. F. Kehr of the Princess theatre. He was just coming out of a hardware store with his arms full of shells and said he was going out after ducks and wanted us to go along. There you go again, and us a working man. Doggone these guys who have to work, anyhow, and we haven't tasted a duck this season. We told H. F. to go ahead, but we hoped he'd fall out of the boat and get wet to his neck.

We also called at the Goodall sound factory to meet Mr. Goodall but he was away installing a sound equipment. We met his superintendent, who showed us around the plant, which, by-the-way, is a very complete establishment.

At Oshkosh (a town we don't ever intend to pass up) we met our very good friends, Mr. and Mrs.. O. A. Jensen of the Silver Hill theatre.

We always like to call on these delightful folks, for they are the type of people who make one glad he's living in Nebraska instead of South Africa. We've met some who ought to be living in South Africa but they were not in the theatre business.

Scottsbluff is the beet sugar capitol of western Nebraska, and Billy Ostenburg, who manages both theatres, is about as truthful a guy as we know of. Out on the highway as you enter town you will see a big sign which reads: "EGYPTIAN THEATRE, AMERICA'S FINEST." We asked Billy if he hadn't taken in a lot of territory with that sign and he said, "Well, look 'er over," and we did. Then we told him he was probably right about it. It being Sunday we wanted him to go out and play golf but he declined and said, "I'd be glad to do it, Colonel, but I was down to Colorado Springs recently and went out to play golf with some of the boys and the ninth green was over on the opposite side of Pike's Peak and when I swung on the ball to drve it over that mountain I dislocated my left shoulder and broke my right arm, and since then my doctor won't let me play."

We looked at him in surprise and said, "Tut tut, Billy, did you ever hear of a bird by the name of Ananias"? And he replied, "Yes, but he never played golf."

AT&T Earns $5.92 A Share in 9 Months

Net income of the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, parent company of Western Electric Company and Electrical Research Products, Inc., for the nine months ending September 30, was $110,541,623, equivalent to $5.92 a share on approximately 18,700,000 common shares. This compares with a net income of $128,529,560 for the corresponding period of 1931, equivalent to $7.01 a share. Western Electric Company incurred an estimated net loss of $8,000,000 for the nine-month period and is operating at about twenty per cent of capacity.

The A. T. & T. recently announced plans to spend $35,000,000 for plant betterment throughout the country. It is expected that the work will be done in the next twelve months.

MGM to Make Concessions In Dual Bill Situations

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will make concessions to exhibitors whose theatres are a part of situations in which the dual feature policy is so firmly entrenched as to be considered a standard program by local patronage. This will be done, according to a statement made last week by Felix Feist, general sales manager, despite the company's contract ban on double featuring of its product.

Concessions will take the form of modifying or waiving the penalty provisions for double featuring in such instances.

Empire State Operators in 170 Independent Houses

Members of Empire State Motion Picture Operators Union are now working in more than 170 independent theatres in the New York territory. Empire membership is estimated at about 600. Projectionists on the larger circuits are all affiliated with Local 306 and it is understood that contracts have a year or so to run.

Agfa Ansco President Resigns

Horace W. Davis has resigned as president of Agfa Ansco Film Corporation, Binghamton, N. Y., effective November 1. Mr. Davis, it is understood, contemplated the step some time ago, but waited for readjustment of the company's financial setup and the improvement of the business outlook.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

STARTING ALL OVER AGAIN!

MANY PEOPLE CLAIMED that when free wheeling and automatic clutch control were introduced into automobiles they would call for an entirely new principle in driving a car. Old habits and a sixth sense in the manipulation of the clutch and transmission would have to be overcome and people would have to adjust themselves accordingly.

The same can be said about theatre management, now that the circuits have finally seen the light of day and decided on vesting the necessary authority with the local house manager.

EVER SINCE THE START of circuit expansion, managers working for such organizations have slowly drifted into the deplorable habit of letting the office do the work. Not that it was entirely their fault. They would not permit him to do much of anything anyway. From the important position of handling every detail of his theatre's operation he slowly, but surely, degenerated into a sort of key-carrying head porter.

"Master-minds" in home offices sent him his advertising all ready for composition. Efficiency experts, via long-distant 'phone and air mail, gave forth pearly words of wisdom on how to save money and run the house. Division managers, many recruited from relations and friends, arrived from distant points and immediately told the whole division how lousy they were.

IN FACT, SHOWBUSINESS became an industry of experts of a most peculiar variety. They were expert ignoramuses and expected intelligent theatre men who have made showbusiness a life's work to respect their thoughts and ideas. And, having come on to the division fresh from home office conferences, they, too, were well versed in what seemed to be the first commandment of circuit operation: "Don't let the local manager do anything himself."

With such conditions, and many others too numerous to mention, it was only natural that the thousands of managers thoroughly capable of doing things for themselves should soon decide to let well enough alone and be content to let others do things for them. Why not? Didn't their bosses make it quite plain that men in the home office could do things better than the local man? There was little sense in trying to buck combinations like this because those who did attempt it were soon put in their places and told where they got off. And if that hint was not plain enough, then they were let off.

BUT NOW SHOWBUSINESS is being returned to where it belongs. Theatres are going to be managed by theatre managers. We predicted this four years ago and they laughed at us. We claimed that circuit operation as practised by the several major circuits could never weather a storm. While the sailing was smooth and the shekels were rolling in, swell; then all the efficiency experts were riding on the crest of a wave. Home office smart guys were just the cat's pajamas. Were they good? All you had to do was ask them. But, came the depression and with it terrific losses and complete lack of organization morale.

SO, FELLOWS, YOU'LL have to start all over again. Pick up the trail where it left off four years ago and get back into the right habits. Learn to depend on no one but yourself. Remember, there is to be no home office to lean upon. If your theatre is to be run right, YOU will have to run it.

Surprising as it may sound, this change will not come as easily as you imagine. We've encountered quite a few circuit men in the last six months who are now with independents and, take our word for it, they were almost helpless the first five or six weeks. They lacked initiative; they floundered around when burdened with more than one or two things that had to be done. They had a dazed look on their faces when they sat down to make up an ad. Their poster copy resembled an ancient puzzle. No one, including the printers, could figure out what was what. They just couldn't get started.

ABOUT THE ONLY THING they could still do well was handle the help and see that the theatre was clean. And we all know that these few good qualities are hardly sufficient to keep a theatre on the profitable side of the ledger.

They must be hundred-per cent showmen again. They must acquire the knack of making up seat-selling newspaper ads. They must once again feel the importance of their responsibility and realize that upon them, and them alone, rests the success or failure of their theatres.

So, start all over again, boys. Whatever you have forgotten about running a theatre must be remembered again, and in an up-to-date manner, too, because theatre operation, like everything else, changes with time. "CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

It might be sympathy—it might be colic—or even something equally distressing; anyway, it's another lesson in the long course in diplomacy every manager has to go through. Our own Dick Kirschbaum "ghosted" for Jack Prendergast, Rialto Cinema, York, for this one. Heed Dick's S.O.S., fellows, "will ya"?

VOTES PROVED DELIS MOST POPULAR AMONG MANAGERS IN SECTION

All questions concerning the popularity of George Delis as manager of the Capitol and Olympic Theatres, Steubenville, Ohio, were dispelled a short time ago when returns from 65 other theatres entered in the Warner managers' contest were analyzed and George declared the winner. He was awarded a ten-day vacation to Atlantic City, with all expenses paid, to say nothing of having his picture published in the home town newspaper.

All of which is very fine and a direct slant on why Delis has an enviable record as manager of the Warner houses in Steubenville. However, we've picked up a couple of other items concerning his recent activities in showbusiness and here they are:

Some newspaper clippings inform us that he held a beauty contest not long ago as the result of a tie-up made with a leading store. The winners, chosen by four judges selected from a list of prominent citizens, appeared at the nine o'clock performance on a Friday evening and picked the most attractive bathing girl and three alternates. All were awarded handsome gifts by the store management. The winner was designated Miss Steubenville, Summer of '32.

We note also that he effected another tie-up with a local laundry whereby his theatres secured a lot of advertising in return for a few guest tickets. The laundry concern printed and distributed a large quantity of hand bills made up especially for the give-away, which was handled in the usual style.

When he played "Tenderfoot" a number of attractive window displays and a bally materially helped business on that picture. Windows were secured from a variety of merchants, including a confectioner and sports attire shop. A young fellow dressed in cowboy costume rode a horse around the main streets and did his share of the campaign. Hand bills with some good catchline copy also effectively contributed to the good returns.

We hope Delis enjoyed his trip to Atlantic City and if he hasn't taken it yet and happens to come this way, we'll expect him to pay a visit to Club headquarters, if he can spare the time. Congratulations to him, at any rate, from all his fellow Round Tablers, who wish him continued success in his field as well as winning many more circuit contests.

ROLAND DOUGLAS IS STILL TURNING OUT NOVEL THROW-AWAYS

The last time we reported on the activities of Roland Douglas, director of publicity for the RKO Majestic Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, he was engaged in the somewhat questionable practice of giving away real money. Readers will surely recall that one—the throwaways with a penny glued on a corner. Of course the gag went over like hot cookies!

We note that Roland is still charitably inclined, but has sanely switched from pennies to pencil stumps as gifts to the worthy San Antonians. It's another throw-away card, with a small slit to hold the pencil, with check marks and head copy reading "Check and Re-Check! You Won't Find Any Better or Greater Entertainment in San Antonio." The balance of copy plugged RKO Greater Show Season and "Age of Consent," the current attraction. It seems that old man opposition was using "Bigger and Greater" for a catchline in all advertising at the time and the throwaway was Roland's way of taking the sting away; at least, as he states, such was the idea.

And you can't be arrested for having ideas these days! And this Round Tabler's ideas are always interesting. However, it's a great country down there, with the Mexican border only a short distance away and 'planes flying to and fro to the tune of the "Habanera." Maybe we'll get down your way some day, Doug; at least, there's no harm looking forward to the day. In the meantime, keep up the good work and let your Club hear from you just as often as possible.

For Goodness Snakes!!!

"Rattlesnakes have been seen in the Five Points Theatre," Birmingham, Ala., was the warning on a card that recently greeted the eyes of Manager Fletcher Thorington.

It seems that Fletcher has been embroiled with labor factions down his way and the cards are alleged to have been circulated to scare away patrons. Coincidentally, "Tarzan, The Ape Man," played the Five Points, and through Thorington's quick move to advertise the fact that snakes would be shown at the theatre, the gag boomeranged around in his favor. Business has since been decidedly on the upturn.

OPPOSITION!

Opposition in the form of the recent eclipse of the sun by the moon, the world's biggest show, prompted Milt Harris, of the Fox Theatre, St. Louis, to have a bevy of F. & M. Sunkist Beauties observe the phenomena from the theatre roof. All papers carried the story next day.

KAUFMAN HELD BIG RANGER CLUB PARTY DOWN ON EAST SIDE

Manager Kaufman, of the Mecca Theatre, 14th street and Avenue A, New York City, recently garnered a lot of publicity through organization and opening of a Buck Jones Rangers Club, the first Club of its kind in New York's lower East Side section. Between 2,000 and 3,000 members were on hand for the initial meeting.

The parade was led by Kaufman, Harold Emerson, National Chairman of the organization, and a youngster dressed to typify the "Ranger Spirit." They rode in a car decorated with American flags and Ranger banners. Directly following came a large Boy Scout unit in military formation and a

Kaufman is to be congratulated for making such a fine showing down in his neighborhood and the club will undoubtedly prove an asset for future exploitation activities. He plans to form a bicycle brigade that will perform various functions for his club. Plans are also under way for the holding of a Western Pageant for the Rangers and their parents. We will advise further on these stunts if Kaufman will see that the information is sent to Round Table Club headquarters.

BINSTOCK PROMOTED GOOD DEAL BEFORE BEING TRANSFERRED

Just before being transferred from the Fortway Theatre to the Republic, another Randforce house in Brooklyn, N. Y., Paul Binstock, manager, put over a party that netted him a lot of worthwhile publicity in the neighborhood newspaper.

This paper has a department called "Aunt Jill's Home Cherio Club," composed of youngsters of the neighborhood. Paul arranged to have forty of the members witness "First Year" by sending in to "Aunt Jill" a list of three letter words made up from the "Fortway." Prior to the party the paper came through with a number of stories and on the day of the event a photographer was on hand to take a picture of the gang gathered in front of the theatre.

At this writing Binstock is located at the Republic Theatre, Grand and Keap streets, Brooklyn, which is quite a long way from his old Bay Ridge neighborhood. We and all his friends wish him a lot of luck with the new job. Just as soon as he finds his way around over in Williamsburg we will hope to publish further word.

WALTER MORRIS PUT OVER SO. PREMIERE WITH BIG CAMPAIGN

The last time we reported on the activities of Walter Morris, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., we concluded by stating that he was in the midst of preparations for a Southern Premiere of "Doctor X." Here's what happened:

His advance exploitation consisted of distribution of 3,000 laundry slips, inserted in packages 10 days prior to opening; the mailing of engraved invitations to a select mailing list 4 days in advance; installation of an 8x5 foot panel over door front (side entrance) one week prior; special window displays in 25 buildings, including hotels, drug stores, restaurants and department stores, all promoted in return for passes; regular display cards in windows three days in advance; special set pieces in lobby carrying congratulatory telegrams from stars in picture to manager on premiere; a special front (see photo) consisting of a 15x20 foot banner hung from top of theatre, 20 pennant streamers with flood lights reflecting on them (floods and spots promoted from power company) and 2 mounted 24-sheets on marquee.

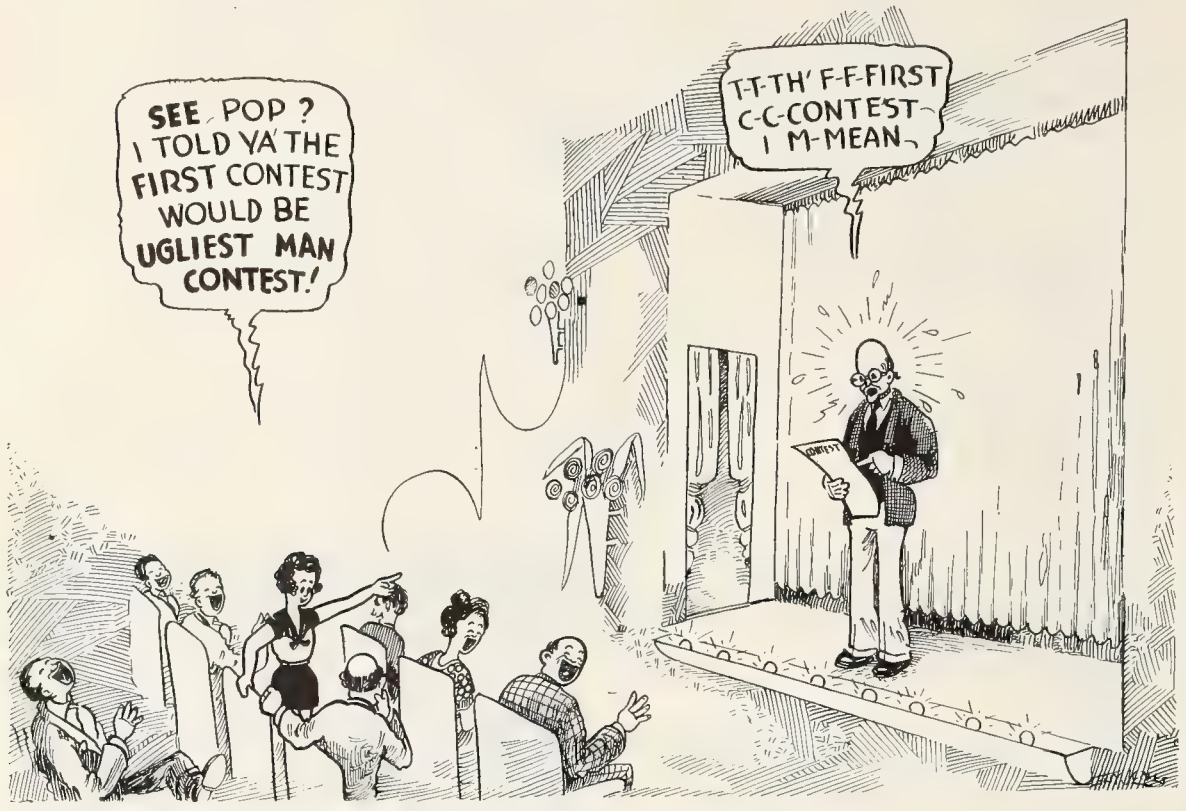
His newspaper campaign included advance ads four days prior to opening; flash art layout in Sunday papers and some corking publicity breaks six days in advance, which were tied up with the Warner National Exhibit held just ahead of the premiere.



The photo certainly indicates the considerable flash given the theatre front for the occasion, which, together with other efforts, made Morris' campaign a fruitful one. However, this Round Tabler generally renders a good account of himself in anything he undertakes, so it's not surprising to hear that his Southern Premiere was a big success. Credit to Dwight Pendry and Harry Caldwell for execution of front and all special displays.

Krieger's Konclave

Lester Krieger, of the New York Warner office, recently paid Louisville, Ky., a visit, and gathered around him all the Warner managers in Kentucky for a general discussion of conditions, bookings for the next ten weeks and plans for the Kentucky division drive.

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

Now Was That the Human Thing To Do? We Ask You!!!

ALVIN HOSTLER IS STILL DOUBLING IN ART AND MANAGEMENT

That doubler in theatre management and art, Alvin Hostler, manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Pa., recently broke out his brushes and paint pot and again turned out a couple of interesting front displays.

One of the fronts, pictured here, was made for "Blonde Captive" and helped the film open to excellent business. It had a black background and a jungle effect that was produced with palms, jungle grass and various animal photos.

We also have a photo of the very attractive display he made for "Winner Take All," but this one was used 'way back around Fourth of July time and had a red, white and blue background—a color combination that makes any engraver tremble with fear when considering results. So all we can tell readers about this one is that it made a great flash and tied in most neatly with the occasion.

Hostler's work is always interesting and we're glad of the opportunity to show what he is doing. We trust we've already made it clear why the other photo could not be reproduced. Next time we'll look for better results, and from Alvin it will be so, take our solemn word for it—we ought to know.

JACK ROSENBERG IS STILL HITTING THE BALL ON WEST COAST

Samples of some gags used by Jack Rosenberg, manager of the Plaza Theatre, San Diego, Calif., offer evidence that this Club member is producing his usual crop of attention-getters.

Up to the time authorities at a local exchange stepped in with a request to let up on the subject, distribution of multigraphed sheets and other advertising on the Akron disaster, portrayed at the theatre in the newsreel, returned excellent business on that news special. The sheets carried the design of the airship and copy which read: "Special—Newsreel Attraction—The Akron Disaster, Which Cost the Lives of Two Men, Is Being Shown in Detail—Now—At the—Plaza." "Somewhat gruesome," declares Jack, but brisk trade justified his belief that a whole lot of people want to look at just that sort of stuff. Newspaper ads and sound truck were also used to play up the reel. Doorman Earl Ransom was responsible for making up the 500 multigraphed sheets at a cost of but seventy-five cents.

We also note that Jack used the Doctor's Call Card, calling attention to the fact that an emergency call for a doctor may reach him at any time while attending a show; and a leap year folder, folded in a strip and read as unwound. The copy seems excellent and as no credit is given anyone, we'll assume that Jack penned it himself, although he mentions seeing both gags in past issues of the HERALD. Here tiz:

The head read, "For Women Only! (any man reading this does so at his own risk).

"Girls, it's Leap Year! What are you going to do about it? Here's just what you've been looking for! Ten easy rules for Leap Year Proposals (guaranteed to get you a husband in less than 3 trials, or your money back. Oh, yeah?).

"Here they are: 1. For best results, select a prospective victim dumb enough not to have the slightest idea what you're driving at (we've warned you).

2. "Work up confidence and 'that nonchalant manner' by practicing before a mirror—or perhaps by necking a parlor pillow (maybe a Murad would help). 3. While not essential, it is a swell idea to establish the 'old-fashioned' atmosphere by cooking up a batch of home-made taffy. Your victim will be too impolite to refuse, and by the time you've gotten around to the proposal, he'll be too sick to say 'no'. (Enthusiastic users of our method say this one never fails.)

4. "Phone the chump and get him to walk into the trap by telling him 'Tommy' has a new set of kittens, or that the radio needs fixing. (As a last resort tell him the family has gone to the movies.) 5. When he arrives, 30 minutes late, grab his hat and hide it; then tell him you simply l-o-o-o-ve men who do unexpected things, and you adore waiting for him. (The hat business is the catch. Only a terrific shock would cause him to leave it. In books, they always grab their hat—remember?)

6. "Turn down the lights and corner him on the divan. Give him a little while to soak up romantic feeling. (Now's the time to feed him the taffy.) 7. Tell him all the hooey you can think of—about sunsets—moonlight—mountains by the sea—a cottage in the hills—a cozy breakfast nook—and baby makes three—go on, we started it. (If you read True Stories, this will probably last for some time.) 8. Grab him around the neck and gaze soulfully into his eyes. Register emotion—or something. (Don't go at this too vigorously, or he'll think you're having a fit.)

9. "By this time the victim will be so unconscious that anything could be put over on him. If you can still talk—ask him if he eats crackers in bed! (That one should 'get' anyone.) 10. If you have carefully followed the rules, he wouldn't marry you if you were the Queen of Sheba, so grab his hand (and his hat) and drag him over to the Plaza Theatre to see the dumbest, good-for-nothing, ignorant politician that ever ran for office in the comedy of Hollywood's hilarious satire on politics—'The Dark Horse.'"

Maybe some of our members have seen something similar to this before but it's darn good copy and can be applied to most any picture while Leap Year is with us; hence, the reprint. Bear in mind that the matter above is paragraphed at each of the ten rules and that the 22-inch strip of paper is folded five or six times so that when folded only the opening lines can be read. The copy in parenthesis was set in light italics.

Jack has taken some pictures of recent lobby displays and of posters made by artist Robert Slanker, whose work he praises unstintedly, and he intends to shoot these along just as soon as possible. Slanker will explain use of the colors. We will await this matter with interest. In the meantime, thanks for this material, Jack, and let's hear from you again in the near future.

Morrow Now C. M.

Floyd D. Morrow, recently in charge of the Kenosha Theatre, Warner house in Kenosha, Wis., has been promoted to the city managership of Warner's Fairmont and Virginia Theatres, Fairmont, West Virginia.

KIDDIE DANCING REVUES!

Reports from the field do not indicate any great amount of activity in this direction, yet, it represents one of the most definite box office draws in showbusiness.

The usual formula is to tie up with the local dancing school for children and have them stage the revue, using as many children as is possible; because, the more kids the more local interest from all the numerous relations and friends, besides a general interest from the entire community in this sort of show.

By soliciting cooperation from the merchants you can add still more to the importance of the occasion. Let them furnish props, costumes, etc. Perhaps the newspaper advertising manager will come through with a special section to break the day before the opening of the revue.

All too many times in the past the managers have concentrated on making this sort of an affair a one day or one performance proposition. This is entirely wrong. Such a revue can certainly stand up as long as any maximum playing time for a big picture. And with definite assurance that the public interest will not lag.

We suggest that you make your plans NOW for the promotion of a three-day revue and back it up with all you've got in the way of exploitation and showmanship. It will repay you well for your efforts by showing a swell return at the box office and the dancing schools should jump at the one chance they have of grabbing some fine publicity for their classes.

BECCERA HELD FREE HAIRCUT PARTY FOR KIDS IN HIS LOBBY

Free hair cuts for the kiddies! So well? . . . that's just what happened out at the Uptown Theatre, Cleveland, as the result of a conference held by Manager John A. Beccera with the Welfare Department of the Cleveland Union Barbers.

Beccera convinced the authorities that free hair cuts for the youngsters would give the Union a tremendous lot of publicity and good will. Consequently, arrangements were made for wholesale shearing of every kiddie who attended a Saturday matinee.

As the accompanying photo attests, a temporary barber shop was installed in the inner lobby during the morning and for the rest of the day twenty-five union barbers did their stuff on each and every member of the Uptown's "Looney Tune Club."

Stories in the newspapers, a trailer on the screen, lobby notice, announcement from the stage the previous Saturday and plenty of throwaways, all contributed to the success of the stunt.

Certainly, a most novel stunt, and we don't doubt for one moment that Beccera cashed in on plenty of excellent publicity and good will for putting it over. We'll be looking for more "originals" from this enterprising showman.

Sponsler in Public Eye

Lewis B. Sponsler, manager of the Fox-Mokan Theatre, Kansas City, recently caught the public eye as chairman of a committee that arranged a street celebration signalizing installation of new street lights in his neighborhood. Thousands witnessed street dancing, vaudeville and other entertainment. Sponsler was elected vice-president of the West Thirty-ninth Street Improvement Association a short time ago.

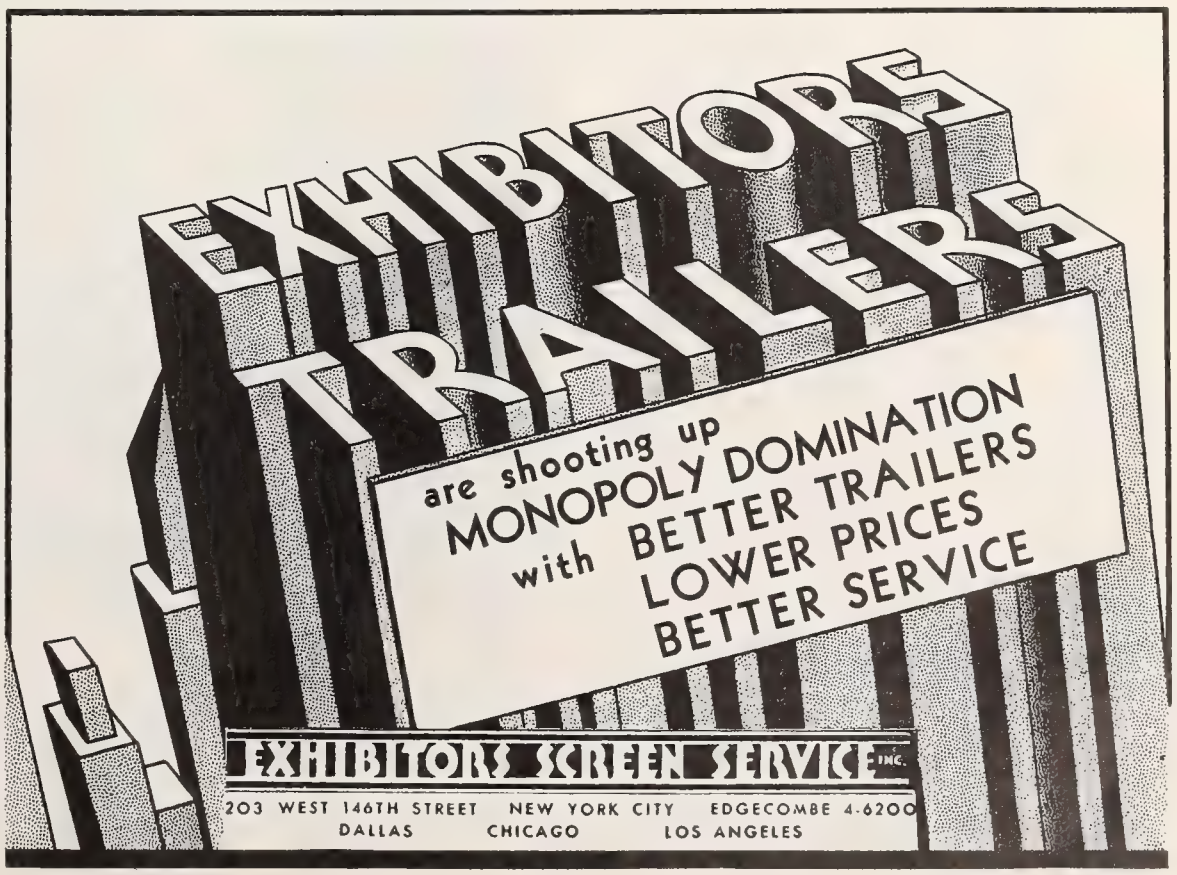
BACON TELLS US HOW "CROONER" WAS SOLD AT MISSION THEATRE

Through the good offices of Jimmie Bacon, assistant manager of the Mission Theatre, San Diego, Calif., one of our Club's recently elected members, we are informed now "Crooner" was put over by the Mission management.

Jimmie himself played an important part in one of the features of the campaign by tying in with the largest music store in town for a window display. With a background made to represent a radio broadcasting studio and a profusion of copies of popular song hits, a "crooner" was secured from the Columbia network to broadcast songs to the street through a mike and loudspeaker. A pianist accompanied the crooner and song hits from the picture were especially plugged. Flashy posters tied in the display with theatre, picture and playdates.

Okay, Jimmy, and that's a good starter for a new Round Tabler. Keep up the good work and let's hope that we hear a lot more about what's going on in showbusiness out your way. Remember us to Jack Rosenberg, R. J. Jerebeck, J. W. Work and any other member of our outfit you happen to meet.

McNEILL CANVASSES RURAL PATRON WITH AUTO-TRAILER BALLY



Club members who consider out-of-town or rural patronage an important part of their trade will be interested to know that excellent results in this direction are being obtained by S. H. McNeill, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada, through use of an auto trailer.

We have two or three snap shots at hand showing close-ups of the trailer but Picked the one reproduced herewith because entire equipment is portrayed. He uses it for exploitation work over a territory of about 35 miles and has found it very effective in combating the depressed business conditions in his section. Local conditions make it absolutely imperative that the theatre be kept before the out-of-town public and McNeill's trailer is doing this. Prior to getting the four-wheeled truck he used a two-wheeler and personally bore the cost, as his share against the war on hard times, when he took on the new equipment.

McNeill is another delinquent Round Tabler, but when we don't hear from him it's because he's very much pressed for time. We know for a fact that he not only acts as manager but serves as a projectionist (union), paints signs, takes care of all publicity, and a dozen other duties. It surely begins to look as though there are several claimants to honors in the one-man theatre staff field. Keep up the good work, Mack, and let's hear from you as often as possible.

GIVE 'EM SENSATION, SAYS A. B. WARD; SEES END OF COMPO FRONTS

We echo the remark made by the Cincinnati United Artists manager who, when he first saw the extraordinary display fashioned for "White Zombie" by Anna Bell Ward and Morgan Elliott of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., said: "My God, that thing will scare everybody away from the theatre!"

"Hearken to us my good man," quoth Miss Anna and Morgan in reply, "you don't know what you're talking about. Cease your chatter until returns for the first showing are in and then we'll see what we'll see." The subject was changed, the U. A. man waited for the answer, which came in the form of the best gross at the Ben Ali since last January. So, that's that!

Now that we've possibly intrigued readers concerning the above, we'll bluntly state that the stunt consisted of a casket, skeleton and some electrical apparatus. Elliott promoted the casket from a local dealer and had a loudspeaker built in it, invisibly wired under the casket and down the side of the beaver board sign. A small hole was bored in the floor and the wire was carried through to the cellar. There was also a small, invisible wire attached to the jaw of the skeleton, which also ran down the same floor hole to the cellar. A young woman was employed to send messages through the loudspeaker and whenever she talked worked the wire and pulled the skeleton's mouth open.

Just a word or two about the contents of the casket, which are somewhat mildly described by Miss Anna Bell as "grotesque." The skeleton was borrowed from a local doctor and represented a man shot by a firing squad in the World War. Three bullet holes were in the fore part of the skull. A man was planted nearby to tell the history of the man and his execution and when interest of bystanders was at peak, the girl would pull the wire attached to the skeleton's mouth and begin her act by whispering: "Look around you, do your friends act queerly—strangely . . . they may be Zombies—living, breathing, walking under the spell of the master of the living dead." Then she would scream softly, and announce that the picture was coming to the Ben Ali Sunday, concluding her remarks with—"Unusual times demand unusual pictures. See this live, weird, strangest of all love stories." Several other catchlines were also made up for her use.

Another gag used on this picture also proved effective. It was a large pasteboard pass that measured approximately 10 inches by 5 inches. About 500 were issued, and whenever one was kiven out the recipient immediately began fussing about the size, thickness and wondered where in the world it could be carried. However, all the passes came back to the box office, accompanied in a majority of cases by a paid admission, and the gag was responsible for a lot of word-of-mouth publicity. A portion of the copy gave Article 249 of the Haitian Penal Code.

Aside from the thought that caskets and skeletons may strike some readers as gruesome props to use for a front lobby display, there may be a timely warning for us all in Miss Ward's observation that the old fashioned beaver board front has been too extensively used, has toó much sameness in design, to command proper attention. She believes the only kind of a front that gets the money is the kind that people talk about, hence the use of something sensational. For instance, for a coming attraction, "Kongo," she expects to use the old "girl and spider" illusion—the one employed in sideshows for years and worked with the aid of mirrors. Also a full description, for reason that many of our members have requested information concerning construction of this illusion.

Lest we forget, let us give full credit to Morgan Elliott for the work he did putting together the "Zombie" stunt. He is the resident manager of the Ben Ali and Miss Ward stresses his part in the successful campaign. So Round Tablers, we're rattling the old skeleton's bones right before you. Maybe you'd like to test the squeamishness of the citizens of your community?

OPEN NOW, NOT XMAS!

Folders with a picture of old man Kris Kringle on the front cover may seem a little out of season right now, but not when we explain this neat little gag that the W. B. Ohio Division put over during October.

This four-page folder bears a seal inscribed "To Be Opened Before Xmas." Inside the head reads "Christmas Brought To You In October. . . . It Doesn't Seem Possible. . . . But Here It Is. . . ." Balance of copy is as follows:

"You have to believe what your eyes see . . . and believe us, Hollywood has produced so many fine pre-Xmas hits that Santa's bag is filled to overflowing. Yes, sir! These precious gems of entertainment will be our gifts to you from now until Xmas. They're here now. . . . Right now! So c'mon down and get your share of joy!"

ONE OF BLOOMBERG'S SERVICE STAFF MEN PUT OVER GOOD STUNT

Another instance of how the highly developed Service Club idea functions among a number of Publix-New England theatres, is seen in a recent report concerning a stunt put over by P. D. Bloomberg, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Salem, Mass.

The idea of entering a runner (see photo) to represent the Paramount in a marathon race originated through one of the service staff members and Assistant Manager Darby suggested that he wear a shirt bearing the words, "Paramount Service Club." Timothy Call, the staff member who entered the contest, had some previous experience in races of this sort and was given time off to train and enter the lists. Although inexperienced in comparison with the majority of racers, he managed to come in sixth and win one of the prizes.

As a result of the above, Darby arranged with a local reporter for the running of a corking little news story, tying in Call's work with the fact that the Service Club had resumed Fall and Winter activities. It was estimated that more than 20,000 people witnessed the race and, of course, the majority were aware that the Paramount Theatre had an entry. As pointed out, this stunt can be pulled anywhere a marathon race is in the making, if you have a service staff member with the necessary experience.

It may pay others to consider the idea.

A TIMES SQUARE FRONT!

The attractive front pictured above was conceived and executed by Duke Wellington, well-known theatre front architect attached to the Paramount-Publix theatre staff in New York City. Note that each one of the swinging doors acts as a frame for a blown-up scene still of several famous characters portrayed in "Madison Square Garden." We are indebted to Lewis F. Nathan of the Paramount-Publix organization for sending in the photograph.

EVERYTHING BUT THE PICTURE IN YOUR THEATRE'S ADVERTISING!

All Forms of Show-Selling, Except Newspaper Advertising, Are Discussed in the Digest on Modern Merchandising!

by CHARLES E. ("Chick") LEWIS

In this article we have attempted to cover the various phases of theatre show-selling suitable for the average theatre. We assumed that you depend on your newspaper advertising as your first line of approach to the box office. Here are some other slants that will further enhance your advertising by insuring a complete coverage and an excellent chance of reaching a greater number of people than through newspaper advertising alone.

WE have captioned this, "Everything But the Picture," because in discussing show-selling at this moment we are going to concentrate on everything pertaining to merchandising without touching on any particular picture.

It has been said that an intelligent showman could merchandise one picture a week for fifty-two weeks without once repeating a single idea in its entirety. That is quite true. Yet, some showmen, supposedly good ones, too, seem unable to develop anything resembling a good seat-selling campaign without using the same medium time and again until we wonder why the patrons of those theatres don't deliberately stay away as a protest against repeated gags.

Show-selling, or to use a plainer expression, theatre advertising, can be divided into many different classifications. If we thought for one moment that those who read this article like statistics and a lot of hooey that goes with it we could easily wax super-efficient and work out a swell looking chart and a lot of figures. But we'll just try to stick to the vein of personal conversation between us.

Getting back to what we started to say: you can split up the different selling angles and avenues of approach into many divisions. First, you have newspaper advertising. In the majority of towns and cities, newspaper advertising represents the first line of attack, and for this reason we are anxious to emphasize the importance of other slants that may be the final pull between none-too-often patrons and your box office.

So we will assume that newspaper advertising is as much a part of your theatre as the actual screening of your show. Your regular patrons see your ads and are generally aware of what you are playing, of what is coming in the way of good pictures. But what about those thousands of skeptics who just won't come out for the average good picture? Do we leave them alone and say, "Oh well, they are not regular theatre patrons anyway"?

Hell, no. We can get them and in many cases remove them from the problematical class into the steady patron class. And it would hardly be termed a miracle either. It would just be good salesmanship and finding the right appeal to attract them. That should not be too hard if you take the trouble to work out new avenues of approach and develop them accordingly.

First in importance in new selling avenues, is the mailing list and a personal letter. We put an old and a new idea into one class right at the start. The mailing list is as old as you are. But that personal letter angle is something entirely different. One is looked upon as a means of getting your program into the home from time to time. The other is a means of making a person read a personal message from you.

Here again we should hesitate long enough to point out that even in the classification of mailing lists you should distinguish the special list from the regular program list. And where a personal letter will be used to make your approach, by all means pass up the regular program mailing list. They already know about you and your theatre. It's those other folk who have never signified the slightest interest in wanting your program mailed to them that you want to interest.

To get down to the letter itself. Some claim that a purely institutional letter is not satisfactory. Others claim that a letter definitely tied to some specific picture is the proper method. For my part I am a firm believer in tying the two together as the happy medium for best results. And we had occasion to prove this statement only recently in a theatre close by when we used a special mailing list from the registration lists of the Election Board. The list numbered some seven thousand and the enclosures consisted of a personal letter from the manager, stressing the many services and comfort angles of the theatre and the unusually fine class of pictures being presented.

Then, "while on the subject of pictures," he continued, and went into a rave about a picture which was booked for the following week. One thought tied right in with the other and made for a cracker-jack selling plug for both the theatre and the picture. We honestly believe that the resultant S R O business was due in a great measure to this specialized form of show-selling. After all the theatre did play to its best business in two years and while the picture itself was a strong box office draw there were equally as strong pictures that failed to get more than the bare average business previously.

Therefore, in deciding on any campaign covering a number of weeks or months in which a mailing list will be used to reach other than steady patrons of your theatre, be sure and try to sell the two ideas at one time because either one alone may not be strong enough inducement to bring them out.

Incidentally, while we have used the expression "covering a number of weeks or months," it must not be construed that we want you to pester this special mailing list referred to with another piece of mail every week for the next few months. You'll soon find they will be complaining about your letters as being nuisances. When we mentioned the period of time we assumed that in some localities it would be impossible to cover the entire city directory or phone book of names in one mailing. In such cases you should take several thousand at a time and each week use a different portion until you have covered the entire city and surrounding communities one hundred per cent.

Outdoor Advertising!

We had always been firm believers in outdoor advertising for the majority of theatres and towns. Yet, during the past six months or so we find many representative showmen arguing against it as an expensive and hardly-worth-while medium to attract business.

Let us dwell for a moment on the function of outdoor or billposting form of advertising. Just what is this function or functions? "So that he who runs may read," is not enough. We would say that it constitutes one of the ropes that help pull the patron into the theatre. Advertising, like every other form of business promotion, is merely a series of methods to pull business to a certain source. You may use more fancy English to convey your thought, but that just about covers it.

Then where does outdoor advertising fit in? Well, let's see. Just a few years back we had a finger in the construction and opening of a large New England Theatre. That said theatre was a beautiful flop is no reflection on what we did to make it a success instead. Our responsibility consisted of finishing and giving the house a smash opening designed to keep them coming until the house was established. But even a miracle man could never accomplish such a feat what with poor policy judgment and a picture situation that was nothing short of criminal.

But you are not interested in the details concerning its flop. We opened that house with a bang that was heard all over the country. Just calculate what it means when we say that eight thousand separate requests were received for the opening night show. And we could only seat about three thousand.

Something must have made them unusually anxious to attend the opening. Well, in our humble opinion, outdoor advertising had a big hand in creating that anxiety. Because we went for it in a big way and from three separate and distinct angles. First, straight three and twenty-four sheet stands. Second, forty-eight sheet size painted stands for straight institutional advertising about the theatre. Third, a group of combination boards of the latter size but designed to carry both institutional copy but having a regular twenty-four sheet poster framed in the center for weekly changes.

A DIGEST ON ADVERTISING!

These stands were erected on important and strategic points on all the main highways leading into the city. Note that we say INTO the city. Because many authorities on outdoor advertising seem to have the idea that all or some of the stands should be read by those leaving the city. Sorry we can't agree. We want them to see it while coming into the city on the plain theory that it may prompt them to come to my theatre instead of the other guy's, or, if they are merely coming to town on a visit, it may be a tip to them to come see my show.

Three Sheet Stands!

Just what copy should be carried on the institutional boards and combo stands we won't attempt to go into here. We assume, and we hope that we are correct, that you as the manager should know what features of your theatre's comfort, service and other items are worth so important a plug. And we also assume that you have sense enough to keep away from such institutional advertising if your house is, in plain English, a "dump." But, if you have something to sell besides the picture and it will stand close scrutiny, go ahead and shout about it long and loud.

The three sheet stands are an entirely different angle in the set-up of outdoor advertising and can be, to a certain extent, classed with window-card advertising but on a larger scale. While the larger stands are supposed to be read by those driving by rapidly, and laid out and printed accordingly, the three sheets are meant to attract those who are walking and possible automobile traffic moving at a pace for city traffic that permits them to be attracted by the board and then to read it.

With this thought in mind it may seem but natural that your three sheet stands could contain more copy in proportion to the twenty-four sheet stands. But don't crowd it. Lay it out so that it attracts them and then make it easy for them to read.

In selecting or approving of three sheet locations in town, try to select corners where traffic is heaviest. On the outskirts, gas stations are always a good bet. But so far as sniping them 'way back off the road on fences, etc., don't waste the time or the money. Three sheet advertising has a definite value when used properly, otherwise it means little or nothing at all.

Circulars and Heralds!

Now we will pass on to another popular, and maybe unpopular method of showselling and theatre advertising. The much used, abused and maligned circular and herald.

There are very plain reasons why they are "much used, abused and maligned," and YOU are the answer.

In recent years the circular and herald were the inefficient manager's idea of high-powered publicity and exploitation. Whenever he thought that he was not advertising his theatre and its attractions enough, he would "knock out" (and that's the only expression applicable) a circular and scatter them to the four winds with the aid of some kids. Then he went home that night and slept the sleep of the righteous because he had put over a "gigantic" campaign for his house.

Nerts. He was too damned hazy to figure out anything along sensible lines so he took the lines of least resistance. He should have been consigned to a pail and a mop. That's his speed. Not running a theatre.

Now, let us get this straight. We are firm believers in circular and herald advertising under certain conditions and for certain types of theatres. Indiscriminate use of them, however, where they are not well planned, well printed, or well distributed, can do more to hurt your business than to possibly aid it.

A herald is just what its name implies. It is supposed to be a piece of printed matter to "herald" some unusual event. Just how many remember this fact when preparing for a herald is far too difficult to guess. But we'll venture the opinion that only fifty percent of the managers using heralds realize what they are all about.

So, acting on the assumption that you are about to "herald" some big or unusual event, we will pass on to the make up of the herald itself.

If your house is the better type, the local first run, the representative show-house of the community, your printed matter should reflect this fact and should always be kept within the realm of dignity. We have long maintained—and some of the boys who worked with us in past years will well remember this, too—that anything worth printing is worth printing well. We could never stand for a sloppy printing job or a job printed on a cheap piece of stock. Many's the time we let a whole batch of circulars or heralds go into the furnace rather than hand out some that were not up to scratch.

Preparing the Copy!

In preparing copy for a circular or herald, don't deal in just plain, cold salesmanship. Try to inject a little of your own personality (assuming that you have a little to spare), and make it an intimate, interesting exchange between your theatre and the person receiving it. Spot a catch-line, cut or slug where it will attract attention. Follow that with your interest-getting copy and then, figuring that if they have been intrigued into reading thus far they will continue right on through, go into the important message or news that formed the basis for starting it in the first place.

The distinction between a circular and herald might be described as follows: a circular being a single sheet printed on one side only; while a herald is more in the nature of a folder printed on both sides and laid out more conservatively than the "flash" circular type.

Heralds, as a class, can be divided into the stock exchange herald issued on most all pictures and allowing space for theatre imprint and playdates. Then there are the type which are made up expressly by and for a particular theatre to sell some particular thought or picture. These are always best when, like the personal letter, they are tied to some institutional thought as well as a picture.

The circulars can be divided into just two classes. Those made up to put across some "smash" thought, an announcement, or where speed is of vital importance. These can be and are in the regular class. Then we have the novelty or gag style used for the purpose of getting across something that calls for a novel twist. For example, we have one in our scrap book printed on good stock and measuring about six by nine inches. In twenty-four point, or larger type, it is topped flush left, with this caption: THROW THIS AWAY, then centered in six or eight point type about 15 ems (two and a half inches) wide, is the body in which the plug for the picture or gag was printed. Flush right at the bottom, it ended up with this: DON'T READ IT!

Circulars of this sort are all right providing they suit the general atmosphere of the theatre so advertising. I can think of a lot of houses where this kind of a circular would not click at all, and by virtue of the same argument I know plenty of other houses where it would be just fine. In the final analysis, it's up to the manager to know what is good and what is not good for his theatre.

Herald Distribution!

After you have solved, first, the advisability of making up a herald; second, decided on the make-up and printing; third, determined how many you can distribute properly; then you must make your arrangements to get them out. Every circular or herald printed and not used or wasted is just so much time, energy and money thrown into the sewer. (Pardon the classy expression.)

If the mailing list is not suited for distribution of all or any part of them, then the house to house, plus busy intersection hand-outs are the next things to be considered and acted upon.

Assuming that it is to be house-to-house plan, you should organize teams. Each team to be in direct charge of one of your regular house employees. NEVER GIVE A GANG OF KIDS AN ARMFUL OF CIRCULARS AND EXPECT THEM TO PROPERLY DISPOSE OF THEM. They will dispose of them all right, but how? A handful into every vestibule and when they get tired, into the nearest ash-can goes the balance.

Organize your teams, and give them specific sections to cover. The further away from the theatre the better, since it is to be assumed that what you have to say through the medium of circulars can be conveyed in most cases through a special sign in front of the house. It's the outlying sections you want to, and must, get into.

In next week's issue we will continue this discussion on the various forms of theatre advertising. Other methods of distribution will be taken up and, in addition, we will go into several entirely different ideas on the subject, including: Street banners, airplane and air trailers, etc., etc. If, perchance, we have overlooked some particular angle that you are interested in reading about, drop us a line and, if possible, it will be included. "Chick."

CONLEY AND KIPPEL BUILT SMASH FRONT FOR TOM BROWN FILM

The team of Larry Conley and Mickey Kippel, of the Warner Theatre, Jersey City, N. J., has been at it again, reports publicity dispenser Al Zimbalist; this time, with a stunt that materially made blacker the black ink on the book-keeping records for "Tom Brown of Culver."

On this occasion they built an armory turret effect over the top of the marquee, with blocked-up compo board to represent masonry. Two men dressed like Culver cadets paraded back and forth and every five minutes or so a bugler stationed at one end of the marquee sounded one of the well known army calls, which could be heard blocks away and attracted a lot of attention to the theatre.

The lobby was dressed in military fashion, with shells, bullets, guns and other implements of warfare placed in front of the box office and underneath the marquee. All ushers were clothed in uniforms similar to those worn by Culver cadets. Neighborhood and near by military schools were contacted, heralds were distributed, twenty-four sheets were posted and especially prepared publicity and advertising issued.

We hope by this time that the loquacious Mr. Zimbalist has quite recovered from the devastating effect produced upon his mental equipment when his attention was suddenly attracted to the marquee stunt described above. "I was stunned, Chick, when I heard it," says he, "and this is not press agentry, either." To all appearances, this military bally had the reverse effect on theatre patrons, for, according to reports, it revived their interest in movie-going and, consequently, made it necessary to oil the cash register mechanism. Congratulations to Conley and Kippel.

Goldberg's Fire Sale

Right on the job when a demonstration of fire fighting equipment was held near his theatre in connection with "Fire Prevention Week," Herb. Goldberg, manager of the Isis Theatre, Fox-Midwest house in Kansas City, quickly constructed a sign advertising his 9.45 show and induced two boys to carry it among the crowd. Also Herb. happened to know the fire chief and prevailed upon him to put in a good word for the theatre. The entire investment for a claimed increase of 300 admissions came to $3 for the sign.

CHARLIE (SANTA CLAUS) CHAPLIN!

YES, SIR! Charlie's back! . . . funnier than ever, with music and sound in the masterpieces that made him famous . . . and he's gonna play Santa to the winners of the contest announced in last week's issue of the Round Table Club section by the RKO-Van Beuren Corporation!

There are three separate contests: (1) The best examples of newspaper advertising. (2) The best exploitation, ballyhoo or publicity stunt. (3) The most effective display of lobby and/or front.

Three first prizes of $50 each and three runner-up prizes of $20 each will be awarded solely upon the merits of the entries. The contest is open to every showman in the United States and Canada and full details, including the rules, will be found in last week's issue.

Come on, fellows! Here's a chance to win some dough just when the kiddies will need Christmas presents. And you wouldn't want YOUR kids to think there is no Santa Claus!

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Born in Smyrna, Turkey, in December, '98, and educated in the French School of that city, Elie Jacob Saul located in Brussels, Belgium, and there began his career in showbusiness.

Elie J. Saul

He went with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer as an assistant manager and his first experience in the art of selling shows was gained in the Coliseum at Charleroi. Later on he was transferred to the Queen's Hall Theatre, Brussels, and became manager of that house.

Saul entered this field because he liked it, and if he had to start all over again he would again choose theatre management as his profession. He is 34 years of age, is married and served with the Turkish artillery during the World War, the latter an enlistment which certainly made him one of the youngest recruits in service.

Now that the Round Table Club has a representative over in Brussels we will expect to hear what sort of show-selling is done in that city and we're sure Saul's fellow Club members will be interested in his achievements in Belgium.

BRENNER EXPLOITED MARRIAGE ANGLE IN A RECENT CO-OP AD

The marriage records angle was neatly tied-in with co-operative page exploitation on "First Year" by Ray Brenner, manager of the Princess Theatre, Newcastle, Ind.

The illustration on this page speaks for itself, as far as merchant support and advertising break received by the theatre is concerned. Certainly Brenner had a nice display in the center of the page. Each of the merchants carried in their windows a list of names taken from the town marriage records. For instance, if your wedding took place since Jan. 1, 1932, your name appeared in the eight windows and you were entitled to guest tickets for you and your mate. It was necessary to have the certificate of marriage when applying for the ducats.

A nice piece of promotion, Ray, and more power to you. The title certainly tied-in neatly with the idea. What else is doing over your way in show-business? Do your best to keep the Club posted.

Those Give-Aways!

The lottery angle of give-aways, as practiced by certain theatres and merchants in the St. Louis district is being investigated by the Better Business Bureau.

LAST CALL FOR ELECTION RETURNS!

There is not much time left for preparing to make Election Night a big event in your theatre. The tremendous general interest in this year's election should react still further at the box office providing you are paying attention to the possibilities of November 8th.

The best means of getting direct returns is via a radio. This even beats a direct telegraph line because it will place at your disposal the national networks of the various air chains. Borrow a radio and have it installed in your office. Then use whatever means you believe best suited to convey the trend of the election returns to your audience.

Some are going to fall back on the good old reliable slides. Others will probably announce it via the loud speaker horns. This can be arranged either from your office or the booth. Then again, some managers will make a personal announcement from the stage. But regardless of HOW you intend getting the returns across, be sure that your town is well aware of the fact that they are going to get them direct in your theatre.

If there will be any local celebrations on the part of the various political bodies in your community you may be able to devise some means of crashing their functions by letting them get their returns from you. In this case, after each announcement, the crowds can be told that they are getting this service through the courtesy of your theatre. Other valuable slants should suggest themselves to you while working out the details. But by all means make this year's election count for something at the box office.

MEYERS' NEWSPAPER SPLURGE!

WITH the new show season well under way, a few notes on how George B. Meyers, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Frankfort, Ky., started his season off may help some of his fellow Club members who are casting about for campaign ideas.

For one thing, he picked out fifteen attractions he thought outstanding and gave them a half-page of advertising in his local newspaper medium. He figured that there were but six months in which to reap a benefit from the move and that once sold to the public deserving product would return by far the extra money and effort made. Note the none-too-crowded copy in one of the ads reproduced on this page and the appropriate mats used to decorate the borders. These mats, we presume, were obtained from regular newspaper mat service, which is available in practically all publishing offices. We believe his layout placed before readers' eyes with ease the product he wished to stress. The large ad was followed by two-column ads and others that plugged both current attractions and Greater Show Season.

In addition to newspaper advertising, which constituted the larger part of the campaign, a complete front was built to tie-in with the idea. A special trailer and window cards reading: "Capitol Theatre—Let's Go—It's Greater Movie Season," were also used to good advantage.

Thanks to Round Tabler Meyers for making it possible for us to pass along the ideas on G. S. S. to others and we're sure they'll find his suggestions worthwhile. We'll be on the lookout for further samples of his work which we know is always useful to his brother members.

CANGNEY PUT OVER PICTURE WITH SURE-FIRE EXPLOITATION

Good, old dyed-in-the-wool showmanship marked the campaign made on "Blessed Event' by James Cangney, manager of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, Tex., with efforts directed along sure-fire angles and where there was no lost motion of inefficiency. Everything he did produced results.

Cangney's biggest stunt in a publicity and ballyhoo sense was the parade of baby-buggies pushed by young chaps. Thousands of San Antonians saw and laughed about the baby-buggies, which were tagged with the line "We anticipate a 'Blessed Event' tomorrow and urge you to be on hand for the celebration." It proved an effective stunt all the way around.

In addition to that stunt, Cangney promoted distribution of 3,000 of the diaper heralds on the picture by a leading department store which put on a "Blessed Event" sale during the showing of the picture. The store also took a great deal of newspaper space in the form of three-column ads which were 15 inches deep. The store's ads offered free passes, which it paid for, to patrons making purchases in their baby shop. The store's herald distribution was effected in parcels delivered three days before opening of the picture. Two thousand additional heralds were wrapped around milk bottles, held on by rubber bands and delivered the opening day. Twenty-five thousand handbills were distributed from house to house after Saturday midnight, so that 25,000 households found the information on the picture when they arose on Sunday morning. Other advertising pieces put out included 100 special processed street car cards.

Display efforts included a striking lobby display playing up the comedy and stork angles of the picture, suggested in the Warner merchandising plan. An effective display was secured in the co-operating department store's windows, being devoted entirely to "blessed eventing" and its necessities. A special valance for the marquee which read "Okay, San Antonio, Here's 'Blessed Event'" was used.

The newspaper campaign ran far in advance of the usual regular campaign running time, and included a teaser campaign as suggested by the merchandising plan.

Proof of effectiveness of the campaign lies in the fact that the picture was held over and it's another argument in favor of concentrating on a few tried-and-proven methods instead of a flock of mediocre gags. Congratulations to Jimmie (we guess they all drop the N out of his last name down there) and we'll be looking for more news from his theatre and hope we won't be looking in vain because we can spot a good, "active" member, and when we do we like to keep them sending in material.

GATES CONSTRUCTED NOVEL DISPLAYS OF CUTOUT MARX HEADS

A stage display made from a 24-sheet novel bally and several newspaper gags played important parts in the campaign made on "Horsefeathers" by Arnold Gates, manager of Loew's Granada Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio.

Heads from the regular 24-sheet were mounted on strips of beaver board, covered with black cloth and white buttons to represent a costume. The four heads of the Marx brothers were spotted and the spots were on dimmers. Lights were brought on between each subject, with exception of the subject that preceded the feature; in other words, lighted when of least annoyance to patrons. These were used one week in advance on stage and then transferred to the front for run of picture.

The bally consisted of a team of horses hooked to the forward truck of a wagon, on which was mounted a barrel for a body to carry the driver. The barrel was painted white, with copy all over it pertaining to show. The driver was dressed to resemble Harpo, red wig, etc. He drove the odd looking vehicle around the streets for two days and attracted a lot of attention.

One newspaper gag was based on the well known hidden names of residents in classified columns; a tie-up with the paper and advertisers on "Value Day Parcels," whereby women were granted guest tickets for appearing at box office with parcels; a stunt for the younger element to win guest tickets by dressing in costumes similar to those worn by the Marx brothers, and another gag to determine what name should be given a fifth Marx, if one happened along. Both papers gave generous support with stories and photos.

The above information came to Club headquarters via H. M. Addison, Loew division man, and we're passing it along the line. Our Club boasts the membership of a number of live-wire Loew men out in Cleveland and we want to hear from all. Let's go, boys!

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Comparatively a newcomer to the business of selling shows, Julian Campbell, assistant manager of the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., began his career two years ago with one of the Publix sound trains routed through the south and middle west.

Julian Campbell

When the sound trains were discontinued he was transferred to an assistant's post at the Lyric Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J. and after four weeks of service there he joined up with Manager Tommy Phelan at the Long Branch house.

Campbell was born July 3, 1905, in the city of Columbia, S. C., and received his education in public and high schools of that city. He entered show business because the field appealed to him and, according to information at hand, has no thought of ever leaving this business to engage in other enterprise. Further data discloses that he's still a single man.

has replaced Bob Harvey as manager of the Fox, San Francisco. Frank Burhans takes Phillips' old post at the Fox-Oakland.

FOX-MIDWESCO USING SYMBOL TO IDENTIFY THEATRE ADVERTISING

Out in the Fox-Midwest division, where Elmer C. Rhoden holds forth as division manager, they're using a new symbol for theatre ads, lobby displays, etc., as a mark of identification for company houses.

"Keep your eye on 'Br'er Fox'" is the new slogan, and a pert little caricature of this foxiest of four-footed vermin embellishes daily announcements. When Midwesco told the public through a newspaper ad that the Plaza, Kansas City's popular Southside house had gone first run, it was Br'er Fox that was pictured holding out a bulletin to that effect. In a listing of neighborhood houses, he is also seen holding out the Fox banner.

It didn't take an observing reporter on one of the local papers long to smoke out the new symbol and he made it the subject of a good sized paragraph in his daily column, which is just a bit more of the kind of publicity that gets somewhere.

A corking little idea—this identification mark business—and one that has met with success various times. We're glad to meet Br'er Fox and wish him a lot of luck.

Gallagher's Gag!

Gerald Gallagher, former district manager in Omaha territory, is in New York City lining up business associates to handle his new screen gag, "Screeno," which has been going over so well in the middle west that he has decided to open up in the east.

FOX-WEST COAST DRIVE!

While full returns are not yet in on the big drive made the past several weeks by managers of the Fox-West Coast Circuit, information at hand indicates that the Pacific-Northwest contingent won first honors in every division.

Frank Newman, Northwest division manager, appears slated for a $1,000 cash prize, which is serious money these days.

The Inland Empire district, presided over by Terry McDaniel, is in line for a $500 cash consideration to its overseer, while Tom Olson, overlord of the Fox Theatre, Spokane, for making the best percentage of attendance increase on 189 houses in the circuit, is reported to have swelled his bankroll to the tune of $250.

Managers reported finishing in order after Olson are: L. R. Carleton, Majestic Theatre, Yakima (17th); R. E. Christ, Capitol, Yakima (28th); R. E. Elder, Pendleton (40th); Glen Genoway, Rialto, Wenatchee (52nd), and Maurey Foladare, Liberty, Wenatchee (56th).

A later report includes mention of Homer Gill, Bremerton, and Ted Gamble, Portland, for second and third district honors; Al Baker, of the Coliseum, Seattle, second place in the individual theatre class, and James Clemmer, of the Fifth Avenue Theatre, Seattle, for an outstanding position.

Charles Skouras will shortly arrive in Seattle to make awards and explain details of a new contest.

COAST PREVIEW OF PRISON FILM TOOK PLACE IN A JAIL

The latest style in previews out on the coast is jail settings for pictures that deal with criminology. The instance we have in mind dealt with "Last Mile"; executives of World Wide were the hosts, and the theatre a Los Angeles County gaol. Mike Newman, exploitation manager, and Lon Young, publicity man, engineered this unusual stunt with the help of a genial sheriff.

Nearly 400 persons, made up largely from exhibitor ranks, gathered in the trustie's dining room for the particular purpose of becoming impressed with realism. According to report, a majority of the audience, particularly the women, made plain their enjoyment of the affair. Invitations in the form of a subpoena from the sheriff's office were sent exhibitors. These carried a signed statement from the sheriff concerning the picture's theme and his invitation to see it at the county jail.

Well, there you are boys—go see your favorite sheriff and hold a preview for the newspaper boys, sob sisters or anyone else who might be induced to provide some free space. With the above stunt as a starter, a wealth of exploitation ideas should result from this picture of prison life in the raw. The sheriff shouldn't object to a little publicity, particularly around election time.

DOUGLAS GEORGE IS TURNING OUT NICE ART WORK IN PHILLY

Doug. George, who used to put 'em over for Warner Bros. out in Portsmouth, Ohio, has been turning out some nice work down at his new assignment, the Palace Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. This time we are privileged to present two of his creations.

The front for "As You Desire Me" was built with a rounded effect, with heads of Garbo six and one-half feet high. The rounded sides, carrying the heads, were fourteen feet high by eight feet wide. The banners were flittered and the sidewalks painted green and white in tile effect for coolness, with the cool idea further stressed by signs at either side of the box office. Note that the shorts were also played up on the long, narrow panels that flank the cashier's window.

The attractive inside frame made for "What Price Hollywood" was fashioned with corrugated chromium plating, followed with green foil paper; then a half-inch strip of white, followed with gold foil. The plaques were covered with black velour and the still pockets flittered.

According to the photos George is certainly living up to his reputation for producing attractive displays and we're glad of the opportunity to present additional evidence of his fine work. We'll be looking for more and, also, some news concerning exploitation at the Palace.

START CHECKING PACKAGES!

Between now and the Christmas holidays shopping becomes more brisk than during the rest of the year. It is therefore suggested that you open a check room in charge of a competent member of your staff and advertise the fact so that all your patrons will know about it.

Women loaded down with bundles might be inveigled into your house if they knew that they did not have to juggle their purchases all during the performance. Trailers should convey this information starting right now.

Provide a suitable place for the checking of packages and see that this phase of your theatre's service is particularly well-handled. It's something that will appeal to the women and may bring many extra dollars during your matinees.

ANOTHER GROUP OF NEW MEMBERS!

HI' PESKAY

manages the Golden Gate Theatre 'way out in Los Angeles, Calif., and it's a pleasure to record that this well known showman has become a member of our Round Table Club. The name of Peskay is just as well known in eastern film circles, since Hi's brother holds an important post with the Warner home office; hence, showbusiness apparently runs in the family. We will look forward to hearing what is happening at the Golden Gate under Hi's management, and if he'll shoot along some of his ideas from time to time we'll see that word is passed along.

is located down South 'in the heart of the Blue Grass" at Millersburg, Kentucky, suh, where he manages the Millersburg Theatre, and a cordial greeting is also extended this new Round Tabler. His theatre is connected with the Millersburg Military Institute and operated in the interests of the school. We will be glad to hear how this new member handles his theatre.

is in charge of Warner's Winter Garden Theatre in Jamestown, N. Y., and he's another new member in line for introduction to his fellow Round Tablers. It's been some little time since we've received news of show-business in his city and now that Mattison is the Club representative there we'll hope to hear regularly what's going on. Shoot along some news, Sid, and we'll see that your friends and fellow Clubmen are tipped off to what you're doing.

manages the Illinois Theatre in Metropolis, Ill., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club. That he's on the job out in his town we can see by a couple of snapshots he sent along, showing how he tied-up with the owner of a vacant store to plaster the windows with advertising on coming attractions. We're glad to announce that he is one of the gang and will look forward to receiving a lot more information on methods he uses to sell shows. Send along some more dope, F. H., and we'll see that word is passed along.

EDW. C. O'KEEFE

skippers the Fox Theatre out in Billings, Montana, and we're absolutely certain his name will be familiar to a majority of our Club members, since Eddie has been mighty active in showbusiness out in his neck of the country. Unless we're very much mistaken all of us are due for some corking good tips on how to put over pictures, that is, if this newly elected Round Tabler will live up to his promise to come through—and we think he will. Okay, Eddie, we'll be keeping tabs on you.

is the manager of the Rialto Theatre, Wenatchee, Wash., and he's another new member of this ever-increasing army of showmen. When we state that he finished 'way up front in the recent better business drive made among Fox-West Coast managers, you'll all agree with us that this department is in line for some good material from Genoway. Congratulations, Glenn, for the fine showing you made among the many men entered in the contest. As a starter you might let us know just what you did to make the headlines. We'd like the opportunity to pass the information along to the rest of the fellows in this outfit.

ROGER T. FIDESTONE

assists Lewis V. Heppinger with the management of the Orpheum Theatre, Clarion, Pa., and he's another showman to join the ranks of the many assistant managers enrolled in this organization. Roger has been with the Orpheum for the past four years and prior to being promoted to his present position held down the jobs of projectionist and usher. There's nothing like knowing theatre management in all its phases, hence we predict that with his knowledge of the game and the able coaching he'll receive from Heppinger, it won't be long before Fidestone will be climbing up to another rung on the ladder of success. Regard to Heppinger, Roger, and tell him we want to know what's going on in showbusiness down his way.

manages the Strand Theatre up in Brockport, N. Y., and since his application card does not state his executive capacity we'll assume that he's both manager and owner. He is entirely in accord with all that is being done by this department and wants to do his share to help the good work along. Okay, Leo, and this is to let you know that you're one of the gang at this writing and that we're glad to have you with us. Let your fellow Club members know what's going on in show-business up your way.

makes his home out in Springfield, Ohio, where he manages the Fairbanks Theatre, and his application for membership in the Round Table Club is sponsored by our old friend and showman, Ben Wallerstein. It's been some little time since we've heard from Ben, but every time we do hear he turns up with another new recruit for this great army of managers. Cordial greetings to Nicklas and we hope he'll become another enthusiastic contributor to this department. We'll look forward to his next letter.

hails from down in Ridgely, Maryland, where he manages the Community Theatre for Owner G. R. Camper, who proposed Brinsfield's membership in this organization. We take it that Camper isn't active these days in theatre operation, with Melvin there to take care of showselling for him, or we'd see that he, too, is a member. However, we know he approves of our Club for reason that he took it upon himself to send in his manager's application. We're glad to have Brinsfield with us and now that his name is on the Club roster will look forward to hearing what he's doing to boost box office trade.

hails from the Georgian metropolis of Atlanta, where he skippers the Tenth Street Theatre, right where the famous Peachtree street juts into Tenth. He's another new Round Tabler, fellows, so step up and give him a big hand and let him know you're all glad he has joined our outfit. He likes the idea behind the department and promises to do all he can to help the good work along. So we'll be on the lookiut for some good show-selling tips from time to time from Massa Jett.

is in charge of the Central Theatre, Manville, R. I., and he's another new member all ready to step up and meet the rest of the gang. Bernard is another live-wire manager who approves of the work being done by this department and he wants to help things along by sending in some of his own contributions. We'll be on the lookout for further word from him.

is the assistant manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Clarion, Pa., a house owned by the Heppinger Amusement Company and managed by Lewis Heppinger. His application for membership in the Round Table Club is also at hand and we're mighty glad to include his name among the many assistants already listed on in showbusiness down your way, and if he's too busy, shoot a few words along yourself.

is the manager of the Palace Theatre, Lawrence, Mass., where Max Melincoff used to roam before he was promoted to a district managership; in fact, it was none other than Max who proposed Harry for membership in this ever-increasing organization of live-wire showmen. Welcome to the gang, Furst, and we will look forward to hearing what you are doing to put the Palace over the top. Send along an account of some stunt you recently used to let the good old patrons know a new showman had arrived in town.

does his show-selling out in Huntington Park, Calif., where he directs the Fox-Lyric Theatre, a link in the F-W. C. chain. He, too, has sent along his application for membership and this is our acknowledgment to another new representative of the Round Table in his neck of the country. We're glad to have you with us, Louis, and you can do your share to carry on the good work of this department by regularly sending along word of what you are doing to increase box office receipts. Let's hear from you.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

RKO Circus International
New York Palace

Dividing the entire show into a series of individual spectacles, the Circus International succeeds in thrilling both the adults and children. A full liveried annunciator introduces the performers, including elephants, stallions and ponies going through a series of clever formations and stunts, clowns running all over the stage. Twelve pretty chorines offer several routines, Tiny Kline slides by her teeth to the stage from the lower balcony, a trained chimpanzee mimics a man and amuses the audience by his feud with the band drummer, Erma Ward gets a nice hand for her one hundred time one-arm throw-overs, Ed and Jenny Rooney thrill with their effective aerial work, with May Wirth and the Wirth family copping the honors with their famous equestrian act, which is sure-fire. Mention should also be made of the fine performance of the Seven Piccanninys, whose thrilling teeta-board act should please any audience. This show should bring out the SRO sign for sheer novelty and appeal.—H. P.

Jackson and Gardner with Dorothy Adams
Dallas Majestic

An amusing radio parody on "William Tell" by Jackson and Gardner is the opening of this highly enjoyed act, but the surprise and high point comes with the introduction of Miss Adams, who appears as a shy and demure old-fashioned girl who will sing accordingly. But she turns loose with a hot dance and then a hot song which explodes the mike. A would-be Salome dance by the men stirs up the laughs also. A fast moving, clever act.

Capt. Willie Mauss
Buffalo Hippodrome

Introduced briefly by a pretty blonde, Capt. Mauss wasted no time in getting down to business in his breath-taking bicycle ride several times around the inside of a huge revolving wheel. The audience responded vigorously.

Charles Hill & Llora Hoffman
New York Palace

Hill opens the act with an expose of the song-writing craft, his comical remarks anent this business going for belly laughs. Miss Hoffman then appears to burlesque "When Day is Done," following with a splendid vocal of Joyce Kilmer's famous "Trees." This act should please anywhere.—H. P.

Detroit Fox Returns to Stage Attractions

The Detroit Fox, a Skouras operated theatre, running on a straight picture policy since July 29, returns this week to a stage and screen policy. Dropping stage and music at this theatre was the outcome of labor disagreements, first with the stage hands organization, and then with the musicians. Herschel Leib leads in the pit, and Armin Franz plays at the console.

TAPPING FEET SIGN OF POOR MUSICIAN

The musician who taps his foot on the floor when he plays isn't so good, says Dr. Samuel Renshaw, of the department of psychology at the Ohio State University at Columbus, and foot tapping must stop if the rhythm is to be perfect.

"Complete relaxation is essential to good rhythm," is Dr. Renshaw's finding after having accurately measured by instruments the rhythm beat of tapping and non-tapping musicians. The musician's time is far better when there is no muscular movement, the learned doctor discovers. But how about the organist, who produces many of his musical effects through the use of his feet?

Tab Plays Booked By Two Circuits

Thatcher and Turner, the new corporate name for the recently organized National Players, Inc., has booked tabloid stage plays for four weeks in Paramount theatres in South Norwalk and Stamford, Conn., on a split-week basis, and with the Arthur circuit at the Palace theatre, Hartford, Conn.

First of the tabloid plays, which opened Monday at South Norwalk, was "The Ghost Train." It will be followed in the same spot on October 17 by "Just Married." No date has been set for the Arthur circuit booking which was made through Fanchon and Marco. The plays were tried out originally at the Paramount theatre in Staten Island, N. Y.

Edward D. Turner, former manager for Publix in Asheville, N. C., and author of the idea, says: "We have found that people are hungry to see the actors in person and that audiences give the plays their complete attention."

The Thatcher and Turner organization says it has rights to about 6,000 scripts, of them 150 particularly adaptable to this method of presentation. Among the 150 are "Cat and Canary," "The Other Wife," "Girl in the Limousine," "Fair and Warmer" and "Take My Advice."

Fred Schmitt Promoted

Fred Schmitt, director of the Denver theatre orchestra, at Denver, has been made musical director at Shea's Buffalo.

SINGERS

New Orleans Orpheum

Reunited, Brady and Wells return to this theatre for the second time within two months and succeed in proving an even greater attraction than they were the first time. The routine has been polished, eliminating Wells' questionable song and giving him more good comedy, where he is at his best. Some of the old songs are used, including their version of "St. Louis Blues," but the high spot is a song having to do with Gabriel and his horn. Miss Brady is still a bundle of nerves. She put her numbers over with a snap and goes sentimental for "How Can You Be So Happy" and "A Fool in Love." Both were done in the same manner which made "I Got Him Off My Hands" so powerful on the last previous visit. They encored with "Sadie Green."

Francis Langford
Brooklyn Paramount

This well known radio star "clicked" with the audience here as she did the previous week at the New York Paramount. Her deep-throated "blues" voice and pleasing delivery brought very good applause at the finish.

Miss Langford, accompanied by Dick Liebert at the stage organ, sang "Love Me Tonight," and that rhythmic tune, "Under the Harlem Moon."—E. D.

Schuster and Tucker
Baltimore Hippodrome

Pianist and singer offer songs and imitations of famous radio personalities. They first offered "Got No Hard Luck Now," then go into imitations of Floyd Gibbons, Rudy Vallee, Little Jack Little, Benny Lubin singing "Tip Toe Through the Tulips," Helen Kane singing "I Wanna Be Loved by You," Bing Crosby, Morton Downey, Kate Smith, and also do an argument between Roosevelt and Smith.

Donovan Girls and Bishop
New Orleans Orpheum

This is a good, all-singing act, consisting of two pretty girls and a man. Their routine is well worked and the act is short enough to avoid monotony.

Shellman (2)
Baltimore

Songs she offered included "Shanty in Old Shanty Town," "It Was So Beautiful," "River, Stay Way From My Door," "Moon Comes Over the Mountain." They gave her an ovation after every song.

Sanford's "Show Boat" To Tour Picture Houses

Bobby Sanford, producer of the shows which plied the Hudson on the Hudson River Night Line Boats during the summer, now has the show touring the East in straight picture houses.

The company has been meeting with success on its one-week engagements which are played on a percentage basis.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL

Guy Lombardo and Orchestra
New York Paramount

Lambardo and his band offer a routine of typical Lombardo rhythm, opening with Berlin's "Say It Isn't So," with brother Carmen singing the vocal chords, followed by a vocal trio doing a novelty, "Pink Elephants." Another round of popular tunes played as a medley and into the finale in which Guy's band is augmented by members of the pit orchestra who are seen in the background. Pleasing music, but Lombardo should have more novelty for stage work.—H. P.

Will Osborne and Orchestra (14)
New York Loew's State

The popular radio star and his versatile orchestra give the audience a great act, entertaining instrumentally, novelty and vocally.

Will himself does most of the singing, but a number of the boys come in for their share of applause for their own efforts. Will's fine voice is heard in the singing of "When Day Is Done," "Nobody's Sweetheart," "Say It Isn't So" and "Shantytown." A hot rendition of "St. Louis Blues" closes this good turn.—E. D.

Balalaika Sextet
Buffalo Buffalo

Unusual Balkan instruments, plus weird pseudo-Russian costumes, false beards and clowning with the numerous stooges in Charlie Foy's "Bughouse" revue, make this an act out of the ordinary. The sextet, besides occupying a featured spot, where it drew a good hand, also was used to good advantage in providing musical background for other numbers.

COMEDY

Trado Twins
New York Loew's State

These two young fellows put over 12 minutes of comedy, song and dance. Their forte is their snappy tapping, but their amusing comedy antics go over well, too. The highlight of the turn is when one sits on the shoulders of the other (he wears a long coat which covers the one below) and they do pantomime comedy, walk and dancing that wins plenty applause. These personable boys have a good, clean act that is entertaining to the youngsters and oldsters.—E. D.

Ritz Brothers
New York Paramount

Dressed in the togae of ancient Roman farmers, this comedy trio arouse plenty of laughter in their efforts to follow and interpret the dances suggested by the music of the pit orchestra. A takeoff on Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde and Frankenstein proves a howl, after which the trio go into a three-in-one collegiate novelty dance. They click strongly.—H. P.

Sophie Tucker at Paramount Hotel

Sophie Tucker, who has recently appeared on the stage of numerous film theatres, has signed a contract for 20 weeks at the Paramount hotel, New York, where she will appear in conjunction with Ozzie Nelson's orchestra.

SPOTS & SHOTS ON BROADWAY

Mills, Kirk and Martin, who have been rebooked into the State in New York after having played this house six weeks ago, are rapidly forging to the front as entertainers. Incidentally while working at the Capitol last week, Harry Martin sustained a slight injury to his hand and walked to the Polyclinic hospital just around the corner for treatment. After a twenty-minute wait in line, Martin reached the desk where a young nurse, looking up for the first time, said, "Sorry, sir, but all I handle is maternity cases."—Harry found another line.

Now that they have her under contract for a picture, Paramount may induce Kate Smith to change her theme song to "When the Moon Comes Over the Para-Mountain."

After an absence of several weeks, Abe Lyman and his orchestra have been rebooked into the Capitol where he holds the record of a four consecutive weeks holdover.

Two huskies were struggling to get a large packing case up to Borah Minnevitch's dressing room at the Paramount. "What have you got in there?" we asked. "Pictures of ourselves taken in Paris," answered the former bearded youth. "Forty thousand of them."

Al Bernard, the minstrel man, who first worked for WEAF back in 1921, has resigned from that station to broadcast over the entire NBC network every Tuesday, as a sustaining feature. With him are Bill Shelley, interlocutor, and a ten piece band headed by Joseph Stowpack.

Walter Winchell thinks that Morris, the Palace backstage elevator boy, should take care of the out-of-work actors by paying back their loans to him. Including tips, Morris realizes about twenty dollars a week.

Al (Top o' the Morning) Woods is going into his third successive year broadcasting every morning over WOR. Al is considering several offers to appear in vaudeville.

Charlie Ahearn and his Millionaires, who have just returned from a successful invasion abroad, open for Loew this week at the Metropolitan.

Last Sunday we happened to listen to Major Bowes' broadcast over the radio and the program was almost identical with that on the Capitol stage. That set us wondering if others have learned of this and attend the Capitol only via the radio.

HERMAN PINCUS

Monogram in Song Tieup

Monogram Pictures has effected a tieup with Sherman-Clay, music publishers, for day and date window displays of the song "Maybe, Perhaps," and the showing of the film "The Girl from Calgary," in which the number is sung.

DANCERS

Harry and Dorothy Dixon
New York Paramount

This team offer a cleverly routined comedy acrobatic dance which is favorably received. they follow with an acrobatic bit in which Dorothy does a spread-eagle hand-walk, while Harry offers a similar feat but rests his weight entirely on his forearm, a difficult and appreciated stunt.—H. P.

Stone and Gibbons
Buffalo Hippodrome

Bernice and Matt work so easily that their act looks simpler than it is. Mixture of ballroom, adagio, acrobatic and solo dancing leaves no listless moments. The Four Marvels, buxom lasses, fill in as chorus and offer a number or two on their own. They drew an enthusiastic hand.

Gomez and Winona
New York Capitol

This team, who have made quite a reputation in this part of the country for their interpretative dances, offer two graceful routines which earn them a hearty reception. The audience wanted more.—H. P

Chilton and Thomas
Detroit Michigan

These two stars of Jolson's "Wonder Bar" have everything expected in a good dance act—originality, personality and talent. While the girl taps out rhythm on the piano, and adds to the scenery, the boy does light footwork on inverted dinner plates, a rain-patter impression number and a fast tap on three graduated pedestals. The act closes with the girl throwing high, fast kicks.

ACROBATICS

Four Ortons
Detroit Fisher

This is a thoroughly balanced act—balanced on a tight wire. The four Ortons are a clown, a girl and two men. The girl sits on a two-legged chair balanced on the wire. One of the men makes two unsuccessful attempts to leap from one end of the wire through a paper covered hoop to the other end of the wire. The clown has several funny bits which almost of themselves constitute an act. He parades across the stage like a toy soldier followed by a goose dressed in boots and tunic; he appears again in a rig resembling the Toonerville Trolley which seems to be drawn by the goose, and which is boarded mid-stage by a small pig; and he gallops along the tight wire in a manner that clearly shows he is suspended from the boarders by a wire and hook. The act is well applauded.

Amalgamated Books Three Independents

Fally Markus, booking for Amalgamated Vaudeville Agency, has added to his books M. J. Berman's Myrtle theatre, Brooklyn, with three of the acts on a five-act bill. The New at Hammels, Long Island, will have four acts and the Essex, Newark, will have five.

ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York Flushing Keith) again proves himself the most entertaining part of the bill. Bernie has a concoction of good singing numbers, comedy, a variety of novel parody choruses and best of all, that appealing intimacy that always gets them and is the essential reason for his huge success at this house. Opening as usual with the stirring strains of "Voice of the RKO," Bernie played a number made up of bits from opera, classics, popular and jazz tunes and then went into the business of "welcoming" the audience in his own fashion. A varied program of singing numbers had everyone lustily joining in. These were: "Put Out the Lights," "As You Desire Me," "Whispering," "Blue Heaven," "Everyone Says I Love You" (with a parody that won plenty of laughs), "I'm Yours for Tonight," and a final chorus of "Couldn't Say Goodby."

CLARENCE LEVERENZ (Kalamazoo State) offered a "Parade of Popular Songhits" as his current solo, and certainly did well with it. Opening with a trumpet and drum fanfare, there came these numbers: "Got the South in My Soul," "Masquerade," and "Merry-Go-Round," each played in a distinctly novel style; "Silent Love," demonstrating solo-stops with spotlight out and console alone illuminated; "Crazy People," dedicated to Marx Brothers' currently playing picture. Special lighting effects, with explanatory titles on effect slides, enhanced the program. The solo was acclaimed as the most outstanding in the popular "boy-organist's" career.

AL GULLICKSON (Milwaukee Warner) offered in a recent organ number "Was That the Human Thing to Do?" with words set to the tune all beginning with the letter "s," "A Shanty in Old Shanty Town," "Many Happy Returns of the Day," to which Al set his own words thanking the audience for joining him in observing his 1,500th performance, "I Don't Know Why," and "Paradise" in the form of a humorous parody. Al uses the microphone and has a big following.

BOB DEMMING (Buffalo Century) offered "The Straw Vote" for his initial solo under the new policy. Roosevelt backers were asked to sing first, while "A Shanty in Old Shantytown" was played, followed by "We Just Couldn't Say Good By" for the Hoover fans. The result was called a tie, with the by this time enthusiastic audience swinging into catchy original verses to the tunes of "Around the Corner" and "By the Sea" for a grand finish.

OVERTURES

FONTANA (New Orleans Saenger) acquits himself well with an overture entitled "Operatic Gems." The opening from "Cavalleria Rusticana" is followed by two melodies from "Faust." The "Habanera" from Carmen, played as a trumpet solo by Mike Caplan, was well done, but the high spot of the overture was the "Meditation" from "Thais," played by Albert Kirst, Jr. Despite the handicap of a piano introduction that sounded more like "La Boheme" in a frivolous moment than Massenet at his best, Kirst put over his violin solo beautifully, and the audience appreciated it. The closing was part of the ballet music from "La Gioconda." Fontana conducts with the dignity of the old school conductors, not as an acrobat. The lack of a trombone in the orchestra was felt and there were times when reeds and brass could have been better, but the strings acquitted themselves excellently. The entire orchestra took a bow.

CHARLES PREVIN (Brooklyn Paramount), guest conductor here for the past four weeks, again offered an entertaining overture. This week's is entitled "Operatic Melodies," and, as its name implies, incorporates outstanding bits of the most popular operatic numbers. These numbers were: "Tannhauser," "Il Trovatore," "Carmen," "Evening Star," from Tannhauser; "Nibelngen March" and a grand finale of "Faust."

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) pays a tribute to the living masters with an overture composed of outstanding selections. While the works of a master are being played his portrait is flashed from a framed portion of the screen. The overture is of unusual length and includes Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in C Sharp Minor," Paderewski's "Minuet," Sigmund Romberg's "Deep in My Heart" and "Drinking Song," Kreisler's "Tembourin Chinois," Friml's "Indian Love Call" and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue."

CHARLES MANNING (Buffalo Buffalo), announced as "Christopher Columbus," presented a medley of Italian classical and semi-classical airs dedicated to the discoverer, and the Shea's Buffalo symphonic ensemble received an unusually enthusiastic hand. Blending of the airs, such as "O Sole Mio" and the "Anvil Chorus" from "Il Trovatore," was an effective job, and the actual use of anvils, from which emanated blue lights at the proper notes, marked a touch of showmanship that the audience liked.

Richardson's Handbooks on Projection

IN THREE VOLUMES

Universally accredited as the best and most practical treatise ever published on projection and the many problems daily confronting the man in the projection room. The remedy for hundreds of every day perplexing annoyances is explained in detail and in simple language.

Volume 1-2 is devoted to the general subject of projection including its allied activities, but without information on sound. Volume 3 deals exclusively with sound. All three volumes are profusely illustrated and contain over 1400 pages of information and helps. Each volume contains Richardson's famous Question and Answer Series.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 148.—(A) Explain, in some detail, just why alternating current will provide far less illumination for projection than will an equal amperage of direct current, other things being equal. (B) Tell us, so far as you know, just why a.c. provides a different color or tone of light than does d.c., using an arc, of course. (C) Is the light from either a.c. or d.c. continuous in brilliancy? (Better think that over.)

Answer to Question No. 140

Bluebook School Question No. 140 was: "(A) Just what, if any, relations are there between electricity and magnetism? (B) Explain just what polarity is? (C) Tell us, so far as you can, just how it is possible to obtain power from a machine called a motor, at a point far distant from the electric generator?"

There were many excellent answers. I have noticed of late a decided improvement in the answers of the large number of those who reply regularly each week, but never sufficiently well to merit the inclusion of their names in the printed list. That shows they are benefitting by the study this "school" has helped to encourage. Those answering acceptably this week are:

S. Evans and C. Rau, S. G. Williams, Lester Borst, Bill Doe, R. J. Arntson, Ira Harper, G. E. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, S. D. Love and W. Love, J. Wentworth, Nic Granby, D. Goldberg and L Hutch, H. D. Schofield, H. B. Coates, N. McGuire, S. G. Williams, G. Tinlin, S. Howard and D. L. Kurts, H. Edwards, A. Jones and B. L. Banning, D. L. Monehan and L. B. Bryant. D. Anderson, L. T. Tobey, P. Oleson, A. Wells, A. Breaston and L. Haber, F. F. Franks, A. Geibto, L. D. Simmons, J. Williams, D. D. Davis and L. Thomas, D. K. Ormie and B. Jones, R. D. Konley and S. Maybe, J. Hendershot and L. G. Gregeson, D. Michealson, P. K. Daniels and P. L. Day, T. Davis and T. Lambert, J. Billings, R. Geddings and L. Grant, B. L. and H. D. Palmer, D. V. Peterson, H. Rogers, D. U. Granger, D. L. Sinklow, M. H. Lonberger, J. H. Rathburn and D. Little, L. M. Richards, D. L. Mason, D. Singleton and J. B. Buckley, E. Rymer and B. L. Tanner, T. McGruder, G. Deckson, F. Ferguson, K. L. Knight, T. Davis and D. Lambert, T. Taylor and C. Ray, R. Singleton and M. L. George, T. Murphy, P. R. Fox, D. L. Wexler, L. D. Rubin and M. B. Greig, T. M. Vinson, M. Spencer and D. T. Arlen, G. K. Berger and H. R. Baldwin.

I think that on the whole J. Wentworth gives us the best discussion on Section A. He says:

"Since the best scientists on earth have as yet been unable to tell us exactly what magnetism is, and since there are many and diverse opinions as to exactly what both it and electricity consist of, it would be rather presumptuous to undertake to define the precise relations which exist as between the two, except in a most general way.

"We know positively that magnetism has a certain effect, under certain conditions, on an electric conductor so connected that a continuous path for electric flow is formed. We know that if such a conductor be so moved in a magnetic field that lines of magnetic force will be cut by the conductor, a second force, called electro-motive force, will be built up in that conductor, and that thereupon a force called electric current will pass along that wire, which same may be caused, through the medium of e.m.f. to supply power.

"Beyond the fact that magnetism may be and is used to produce electricity as above set forth, I do not believe anyone knows exactly what the relation of the two may be, though it is true many very able engineers have put forward more or less plausible theories, which same seldom if ever are in perfect agreement.

"Without magnetism, however, we could produce electricity only by chemical action or by friction, hence we may safely say that so far as concerns the production of electric current and e.m.f., by mechanical means other than friction, electricity is directly dependent upon magnetism for its existence in commercial form."

There may be those who will take exception to this answer in some of its phases, but I hold it to be very nearly an exact statement of fact throughout.

We have many correct answers to Section B, in varying words. Arntson says, "Polarity, as relates to electric current, is the relation of a charge of electricity to a path of movement that would make it neutral." Borst says, "Polarity may be said to be the distinction between the unlike terminals of a magnetic or electric circuit. In all electric or magnetic action there must be two poles of opposite nature, which poles seek to combine, else there could be no electrical or magnetic action."

Williams says, "A charged battery or electric dynamo, when in action, produces an electrical or potential difference between its terminals, which when so joined that an electric circuit is formed, sets up action tending to neutralize the potential difference, and through this action power may be produced by the insertion of suitable equipments into the circuit." G. E. Doe says, "Potential is electrical pressure in one terminal of a battery or other electric generator, and a condition in the other which has the ability and 'desire' to receive the current minus its pressure. It corresponds to the relation as between pressure in a steam boiler, or in a water pipe and the open air."

Concerning Section C, T. Van Vaulkenburg says, "In many respects the motor is merely a dynamo in reverse. The generator or dynamo produces e.m.f., or pressure, by the fact that by applied external power, it forces certain electric conductors to cut across lines of magnetic force in a field built up by its magnet or magnets. This e.m.f. causes current to be conveyed along or through wires, or a wire to which a motor is attached at some distance from the generator. There, by means of magnets and the application of current forced through the motor coils by said e.m.f., another magnetic field is set up, which same acts upon the wires of the motor rotor in such manner as to cause them to move through the said field. This pulling effect is sufficient to move the coils, and therefore the rotor, against the pressure of such load as the motor is rated for; and thus means is provided for the production of power by a motor located almost any reasonable distance from the power source—the dynamo."

Well, now that is an entirely new way of telling the story, and it seems to me to be unique and entirely correct. What do you chaps think of it?

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

Decentralized Theatre Operation

By Martin Quigley

THE dominating significance of the resignation of Mr. Sam Katz from the Paramount Publix organization is the fact that this resignation marks the end of that vast trend toward the circuiting of theatres nationally which for a time threatened to overwhelm the industry.

Mr. Katz, since his great initial success with a local chain of theatres in Chicago, has been the industry's chief advocate and promoter of the plan to establish and maintain a nation-wide circuit of theatres, including, if possible, several thousand houses. It was Mr. Katz's theory that a vast chain of theatres under centralized executive direction, standardized in operation and conforming generally to a uniform policy, would provide the instrument with which to stabilize the industry, control production, and generally attain the best results possible out of the business of motion pictures.

Mr. Katz brought to the execution of his plan one of the finest business intelligences which has been disclosed in any leading industry in a decade. And to this intelligence were added an extraordinary capacity for work and an unusually keen talent for organization.

But all of these qualities of business leadership were not adequate for the realization of the plan for the simple reasons that the plan itself is actually unworkable, and in addition it constantly stood at violence against many of the best interests of the industry and the motion picture. Every gain made by his plan represented a loss with respect to the fullest development of the industry and the motion picture.

The essential weakness of the vast theatre circuit idea was that it sought to regiment the motion picture and the personnel of the industry. It sought national chain-store operation for theatres. It sought to make production and production activities conform with the bottle-neck requirements of the executive management of the circuit. It sought to control the motion picture and the industry through the arbitrary buying power of a single entrenched interest.

In a form of human activity where individual initiative and enterprise count most it aimed to introduce standardized methods which were more suggestive of the Ford factory than the show business. It was an idea characteristic of the boom days of mass production, mass operation and grand scale activity generally, and, like many similar ideas, it has been found not to work.

Hundreds of times in print the writer of this article has contended against the great theatre circuit idea. Repeatedly it has been pointed out that vast hazards lie in the path of this operation.

While claiming to have stood out relentlessly against the desirability and the feasibility of the great circuit, it is freely admitted that the writer at no time envisioned the tremendous financial havoc which the prosecution of the idea has brought to the industry and to the several principal companies which devoted themselves to the creation of vast theatre circuits.

The tremendous losses which have come to this industry are all mainly attributable to the cost of theatre acquisitions and to the losses sustained in the attempt to operate the acquired properties. As prodigal as Hollywood has been, its record is a flattering one alongside of what has happened to various of the companies in the theatre field. This industry is not now—nor ever has been—badly off in production and distribution; if the losses which were sustained in the theatres had been avoided the leading companies would have weathered the depression in a manner that would have inspired great confidence in the stability of the business.

The exorbitant prices which have been paid in Hollywood for talent and material have been small-change items as compared with the exorbitant prices which were paid for theatre properties in that mad scramble for circuit expansion. Properties were not sold, they were bought, and the buyer rushed in with all of the frenzy of a person thirsting for power, rather than as a businessman making a deal.

The day of reckoning was, of course, hastened by the depression, but the result was inevitable. It was preordained by the nature of the business and by the essential weaknesses of the plan.

While the losses which have been sustained may be lamented over and while the defeated ambitions may be sympathized with, the industry as a whole and particularly the personnel of the exhibition branch of the business may regard the break-up of the great circuit movement as a real benefaction.

Individually owned theatres or groups of theatres contained within reasonable and workable territorial circuits can better serve the public, and in better serving the public they must necessarily better contribute to the welfare and prosperity of the industry. Production, freed of the threatened domination of buying power, can better proceed with its job, dependent only upon the results which may be obtained after having had free access to such playing dates as the merits of its product—and no other considerations—warrants.

The industry is returning to a condition of free and open competition—the single condition under which all of its real progress has been made.

"ON THE SCREEN FOR THE SCREEN"

by Terry Ramsaye

THE motion picture industry aggressively and industriously uses every known medium and device to sell motion pictures—and none of them to sell the motion picture.

The motion picture industry alone has important access to the one great medium of address to the public which other commercial interests would pay millions to invade—the screen. But the motion picture's only message to the public on the screen is "Coming Next Week." The trailer, worthy as it is, can sell the show for tomorrow and next week, but there remains the greater opportunity to sell the show for the next year.

All that the box office public has heard about the motion picture as an institution, from the screen, since the coming of sound, has been in the current comedies, "Once in a Lifetime" and "Movie Crazy." They are both excellent entertainment, which is what they set out to be. But neither sells the audience the motion picture.

The motion picture has risen to dominance in the world of theatrical amusement because it has continuously presented the world's best box office buy for the money—and for no other reason whatever.

In these days of readjustment buying habits are being reshaped and realigned. The advertising pages of industry and the whole complexion of the face of merchandising proves that at a glance. It would therefore seem discreet for the motion picture industry to give a thought to re-selling itself to the amusement consuming public. All of the directly competitive amusement enterprises, and an endless array of less obvious competitions for the spenders' dollars, are engaging anew in a great diversity of campaigns for consumer attention.

It would be vastly costly for the motion picture industry to set forth in printed page and billboard and on the radio the story of the special merits of the screen. Such a campaign, to be important, would run into the millions. But it would seem possible, for the expenditure of relatively little directly outlaid capital, to utilize the production, distribution and exhibition machinery to conduct a campaign on the screen for the screen that could be worth millions in institutional value.

The public does not need, and should not have, any further enlightenment on "how movies are made," any more studio visiting expeditions or other illusion dispelling expositions. The public does need, and may well be given, a much sounder view of some of the realities about the motion picture, a concept of it as something beyond the tinsel traditions created and fostered by the fan magazine press, better than the innuendo patter of the columnists and the cosmic piffle whispers of the radio gossipers. Steel, railroads, motors, the press—all these have a status of a certain substantiality in the public mind in which the motion picture could profitably share. Such a sharing, too, would be reflected in every phase of motion picture interest, from the box offices to the halls of legislation.

All of which is likely to be admitted. The problem is how something might be done about it. Such movements generally start with a committee. And matters that start with a committee more often than not die there, too. The old saw, Everybody's business is nobody's business, is too true.

The motion picture industry, compact and closely knit as it is, with the great community of interest involved, has all of the resources of skill and equipment necessary to the execution of such a project. If it could in some manner get one capable production man, in one studio, so assigned that it was his business to make such a picture or series of pictures to go on the screen for the screen, it would get done. Now is the time the industry needs it most.

CIRCUIT DECENTRALIZATION UPHELD AS SAM KATZ QUITS PARAMOUNT

Hertz' Insistence on Policy of Local Autonomy Brings Abrupt Resignation of Publix's Organizer at Height of His Influence; Chain Idea Seen Hit

Paramount Publix Corporation, greatest of circuit exhibitors, this week officially and publicly engaged in a direct reversal of its national policy with a declaration for decentralization of theatre control. This is to be observed as a milestone in motion picture operation, re-asserting the power of the individual exhibitor against the mass machine. This represented crystallization of the moves in the making presented by Motion Picture Herald last week.

This development in the affairs of Paramount Publix was accompanied by corporation dramatics of high intensity at a meeting of the executive committee high in the Paramount tower, at "the cross roads of the world," last Friday night, when Sam Katz, vice-president, at the crest of a rocket rise to power, resigned giving Broadway and all filmland its sharpest thrill of a twelvemonth.

With a celerity and abruptness matching Mr. Katz' action, the announcement of his resignation was forthwith made by the corporation by telephone that night.

Mr. Katz went to his apartment in Park Avenue, and Paramount executives went into the polite silences, issuing words of mere formality. Broadway and Hollywood boiled and bubbled with excitement, rumors and conjectures, forgetting quite, in the excitement over personalities, the larger aspect of the affair as the unchaining of the greatest chain in the industry, and as a manifestation of phenomena fundamentally important to every branch and aspect of the industry.

At its peak of development, the Paramount Publix chain held in the close control of Mr. Katz and the New York home office, 1,200 theatres, operated by law and rule and formula at long range across the nation.

While Broadway was speculating about the affairs of Mr. Katz, guessing, without foundation, that he was going to RKO, that he was going to form his own company, that he was going to be called back to Paramount Publix, the corporation was making ready and hastening to press a special edition of its house organ, "Publix Opinion," with a news announcement embodying a statement from John Hertz, of Chicago and Yellow Cab fame, chairman of the finance committee, and carrying in a parallel column a statement from Adolph Zukor, president, the whole under a flaming red page-wide head:

MR. SAM KATZ RESIGNS— PERSONNEL AND POLICIES WILL REMAIN UNCHANGED

The official news story presented by the corporation said:

Mr. Sam Katz resigned as vice-president of the Paramount Publix Corporation last Friday evening in a move that came with startling and unexpected speed.

Functions formerly exercised by Mr. Katz will be assumed immediately by the Executive Committee of the organization. The executives heretofore reporting to Mr. Katz will report to Mr. Hertz, representing the Executive Committee.

The business of the company will continue as usual without any changes in function or personnel. Neither will there be any changes in the policies or activities of the organization.

Explanation of Mr. Katz' resignation is contained in the following statement issued by Mr. Hertz:

"It is with great regret that the management of Paramount Publix announces the resignation and retirement from the company of Mr. Sam Katz, vice-president.

"An uncompromisable difference of policy arose between Mr. Katz and the other members of the company's Executive Committee on the matter of decentralization of theatre management.

"All of the executives of the Theatre Department and of the company generally, were in favor of a complete policy of decentralization with full authority in the field subject only to New York supervision. Mr. Katz just as honestly and firmly believed in the policy of more or less centralized management and control from New York, as heretofore.

"The executives of the company believe that at the present time the interests of Paramount Publix can best be served by establishing a system of local autonomy in theatre management whereby local conditions and problems will be met immediately by local decisions strengthened by local knowledge and authority.

"Such a policy, it is felt, will result in greater elasticity to meet local needs, and the greater development of individual initiative throughout the organization. Under such a policy, alert local management will be in effect with greater opportunity for company employees, and greater advantages to the company.

"Mr. Katz could not bring himself to accept this policy in all its details. Despite the highest regard for his views by his associates, this fundamental difference caused Mr. Katz to feel that the situation was best served by his withdrawal.

"We deeply regret that this difference of opinion should have occurred and that Mr. Katz should have seen fit to resign.

"Paramount Publix is in good condition. Present policies and personnel will continue in no way affected by Mr. Katz' resignation.

"The same department heads will continue in charge of all operations. No changes in personnel will be made other than those that would have been made in the normal course of business. Throughout this wide-spread organization every department will continue to function with the same personnel.

"I have known Mr. Katz as friend and associate for over 15 years. Mr. Katz has always had and still has my highest confidence and esteem. No one can possibly regret his going as I do."

In his statement on the same page, Mr. Zukor said:

"The resignation of Sam Katz is a source of regret to the entire company. It in no way, however, affects the conduct or continuation of our business."

The situation and the tales of it drew heat and color from the background of personal relations involved. Mr. Katz, who had come into the concern as the head of the theatre department a few years past, had built his domain of exhibition into an institution which tended to overshadow the imposing production and exhibition structure. Coincident with the arrival of the depression and the fall of box office revenues the real estate and theatre commitments of the corporation created grave

CIRCUIT GROWTH A LONG PROCESS

Decentralizing Is Upheld as Katz Quits Paramount

In the financial picture, with some 10 million of dollars, came a Chicago triumvirate, accredited to Mr. Katz, consisting of the late William Wrigley, gum; Albert Lasker, advertising; and John Hertz, taxicabs and busses. Mr. Hertz came to New York and became chairman of the finance committee and an authoritative interior voice in the corporation's affairs.

Meanwhile Mr. Katz extended his activities and presently his powers into the production and exhibition machinery of the corporation. In succession Walter Wanger, Benjamin Schulberg (later engaged as a unit producer) and Jesse Lasky, production executives, variously resigned and departed. Likewise, Sidney Kent, sales manager through the company's great rise to dominance, proceeded hence and to Fox. Contemporaneously under the auspices of Mr. Katz, Emanuel Cohen, editor of Paramount News, rose to authority in matters of production and went to his present post in Hollywood.

As the current season progressed, Mr. Katz increased the concentration of his attention on production and spent his time largely in Hollywood. Meanwhile in New York, the executive committee was devoting an increased attention to the exhibition affairs of the concern, and some two weeks ago, without much fanfare, admitted a policy of decentralization of the theatre circuits, which in fact had been going into effect for some weeks.

It would appear, in the light of the spectacular nature of the meeting of Friday last week, that Mr. Katz found that decentralization was not a subject of tentative discussion by committee, but a progressively real fact of operation. His abrupt resignation was the immediate consequence. In a few minutes the corporation's announcement was on the telephone to the press and the news services. The world had the story of another great mark in the evolution of the industry, expressed in personality, personified.

Product of a Long Evolutionary Process

The Paramount Publix theatre organization has been a product of long evolutionary processes, as time goes in the speeding world of motion picture. First came First National Exhibitors Circuit, a pooling of exhibitor buying power to finance production with major stars in answer to the selling terms imposed by Famous Players-Lasky. Famous Players then, to insure "show window" presentation of the product against the competition of the great first runs of First National, acquired the Rialto and Rivoli in New York and here and there subsequently, about the country, other key city "show windows."

Meanwhile Marcus Loew, with his many metropolitan theatres, was confronted with somewhat the same product problems as those which had inspired the founding of First National. He purchased Metro and Famous Players-Lasky had new competition, to which the response was more theatre competition by Famous Players-Lasky.

Foundation Laid in 1922-23

For a period around 1920-21, what with Federal Trade Commission actions and the like, the Famous Players-Lasky theatre campaign went into a period of apparent somnolence. Mr. Zukor let it be understood for the while that the company was concerned only in a show window policy. Then presently as conditions became more propitious theatre acquisition began again. Harold B. Franklin, fresh from successes with Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, went into the service of the Paramount theatre organization, which began definitely to head for "big time" operations and a policy of taking the revenue out of the product directly from the public. In the season of 1922-23 the real foundation of Publix was laid.

The expansion reached the Midwest and threatened to make inroads in Chicago, where an independent circuit operated by the Balabans and Sam Katz had things pretty much to themselves.

The Katz-Balaban interests and Mr. Zukor's board of directors began to talk of a get-together and actual negotiations were concluded in September, 1925. About November 1 of the same year Mr. Katz transported his belongings from Chicago to New York, and from there, in association with Mr. Franklin, started in to direct the destinies of the combined Paramount and Balaban & Katz theatre holdings, which were the foundation of Publix. The new Publix corporate name was decided on in 1926, a few months after Mr. Katz entered the picture. Subsequently Mr. Franklin went west to the presidency of West Coast Theatres.

Expansion Rapid

From that point on the expansion was rapid, reaching almost every corner of the country and in Canada, and all operated on Mr. Katz's theory of centralized control and complete supervision and operation from the home office in New York. Rapidly deals were made with A. H. Blank, in Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska, and with W. S. Butterfield, who had vast holdings in Michigan. Hundreds of properties were bought from Sparks in Florida; Clinton and Myers, in Minnesota; Saenger's circuit in the South; Kunsky and Trendle, Michigan; the Maine and New Hampshire Company in New England; Northwest Theatres Circuit; M. A. Shea, in upper New York, and Canada; with Wilby, Kincey, Lucas and Baum in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas, and Comerford in New York and Pennsylvania. The Gray Circuit was acquired in New England; Walter Reade's theatres in New Jersey and scores of others, until the largest theatre circuit in the world was created, with a peak listing of 1,200 properties.

Spitz An Active Figure in Policy Of Balaban-Katz

Leo Spitz, who has assumed an increasingly more important position in the affairs of Paramount Publix, and whose name has definitely come to the fore following the sudden resignation of Sam Katz from the organization, is a Chicago attorney important in the Balaban & Katz organization there.

He became associated with Balaban and Katz at the time that circuit acquired the Lubliner Trinz interest in 1925. Maintaining a law office in Chicago, Mr. Spitz acts in an important executive capacity in the affairs of several circuits associated with Balaban and Katz as general counsel of that company. Although he is not a member of the B. & K. board of directors, it is known that Mr. Spitz has taken an active part in the deliberations of the board. His work as general counsel has brought him into contact with various phases of the industry and he was an important factor in the recent difficulties with union operators in Chicago.

Since the entrance of John Hertz into the affairs of Paramount, Mr. Spitz, long a close friend, is reported to have been working closely with Mr. Hertz on the business problems of the organization. Mr. Spitz has been traveling regularly between New York and Chicago during the past four months.

Mr. Spitz was born June 30, 1888, and is a graduate of the University of Chicago. Unmarried, Mr. Spitz is a member of the Chicago and American Bar Associations, Standard Club and the Chicago Riding Club.

Company Run By Able Men: Zukor

In his statement in "Publix Opinion," Mr. Zukor also said:

"The company today is being run by able and capable men who enjoy the confidence of the leading executives of the company. They will continue to function as in the past.

"The company is in good condition due to the efforts made during this period of country-wide depression to further the interests of Paramount Publix. The same efforts will be continued.

"We look forward to the same enthusiastic co-operation and support from our personnel that we have had in the past. We firmly believe that if we all continue to work with the same enthusiastic effort our future will be bright. I look ahead with great optimism to a Paramount Publix greater than it is today."

THE CAMERA REPORTS

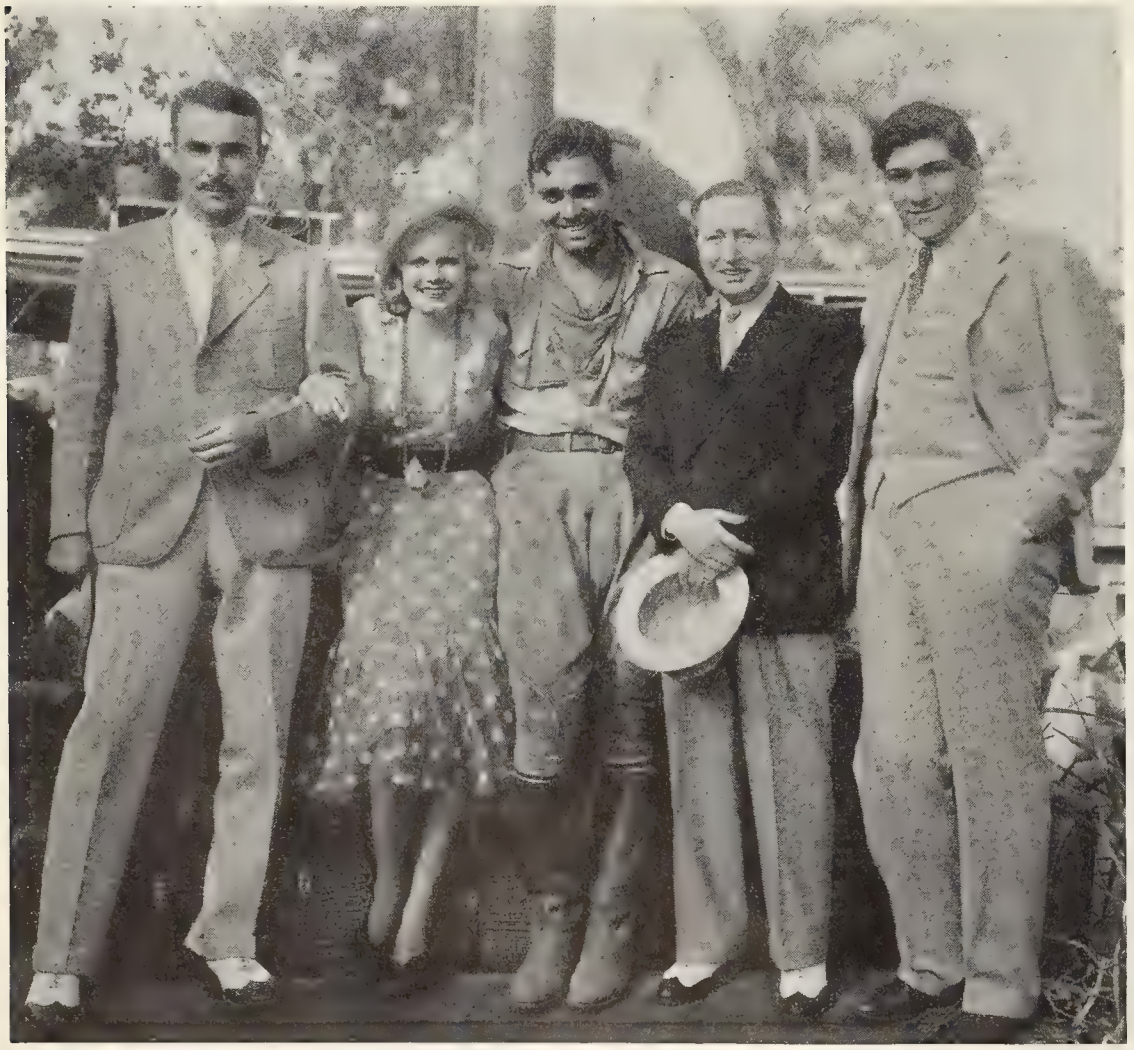
IN LEAD. (Left) Zita Johann, Hungarian actress who has the principal feminine role in "The Mummy," Universal melodrama of Egyptian atmosphere starring Boris Karloff.

CAST ANEW. (Above) A recent personality study of Kay Francis, Warner featured player, who follows an assignment opposite William Powell with a role opposite George Brent in "The Keyhole."

VACATIONING. (Right) Dorothy Jordan, MGM featured player, as she returned to the good earth following a plane trip from the Pacific to sojourn in New York.

WHERE THE NEXT WILL COME FROM. Frank Buck, author of "Bring 'Em Back Alive," showing Armand Denis, director of "Goona Goona," the locale of the next Buck picture, "Wild Cargo," which Denis will direct for Van Beuren. As with the first Buck thriller, release will be through RKO Radio.

EASTWARD HO! Bidding David O. Selznick, RKO Radio production chief, and Mrs. Selznick, bon voyage as they left Los Angeles for New York via the Panama Canal, to arrive this week. Shown are Mrs. Donald Ogden Stewart, Mr. and Mrs. Selznick, Mrs. Louis B. Mayer, Mr. Stewart and George Cukor.



NEW STYLE CRANE. The KBS company shooting World Wide's "Uptown New York" at the Tiffany studio, using one of the new type of cranes which is said to be lighter and to permit one-man operation. "Uptown New York" stars Jack Oakie, who may be seen on the staircase.

SIGNED FOR LEAD. John Wray, Broadway stage player and well known character actor, who will star in World Wide's "The Death Kiss," forthcoming production described as a mystery story of many murders.

ANOTHER RECRUIT. (Below) Not to acting, but to the screen. She is Muriel Kirkland of the New York stage, whom MGM has signed to a long-term contract. Her first role is as yet unspecified.

TIME OUT FOR GUESTS. On the "Red Dust" set at MGM as the leading players thereof, Jean Harlow and Clark Gable, receive Bolton Mallory (left), former editor of Life (and husband of Nancy Carroll); and Billy La Hiff, New York restaurant operator. At extreme right is Sam Marx, MGM scenario editor.

IN DEBUT. The MGM production "Rasputin," which unites all the Barrymores on the screen for the first time, also has initial significance for Diana Wynyard, representing her bow to the motion picture public.

ENCORE. (Below) A prodigal study of Gwili Andre, one of the screen's newer personalities, whom Fox has cast importantly in "Man and Wife," wherein she is twice-troublesome as "the other woman."

THE TECHNOLOGY OF ROMANCE. That is to say, a love-in-the-garden scene as the cinematographer sees it in the course of his day's work. This scene, by the way, is for "Call Her Savage," Clara Bow's first Fox picture, and shows Miss Bow and Monroe Owsley. The star's leading men number three in the production.

ALL A GAMBOL. Members of the Lambs Club appearing in Columbia's "Lambs Gambol," as John N. Garner, Vice-Presidential candidate, visited them. Among those shown, besides Mr. Garner, are William Roselle, Burton Holmes, Walter Armin, Edward Ellis, Jimmie Savo, Hugh Cameron, Ralph Whitehead, and Joseph Santley.

SOLVES ADMISSIONS BY AIDING CHILDREN

Ray Branch at Hastings, Mich., Admits All Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls at Theatre's Regular Juvenile Admission

A novel working arrangement with the Boy Scouts of America and the Camp Fire Girls has been evolved by Ray Branch, secretary-treasurer of Hastings Strand Theatre, Inc., of Hastings, Mich., to solve the complicated problem of the 12 years of age dividing line for juvenile admissions. But Mr. Branch has found that his plan does more than that. It also has more than doubled children's attendance at the Strand; increased the receipts from adult patronage, expanded the membership of the Boy Scouts of Hastings five times above its former total, and finally it has been a powerful force for community goodwill.

Mr. Branch's thought reached farther than the one of clarifying the situation regarding juvenile admission age. He writes: "I knew of several instances where boys were telling us that they were under 12 years of age and enjoying the privilege of children's admission to the theatre." This he realized also: "Every town or city has its quota of poor boys that are over the age limit (granting, of course, that we take the age-old custom that 12 years is the dividing line), and these boys and girls want to attend the movies, but can't because of finances." But further than that: "The big question that has always been uppermost in my mind is that this entire business is nothing but a habit for movie patrons. Once you get the public out of the habit they can easily stay away, and by the same token if you can get them into the habit they will come, and this should apply to the child as well as the adult."

Calls Scout Executive

To place this philosophy in action, Mr. Branch called in the executive of the Boy Scout council and the project was arranged. A general assembly of Boy Scouts was summoned. Mr. Branch explained the plan "by reminding the boys that one of the strictest rules of their order was to always tell the truth." And a boy cannot become a Scout until he is 12 years old, so that when a lad wearing a Scout uniform enters a theatre it is obvious to the management that he is at least of that age.

Here is how the system works, in Mr. Branch's own words:

"We present what we call a special privilege card to each boy who is a member of the Scouts in good standing, which entitles him to the benefit of the child admission price. And let me say here that you are not stipulating the price; if it so happens that you have a big picture on which the price has been advanced, he pays it.

"Each boy is registered in a book at the theatre by number the same as appears on the ticket. He shows the card to the cashier when buying his ticket and again to the doorman so that the latter may know that he is entitled to come in on a child's ticket. This may seem to you to retard things a bit, but I find that by imposing these two restrictions on the ticket it shows the boy that he is getting something special.

"And now to the real merit of the thing. We had at least a dozen boys that were extra large for their years; they seemed to be reluctant to associate with the smaller boys in their Scout work and lay down on the job, much to the displeasure of the Scout executive. He reported to me that he believed the boys were joining the Scouts just to get the ticket. So I impressed upon him that the card specifically stated that any boy not subscribing to the rules of Scouting could have his ticket revoked. He took this message to the various leaders, who in turn passed it along to the boys. The result was that Scouting has developed in this territory to such an extent that we now have a paid executive and five times as large a membership as we ever had before. The Scout leaders proclaim that the theatre is doing it.

"I get real cooperation from this group. This became so much a subject of civic pride that the Camp Fire Girls wanted it, and we are now doing the same for them. They report that they are getting the larger girls interested." (The cooperation with the Boy Scouts was launched three years ago.)

There is another factor of importance in the project. "The youth of today is the adult of tomorrow," he said. "I know there is little offered today that will attract the youth; I know also that there has been so much offered of late that drives away the youth. If this were not true, I doubt very much if there would be as many organizations sponsoring libraries, and so on, for the enlightenment of the parents as to just what is suitable for their children."

"Adult" Pictures Labeled

With this mind, Mr. Branch points out that "you will have to play ball" with the cooperating organizations "and not run a lot of indecent or suggestive attractions without some sort of resistance." This is what he did: "We promised the leaders that any time we found we had a picture that was not considered suitable for children under the age of 16, we would prominently display a sign to that effect in our lobby. By this it was explained and understood that this did not mean that the picture was bad, but it just meant that it was not of interest to the younger paron. This covered up a lot of things. It satisfied the censorship-seeking individuals that you will find in any community.

The season card is 4 inches by 2½ deep and carries a vertical line on the left side for signature, with the words "Not Transferable." The heading is: "Special Privilege Card. In Recognition of the merits of..... (Camp Fire Work or Scouting)." The text reads:

The bearer of this card, whose signature appears in the margin thereof, is....., recognized as a (Camp Fire Girl) in good standing by the.....Council and belongs to Group.....under leadership of.....

(She) accepts this privilege with full understanding that (she) must subscribe to the Rules and Regulations and that a violation of any of the tenets of same will render this card void and subject to cancellation.

It entitles above named (girl) to attend any regular moving picture entertainment given at the (Strand) Theatre (Hastings, Mich.) at the admission price of one child for the season of (1932), unless revoked for infraction of rules.

Signed.....
Manager of Theatre.

Mr. Branch adds this: "I find on a two-day picture that if I get a good crowd of the kiddies the first day, this is followed by a good attendance of adults on the second. This would tend to show that they are the best little advertisers we have, and if we can retain or build up their patronage now, it will be but a short time until they are taking the adults' places in the world and should restore the very thing which we feel has been lost.

"While I primarily, of course, wanted to stimulate my business, I find that in so doing I have made a contribution to the community that I am very proud of, for it is the talk of the town."

KIN OF MATA HARI FAIL TO STOP FILM

The family of Mata Hari, famed German spy during the World War, lost a suit last week at Rotterdam, Holland, to force withdrawal of the MGM film starring Greta Garbo, and based on the story of Mata Hari's career. Injury to the reputation of the family was the basis of the suit. Specifically, the brothers of the spy, whose real name was Margaretha Zella, sued Tuschinsky, leading motion picture theatre of Amsterdam, where the film attained great success. The plaintiffs declared certain scenes were untruthful. Counsel for the defense contended the film concerned a vivid historical figure and not Margaretha Zella.

Agnew Succeeds Clark as Paramount Western Manager

Neil Agnew, former Paramount district manager with headquarters in Chicago, has been named to succeed John D. Clark, who resigned recently as manager of the western division of Paramount distribution.

In connection with the promotion of Mr. Agnew, Charles Reagan, former Indianapolis branch manager, has been named to succeed Mr. Agnew at Chicago; J. H. Stevens, Portland, Me., branch manager, will replace Mr. Reagan and John Howard, Boston salesman, will succeed Mr. Stevens as Portland manager.

Boston Leaders Dine Casey, Retiring as Licensing Chief

Leading figures in Boston's theatrical, business and political life on Tuesday evening tendered a dinner to John M. Casey, who at the age of 70 retired November 1 as chief of the licensing bureau of the city, a post he had held continuously for 28 years.

Present at the dinner, held at the Copley Plaza Hotel, were Governor Joseph B. Ely of Massachusetts, Boston's Mayor James M. Curley, and Andrew F. Peters, Malcolm G. Nichols and John F. Fitzgerald, all former mayors of Boston.

Heenan With Screen Service

D. F. Heenan has joined the sales force of Exhibitors' Screen Service and will cover the territory of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware. Jack Cohen will cover the Indiana territory.

William Morris, Leader in World Of Theatre, Dead

William Morris, well-known theatrical manager, president of the William Morris Agency and of the Jewish Theatrical Guild, died suddenly of heart failure shortly after midnight Tuesday in the Friars Club in New York. Mr. Morris was 59 years old. He had been in poor health for about two years, although he had not complained of illness during the afternoon and evening. Services will be on Sunday at Riverside Memorial Chapel and Temple Emanuel.

After dinner, Mr. Morris played cards with Walter C. Kelly, the "Virginia Judge" of the vaudeville stage, and shortly after midnight they were joined by Lou Riel and Munro Goldstein. They had been playing, but a few minutes when Mr. Morris led a card and then suddenly expired.

Through his agency, which was one of the oldest in the city, Mr. Morris had associated under his management many big names in motion pictures, theatre stage shows, vaudeville and musical comedy. Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor, Weber and Fields, Will Rogers, Sir Harry Lauder, Nora Bayes, Anna Held, the Dolly Sisters, Rudolph Valentino and scores of other leading players were under his direction. He produced stage units for motion picture theatre presentation and was also the manager of George Jessel, Paul Whiteman and Vincent Lopez and, some years ago, of Annette Kellermann. For the last 25 years he had been the manager of Sophie Tucker.

In February of this year Mr. Morris bought out the financial interest previously taken in his agency by Paramount Publix and obtained a permit from the Actors' Equity Association to represent its members. This had been refused the Morris agency by Equity when Paramount bought an interest from Mr. Morris.

About 19 years ago Mr. Morris opened an indoor "Coney Island" in the old New York Theatre, now a Loew motion picture theatre at Broadway and 45th Street. Into this attraction, which he called "Wonderland," he crowded a theatre, a dance floor, a "Crazy Town," where he ran a Punch and Judy show, and a "Cave of the Winds." "Down the Pike," a kind of Barnum's Museum, was established in the old roof garden of the theatre. The then modern improvements included a "wild" man, two fat ladies and a mystery room in which a muezzin sang the call to prayer, after which a desert marriage ceremony was performed. Other sideshow attractions were on display.

As president of the Jewish Theatrical Guild for the past several years, Mr. Morris had a deep interest in the welfare of theatrical people. Last year he raised $7,000 for the Guild's Saranac Lake fund at a dinner in honor of former Mayor James J. Walker. Three years ago he was appointed managing director of the National Variety Artists' sanatorium at Saranac Lake by Eddie Cantor, then N. V. A. president.

Mr. Morris is survived by his wife, a son, William Morris, Jr., now in California, and a daughter, Miss Ruth Morris, a newspaper writer.

"WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME"

The announcement of the coming presentation of the department of exhibitor box office testimonies known as "What the Picture Did for Me" in Motion Picture Herald as a revival from the pages of antecedent Exhibitors' Herald is bringing forth expressions of approval from many old subscribers and contributors to the department.

Pleasantly enthusiastic is our own Mr. J. C. Jenkins, the itinerant "Herald Man" who rambles up and down the highways and byways of the nation, visiting exhibitors and recording in his own pithy way stories of their lives and their business. Mr. Jenkins writes, from McPherson, Kansas:

. . . and I want to say that if all the exhibitors who have expressed a desire to have this department reinstated will report to it the book won't hold them. . . .

. . . and in announcing the reinstating of this department, I would suggest that you emphasize the importance of exhibitors' reports as a cooperative service of mutual benefit, and that the continuance of the department will depend on the interest they take in it. Also that their reports on pictures shall be governed by the audience reaction and the box office performance and not on individual, biased opinions. . . .

Mr. Jenkins, out there with his ear close to the ground of exhibitor operations, is one of the many voices which have made articulate the wide exhibitor demand which results in the bringing of the time honored department into the new journal.

These pages can afford only the facilities and vehicle of expression. The success of the endeavor must depend upon the enthusiasm and the continuing industrious interest of the exhibitors who desire to mutually create this service for themselves and their fellow exhibitors. Sincere observance of its constructive purposes can make it of service to the whole industry.

NEW WIDE RANGE SYSTEM FROM RCA

"High Fidelity" Recorder Is Announced and Demonstrated; Erpi Plans Merchandising of Similar Improvements

Announcement by Radio Corporation of the availability of a new system which is said to increase widely the range of sound in motion pictures, and the formulation by Electrical Research Products, Inc., of preliminary plans for merchandising similar mechanical improvements are current developments in the programs of the large electrics for improving the recording of sound in studios and its reproduction in theatres. Wide range is the second improvement since sound started, following "noiseless" recording which eliminated background noises.

A new wide range recorder to be marketed by RCA as the "High Fidelity" system is said to increase tonal reproduction; increase dynamic range so as to reproduce sound shadings from a whisper to full effects of a symphonic orchestra; and virtually eliminate extraneous "ground" noises by a system of masking off the spaces on the sound track not actually utilized by the sound wave itself.

According to RCA officials, film recorded with the new wide range system "can be used in all types of projectors without any adjustments or changes, and can be counted upon to effect a great improvement in reproduction on even the oldest types of equipment." However, it was later explained by W. A. Graham, assistant manager of records and recording at the RCA Victor, that in order to obtain full benefits of the higher frequencies of the new system, certain changes in the sound head and reproducer must be made and the amplification must be stepped up to take the increase, including a changeover in the present style of speakers. Theatres where amplification now cuts off abruptly, or otherwise, at about 4,000 cycles may show wide range recordings with some improvement in tonal quality, he said, but in order to react favorably to the new high frequency, said to be about 10,000 cycles, these changes must be effected.

Variable Area

The RCA Victor high fidelity recording system employs a variable area, symmetrical sound track. Instead of the familiar "saw-toothed" effect along one side of the sound track, the new recording produces a double-edged, symmetrical pattern, with both edges of the sound wave said to be identical in every respect. This is accomplished by the development of a new optical system in which a triangular beam of light is focused on a horizontal opening leading to the sensitized film; so that, as the triangular beam vibrates in accordance with the incoming sound, small and larger portions of its light expose the film as it moves past the horizontal opening, producing the double-edged effect.

The sound wave image on the developed film is said to be clear and transparent, while the unused portion of the sound track is black and opaque. Background noises thereby are minimized, as are minute dirt particles.

RCA Victor claims that the frequency range covered by the new system is from 40 to 10,000 cycles. The first sound film did not produce more than 4,000 cycles, it is said.

An important adjunct to the "High Fidelity" system is the new "Velocity" ribbon microphone, which was announced some weeks ago. This new "mike" utilizes a thin strip of metallic ribbon which vibrates exactly to the velocity of air particles set in motion by the sound. The old style manufactured by RCA used a diaphragm.

Adaptable by "Minor Changes"

Producer licensees of RCA who use recent model recorders may adapt their systems to a wide range by certain minor refinements and changes, according to the company, although it would be economically impractical to change over old style recorders.

RCA demonstrated sound-on-film results of the new recording system to the trade press on Tuesday, and although little was said as to the practical application of the system to theatres and the exact nature of changes and expense to exhibitors, it was learned that the company contemplates explaining these phases within two weeks.

In the meantime, since Electrical Research Products first announced completion of its wide range recording and reproducing system, in April, 1932, the company's engineers have been conducting practical tests in theatres and studios. United Artists' studio in Hollywood already has installed the system and three wide range pictures have been made there, including "Rain" and two forthcoming releases, "Kid from Spain" and "Cynara." The first theatre test was made in May at Ed Fay's Majestic theatre at Providence. The Rivoli, in New York, has also gone wide range. The first showing at the Fay house is said to have resulted in favorable audience reaction. Even clock beats and whispered dialogue can be heard, it was said.

Although Erpi's wide range involves primarily the extension of the frequency range which can be reproduced, the volume range is also said to be materially extended to insure the full effect.

Mr. Graham said that one type of speaker only will be necessary for RCA's wide range.

Erpi is understood to be planning an extensive merchandising campaign on behalf of its wide range system. Already, Fox and Metro are conducting experiments at their Hollywood studios and Valencio Del Riccio is using the arrangement in the production of his series of Travelogue short reels. It will take approximately one week to change-over each studio recording panel, and about the same time to switch a present theatre reproducing system to wide range, although theatres will not be forced to close during the switch.

Costs have not been determined either as regards reproducer or recording changes to wide range by Erpi or RCA.

Moe Mark Dies; Helped Develop Strand Circuit

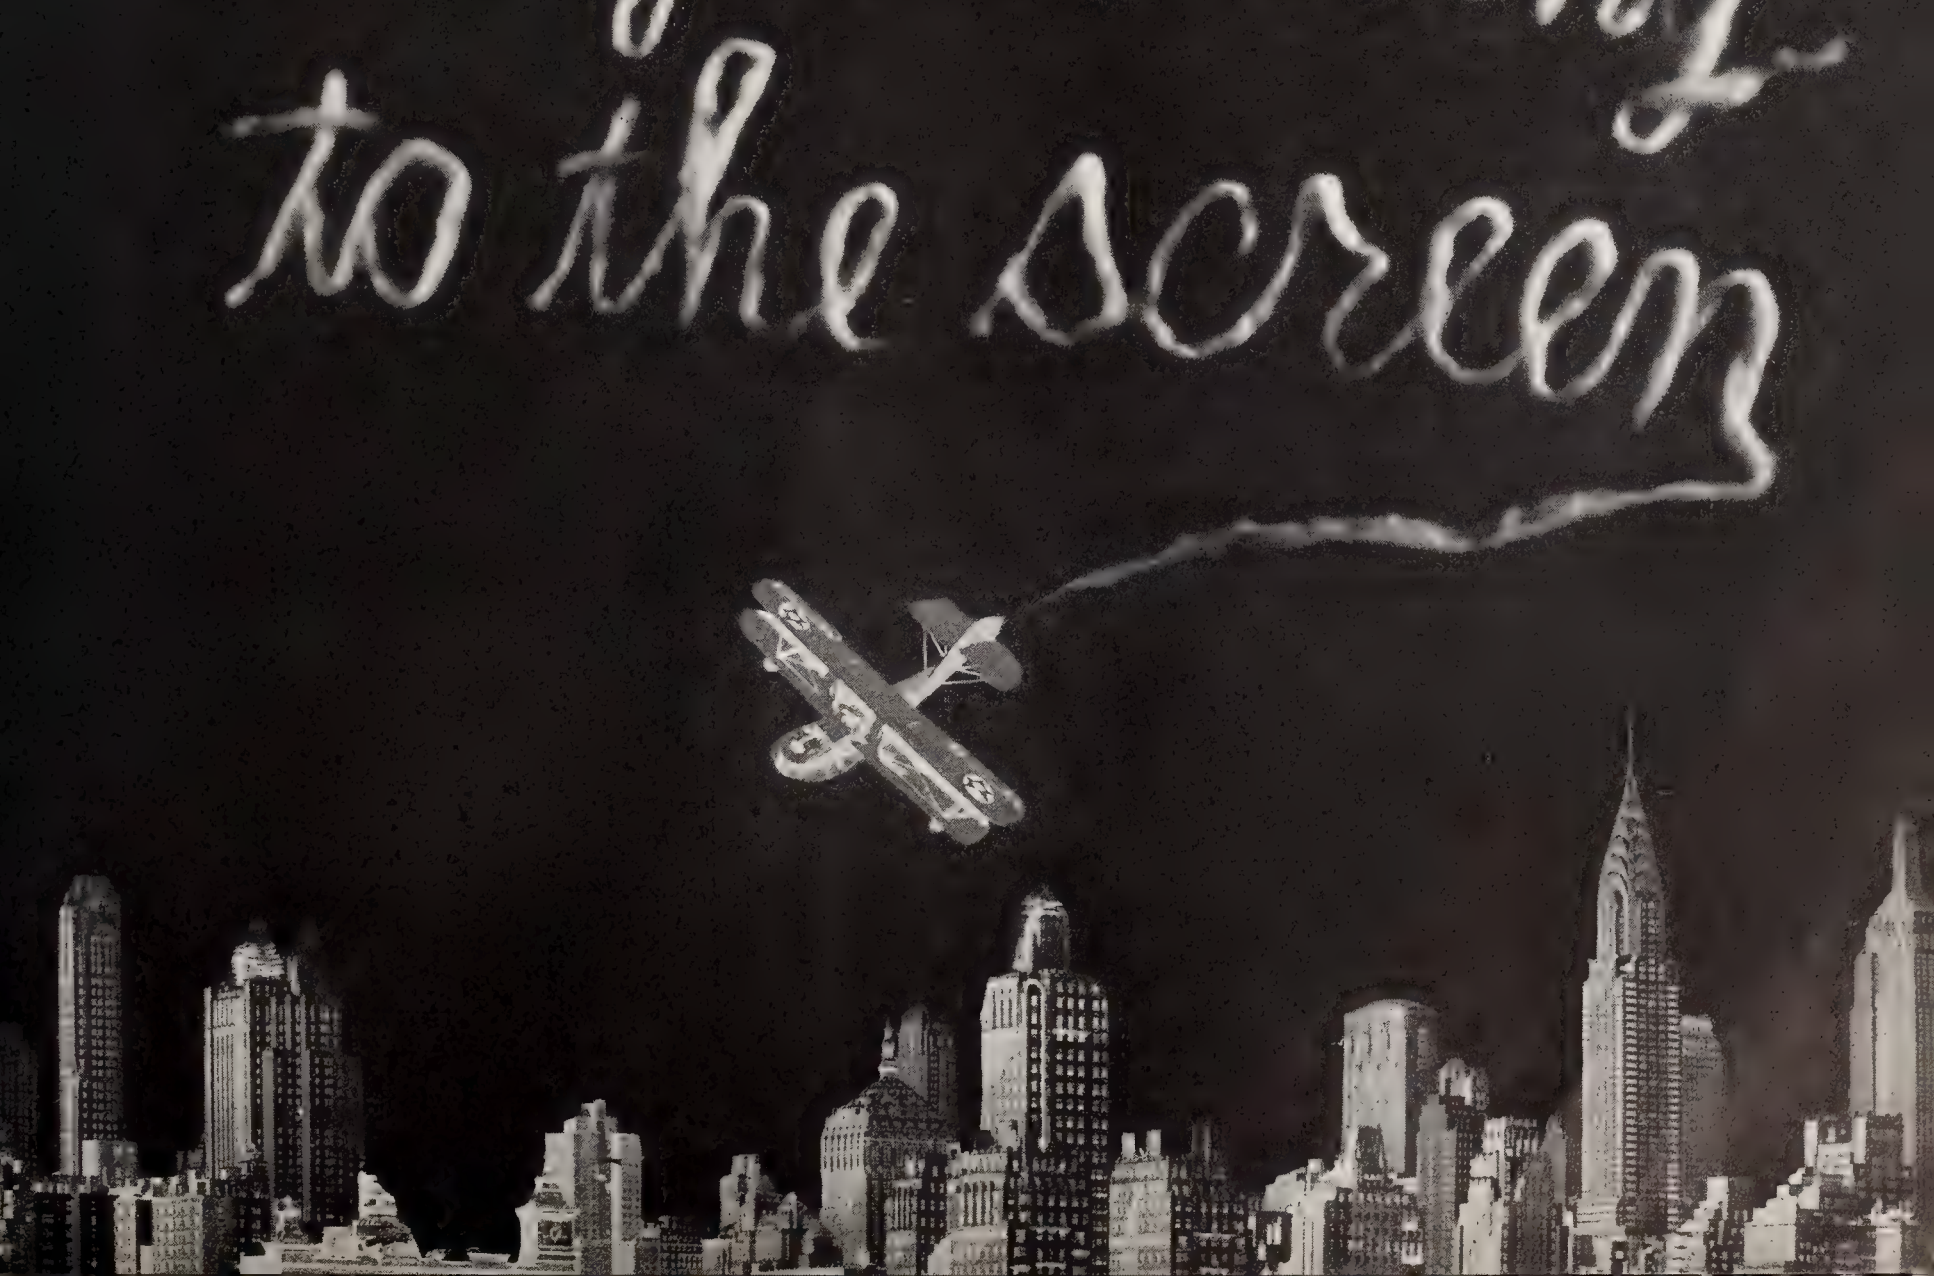
Moe Mark, pioneer exhibitor and a leading factor in the development of the Mark Strand circuit, now controlled by Warner Bros., died Wednesday from a heart attack. Mr. Mark was en route to New York from Clifton Springs, N. Y., where he had been taking a cure. He was 61 years old.

Funeral services are to be held Friday at Campbell's Funeral Chapel in New York. Mr. Mark is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elsie Mark; his daughter, Mrs. Theodore Cohn; a granddaughter, Joyce, and a son, Courtland.

Moe Mark had carried on the tradition, begun by his brother, Mitchell, in 1894, when he opened a phonograph "parlor" in Buffalo, under the name of "Edisonia Hall," and continued through two colorful decades until April 11, 1914, when the Mark Strand theatre arrived on Broadway and definitely brought the nickelodeon age to an end. Following his dime museum of electrical curiosities, Mitchell Mark operated a battery of peep show machines and, in 1896, obtained one of the first Armat-Edison Vitascope projectors. It was then but a short step to far-famed Fourteenth street in New York and a picture show arcade under the firm management of Mark and Wagner.

With the opening of the Strand theatre on the Great White Way, Mitchell Mark reached the high point of his long and interesting theatre career. Moe took up the reins after Mitchell died and continued until about four years ago, when the Stanley Company of America, with vast holdings in Pennsylvania, acquired the Mark Strand theatres in New York, Brooklyn and elsewhere as the first step in what Stanley executives intended to develop into a national circuit. However, Warner Bros. acquired the Stanley interests shortly afterward and have operated the Strand theatres as a part of those holdings.

"Universal Weekly" to Resume on Laemmle Order



Carl Laemmle has decided to resume publication of the Universal Weekly, house organ first issued in 1911 as The Implet, which was discontinued two years ago as an economy move. The first issue will be dated November 5.

The first number calls attention to the fact that exhibition "is being decentralized. The balance of buying power has returned to local theatres, as opposed to the monopolization of this power in New York. Consequently, the field in which the Universal Weekly throve and in which it proved to be for 20 years a useful marketing and exploitation medium, has returned."

Kahane Radio City Director

B. B. Kahane, president of RKO Radio Pictures, has been appointed a director of Radio City, New York theatrical enterprise. Mr. Kahane is also a vice-president of Radio-Keith-Orpheum and a member of the board of directors of that company.

McGrath, Author, Dies; Made Early Film Serial History

Harold MacGrath, the first author of motion picture serials, died Sunday at his home in Syracuse, N. Y., after an illness of several months. He was 61.

It was Mr. MacGrath's "Adventures of Kathlyn" that brought the film serial into being. The author was writing serials for the Chicago Tribune at the time. Walter Howie was city editor and Max Annenberg circulation manager. The two newspapermen saw a literally golden circulation opportunity and the result was simultaneous release of the MacGrath serial and the motion picture serial, made by Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, and starring Kathlyn Williams.

There followed, in 1912, "The Million Dollar Mystery," written directly for the screen and made at Thanhouser, New Rochelle, N. Y., and released through Mutual by Syndicate Film Corporation, in which Dr. W. E. Shallenberger was interested. The late Charles J. Hite of Chicago, who was second vice-president and director of Mutual Film Corporation, in April of that year headed a syndicate which bought the Thanhouser plant and assets. Mr. Hite was also interested in the American, Reliance and Majestic companies.

Among the many novels written by Mr. MacGrath, a number were brought to the screen, among them "Arms and the Woman," "The Man on the Box" and "The Goose Girl," Paramount, "Drums of Jeopardy," Truart, and "Luck of the Irish," Realart.

Nationalized Sales Planned by Majestic

An effort is being made by Majestic Pictures to organize nationally and thus synchronize the release dates of its product throughout the country. Approximately 24 exchanges now handling the company's sales are state rights franchise holders and also have an interest in the parent company.

E. A. Eschmann, who has been active in the distribution field for many years, has been made an executive of Majestic, identified with sales. He will work with John Weber, general sales manager. Mr. Eschman is conducting conferences this week with the various Majestic franchise holders.

Majestic Pictures has completed one quarter of its production schedule for the current season, which includes 20 features and six westerns starring Jack Hoxie. "The Unwritten Law," from an original story, has just been completed. In preparation are "The Vampire Bat" and "Sing You Sinner."

Seeks MGM Premiere

MGM's adaptation of the story "Turn About" may have its world premiere in Oxford, Miss., the home town of William Faulkner, author of the story. R. X. Williams, Jr., owner of the Lyric theatre in Oxford, is negotiating for the first showing, though production has not as yet been completed.

EXHIBITORS ARE MORE OPTIMISTIC, SAYS ROSS

Executive of Checking Service, on Tour, Finds Percentage Playing on Increase, Notes Improved Theatre Status

Definite indications that exhibitors are more optimistic were reported this week by Harry A. Ross, head of the Ross Federal Service, Inc., checking organization, who has returned from a tour of the country in which he contacted exhibitors and distributors in 16 key cities.

"There is a very noticeable increase in the number of percentage pictures as compared with a year ago," said Mr. Ross. "As a matter of fact, there are very few cases where there is not a minimum of five pictures that can be designated as percentage pictures."

Mr. Ross first visited New England, where he found theatre conditions generally encouraging, particularly in connection with a number of pre-releases that were being shown in that territory. Buffalo showed a general minor increase in grosses, with the big pictures standing up well. When he was there the only new releases were "Horsefeathers," "Bring 'Em Back Alive" and "Back Street"—all doing well.

Grosses Slightly Higher

At Cleveland similar conditions were noted. Each branch manager reported some improvement in general grosses. The returns there showed grosses a little higher than was to be expected from the seasonal increase. In Detroit the reopening of the Buick plant and the more optimistic attitude on the part of industry in general were taken as indication of better theatre business in the future.

In Chicago Mr. Ross described conditions as "uncertain." The big pictures both there and in Milwaukee were going over big but there was no assurance of sustained performance above the average. Minneapolis was reported as being in a better frame of mind, although not exactly optimistic. That territory is looking forward to improvement as soon as the fall product is released.

Grosses were stable with minor increases in Des Moines. Conditions were not particularly improved in Omaha, although the industry was found to be hopeful there.

Indianapolis did not evidence any noticeable change, while Pittsburgh showed better general business with some increase in theatre grosses. Washington remained about the same. Gross receipts increased in Philadelphia.

800 Theatres Checked in Week

The Ross agency, which checks percentage pictures for distributors, checked about 800 theatres nationally last week.

"Although we originally found some resistance from exhibitors who did not understand, as they do now, that we are a strictly neutral agency, that difficulty has been entirely overcome," Mr. Ross declared. "We never know the terms of a contract, and we are continually checking the work of our own men, who never know when they are being checked."

Flinn to Exploit De Mille Picture, Paramount Release

John C. Flinn, some time ago publicity director of Paramount for a period of 10 years, and later with Pathe in an executive capacity, has returned to Paramount to prepare the exploitation campaign for Cecil B. De Mille's "Sign of the Cross." Mr. Flinn will leave Hollywood shortly for New York to arrange for special showing of the film in several eastern centers.

Mr. Flinn achieved outstanding success in exploitation of important Paramount releases, including "The Covered Wagon," with reference to which he introduced the American film advertising methods in London and Paris, and Mr. De Mille's "Ten Commandments." Each of these films was reported to have grossed more than $5,000,000. Mr. Flinn is credited with having originated national motion picture advertising.

"Sign of the Cross" is the fifty-seventh feature length picture produced by Mr. De Mille. Since 1914, when Mr. Flinn joined the original Lasky company, he has publicized 51 De Mille films. For the past year, Mr. Flinn has been associated with Ruth Collier in the firm of artists' agents known as Collier and Flinn.

Laemmle Demands Final Title Before Production

The final title of every Universal feature must be decided definitely before the picture is put into production, Carl Laemmle, Jr., production chief, has instructed the entire writing staff, production department, and New York sales force. Mr. Laemmle has issued the order because of his conviction that money and exploitation value is lost through the general practice of changing titles before release of a feature.

Under his leadership, stories have been completed before production, and he demands the same with respect to titles. Emphasizing his order, Mr. Laemmle said: "I fully realize how busy you are. Nevertheless, I find time to work overtime on titles and I expect you to do the same. One hundred dollars will be given for the written suggestion of any title that is accepted, and every member of the staff must submit at least three."

Block Non-Theatrical Shows

A fine of $100 will be imposed against any member of the MPTO of eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware who arranges or aids in the preparation of any non-theatrical performance in Philadelphia, the organization decided recently. Exchanges are asked to aid in the elimination of such performances, which are said to be hurting business.

A NEW RATIO FOR DIALOGUE IN FILMS

Audiences "Musically Starved and Talked to Death," Says Jay Gorney, Composer and Director

Motion picture audiences are being "musically starved and talked to death," and the solution is to supplant dialogue with silent sequences with musical scoring in places where the dialogue does not serve the intended purpose, says Jay Gorney, composer. Mr. Gorney believes that 60 per cent dialogue and 40 per cent silent with musical scoring should be the ratio in the average script.

Mr. Gorney speaks from experience in the industry, which includes four years of service recently completed with Paramount, as composer and musical director both on the Coast, where he took a course in sound recording at the University of Southern California, and at the Astoria studio on Long Island, also becoming a member of the editorial advisory board in the home office. He occasionally wrote complete scripts or dialogue sequences as well.

"I grew up with a piano in one hand and a violin in the other," Mr. Gorney said. He early left the practice of law after graduation from the University of Michigan, moved to New York and straightway sold two operettas to Leo Feist. Then came a job with the Shuberts, and after that eight or nine years in writing music, for the theatre and for motion pictures. Stage productions for which he wrote the scores or the music included "Top Hole," Earl Carroll's "Sketchbook" and "Varieties of 1930," "Accidentally Yours," "Greenwich Village Follies of 1926," "Ziegfeld Follies of 1931." With Richard Herndon he was co-producer of "First Night," and of "Unexpected Father." At present he is working on a motion picture story based on his song, "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" a number in the current revue, "Americana."

Cites Loss of Music

Out of that experience Mr. Gorney hopes to see music made the stepping-stone to greater perfection in pictures.

"With the advent of talkers, pictures suffered a great loss—the loss of music as a medium of expression," he said. "It is trite to say that music is the universal language, but it is a very important fact just the same—particularly important if you happen to forget it. Music can create a mood more subtly than the best dialogue. It is the most valuable device we have for the expression of all sorts of emotional and dramatic moods—and, unfortunately, it has been lost since the days of silent pictures."

On the point of dialogue, Mr. Gorney argued emphatically that "there are not enough brains in the writing world to go on creating uniformly excellent dialogue for a total output of 600 or more features each year. As a matter of fact, dialogue should not be included in a picture unless it is swift, sparkling, dramatic—in other words, strong enough in itself to create the desired mood and leave a lasting impression with the audience.

"I would eliminate dialogue where it doesn't do the job and use silent sequences with musical scoring to replace it. Let's say the scene is a courtroom. The producer wants an atmosphere of tense, swift action.

JAY GORNEY

The dialogue is rapid, confusing. Everybody seems to be talking at once. Now, instead of prolonging this type of dialogue, suppose we imagine it cut to a few lines and at the beginning of the scene you have something like this. . . ."

Mr. Gorney's hands pounced upon the keyboard. Crashing chords thundered with rivet-like rapidity, filling the room with a climactic, impelling sound . . . then died away. Mr. Gorney turned around and smiled. "Something like that," he said.

"Or suppose the boy is about to take the girl in his arms . . . you know, the real tender Farrell and Gaynor stuff. You just can't talk sometimes, so why try? What the people in the audience really want to hear, the thing that would give them the greatest sense of reality, a feeling of participation in the scene, would be something like the soft, plaintive strains of a Tschaikowsky melody.

Points to Varied Usages

"Of course, music can be used in either silent sequences or under dialogue," Mr. Gorney continued. "It should not be added afterward, as it is now. Just as the dialogue is carefully planned and written in finished form, so music should also be developed to fit the situation, to develop climaxes. There must be complete coordination between the story and the musical sequence before the picture is shot.

"I believe that the average picture script could be constructed with a ratio of about 60 per cent dialogue sequences and about 40 per cent silent with musical scoring."

Mr. Gorney reiterated his belief that the importance of the intelligent and discriminating use of music in pictures could not be over-emphasized. He enumerated the following as among the many uses of music in that connection:

As a contrast to, and relief from, too much dialogue. "It is too great a strain upon the average audience to listen intently to recorded dialogue, no matter how good it may be, for an hour and a quarter without some relief. Appropriate music scored under occasional silent sequences would provide this relief."

As a creator of mood. "There are situations which in themselves are so delicate that they would become banal if reduced to dialogue. Direct and factual ideas are best projected by dialogue; but music can most subtly create a desired mood."

As a descriptive device. "Characteristic music well scored under dialogue can add glamour and romance to love scenes; pathos and heart-throb to tragedy; excitement, tempo and pace to tense dramatic situations, where too much dialogue would actually slow up the action."

As punctuation of a dramatic climax and to prolong suspense. "In the legitimate play, climaxes are built up and the first and second act curtains are used as punctuation and to carry over suspense. The audience has a chance to sit back, relax, collect its thoughts and speculate as to the outcome of the story. By dividing up the scenario plot into acts, with occasional fadeouts and titles with appropriate music underscored, we can create the effectiveness of curtains without, of course, the objectionable waits suffered in the theatre."

More advantageous for foreign distribution. "Pictures with substantial musical scoring are more commercial from a foreign standpoint, because the less they contain of dialogue—and the more of silent sequences with musical scoring—the less there is to translate and make understandable to foreign audiences."

Tampa Theatre Firm Files $500,000 Monopoly Action

Suit has been filed in federal court at Tampa, Fla., by the Rivoli Theatre Company, Inc., former operators of the Rivoli theatre in Ybor City, against Consolidated Theatres, which is the Sparks circuit, operator of five houses at Tampa; Casino Enterprises, operator of three theatres, and six national distributors, claiming they formed a monopoly to keep pictures from the Rivoli company, and so forced it out of business. Damages were asked in the amount of $500,000.

Regarding the suit, N. V. Darley, manager of the Rivoli, explained that he and Ed Cerf had rebuilt the house in 1929 and paid an increased rental. In July, 1930, Mr. Darley said "we were shut out of pictures by United Artists, RKO, Warner and First National. Paramount had refused us service when we opened the new house." In March, 1931, the theatre was closed after a long period of losses. Following the failure of the Rivoli company, the Casino Enterprises took over the house, renamed it the Ritz and is still operating it.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

BELIEVING victory is just around that li'l old corner, the Democrats may have a fine disdain for their opponents' idea of a a chicken in every pot, but at the stage and screen dinner to Roosevelt the other night at the Astor in New York, someone forgot that representatives of the press expect food at a dinner. Soup was served at eight, but not for the newsmen. Reporters were told to come back at nine. At that hour they were told to show up at ten. Then vigorous protests succeeded in getting a few through the sacred portals, in company with some chauffeurs, into the vast assemblage of political penguins, where they were allowed to watch the consumption of the few final courses.

One of the many speakers, while discussing Mr. Henry Ford's recent activities on behalf of Republicanism, observed, "Henry Ford . . . knows so much about the laws of this commonwealth that he will not be able to cast his vote in support of his candidate. He forgot to register." Even the New York Herald-Tribune, which has pronounced Republican leanings, privately admitted Mr. Ford's oversight later.

On the other hand, the Democratic party has a few forgetful ones, too. Whoever handled the details of the screen's testimonial at the Astor forgot to invite Mr. Roosevelt to his own dinner. That's why he did not attend.

RKO publicity to the trade announces that, besides some fine new motion pictures, the Radio studio will have a blessed event or two for the new season. Mrs. Gwen Olden, blonde hairdresser on the lot, anticipates in February, and 'tis said "she's running a race with Arline Judge." So what!

The New York Sunday roto sections reveal and depict for us our Benjamin DeCasseres, who sees the Broadway stage for us "Through the camera's eye," as the only living descendant of the illustrious philosopher, Benedict Spinoza, whose 300th birthday is to be celebrated this month. Ben is shown looking at Benedict's bust. The family resemblance is not acute, perhaps due to 300 years' difference in haircuts. And since Ben sees with the camera's eye, perhaps it is fitting for us to record that while Spinoza got famous and excommunicated by the rabbis for his philosophies, he made his living mostly by lens grinding. It runs in the family, and it is just a lot of Spinoza after all.

"And," he concluded, "if anything important comes up, I'll be at the Stanford-Southern California game."

Imagine the audience reaction in Boston to a sequence in "That's My Boy," football story, which shows a Harvard varsity team coming onto the field bedecked in white sweaters with vertical stripes! The news wires reported that Will Rogers returned from a 16,000-mile flight over Central and South America, favorite stamping ground of American ambassadors of good-will. "The people down there are fed up on good-will," Mr. Rogers reported. "Furthermore, I guaranteed 'em that if Roosevelt is elected, he'll not make any good-will trips." Will said he took "no good-will with me and brought none back, so that makes us even."

One reason for Mr. Rogers' sudden departure for South America may be attributed to a fear that he might have to help carry a daisy chain. He was notified just before leaving that he had been made an honorary member of Wellesley and someone said that he got Wellesley mixed up with Vassar.

Publix Theatre managers have been told on many occasions that friendly relations with the press return dividends. Recently the bass player at the Palace in Pittsfield, Mass., died suddenly during morning rehearsal. Realizing that if local newspapers published the story, an unpleasant psychological reaction might be created, Manager Harrison asked the daily's editor to omit any reference to the death taking place at the theatre. This he consented to do.

S. L. Rothafel and other executives of the new picture house in Radio City secretly staged an audition for organists late last week. Only six were invited, including a young lady who traveled all the way from England, a chap from Hollywood who also made a special trip, and four others, now engaged by other circuits, and all well known in their field. It was a trying experience for the little group, for none had ever before seen the immense instrument, said to be the largest in the world. They were brought in "cold" and told to play, while Roxy and his staff of lieutenants listened critically.

Miss Helen Harrison, publicist of Freuler Film Associates, forwards this interesting observation (publicity) by John R. Freuler: "The visionary wish, the practical can and the dynamic will are the three chief reasons why the motion picture producer has made a fourth largest industry out of a magic lantern!"

BURIED deep in the columns of New York newspapers there appeared the other day an inconspicuous item about the passing of the wooden ship, Buccaneer, which during its long career played an important part in the production of many pirate pictures. The sheriff stepped in last week and sold her on the block for only $460. Bidding started at $1.50, offered by a red-headed tar who wanted her anchor chains. Fourteen years ago the five-masted barkentine cost $200,000.

Ten years ago the Buccaneer quit the hard life of the mahogany trade, sailing out of gulf ports and "sold her soul," as the saying goes, for the easy life of New York harbor. Since then her career has been as stormy as the seas she has sailed, and when times got very bad some few years ago the Buccaneer was sold to Famous Story Pictures, of Hollywood. Subsequently Douglas Fairbanks and other Hollywood producers fought many a private "battle" on her decks after she had been changed to look what Hollywood decided a pirate ship should look like.

Now she lies, moored in a Hudson River graveyard not far from the Washington Bridge, one of the most romantic sailing ships in the world, a full-blood cousin of Donald Mackay's Glory of the Seas.

One night, while Baltimoreans were using her as a floating cabaret, she had a relapse, a case of remorse for her night life dissipation, and her decent feelings made a last gesture. With no one on board, she broke away from her moorings in the Patapso River and floated down to sea in the moonlight. Captain Thomas Orlando Moon, her skipper, captured the old boat, but he always said his heart ached to do so.

Appointment to Post by Kent Subsequent to Resignation From Publicity Department At Paramount After 13 Years

Charles E. McCarthy, former director of public relations for Paramount Publix, has been appointed director of publicity, advertising and exploitation for Fox Film by Sidney R. Kent, president.

The resignation last week of Mr. McCarthy terminated 13 years of continuous service with the Paramount organization. The new post returns him to the top ranking position in a department at Fox Film Corporation in which he served for a short time in 1918.

Glenn Griswold, who entered the Fox organization on February 1, 1931, as vice president in charge of public relations, will devote himself for the most part to new duties to which he has been assigned by Mr. Kent in connection with the financial affairs of the company.

Mr. McCarthy joined the publicity department of Fox in 1918 following early newspaper work as reporter and editor with papers in New York, New England and New Jersey. In 1919 he began his connection with the then Paramount Famous Lasky Corporation as publicity manager, a position he retained until 1929, when he was promoted to director of public relations of Paramount Publix. Mr. McCarthy was a member of the board of directors of the Columbia Broadcasting System during the time that Paramount Publix held a substantial interest in that organization.

Conrad Nagel Is Named President Of Coast Academy

Conrad Nagel was elected president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at the annual election Tuesday night at Hollywood. He succeeds M. C. Levee in that office.

Benjamin Glazer, vice-president; Fred Niblo, secretary; Frank Lloyd, treasurer; and Lester Cowan, executive secretary, were also elected.

The annual awards to professionals will be made at the Academy banquet on November 18.

Federal Theatres Asks Bond Change

The Federal Theatres Company, all of the common stock of which is owned by Warner Pictures, Inc., has addressed a letter to the holders of the National Theatres Corporation's first and refunding mortgage 6½ per cent gold bonds, series A, due in 1942, asking their approval of a proposed readjustment of the interest on the bonds. Under the readjustment, the coupons for four semi-annual periods would be detached and canceled and the interest rate for the remaining eight years that the bond will have to run would be reduced to four per cent.

The Federal Theatres Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiary, the Bird Theatre Corporation, acquired the properties and leases of the former National Theatres Corporation in March, 1930, and assumed the indebtedness represented by the bonds of National Theatres. Interest on the bond issue, which totals $2,493,000, has been paid thus far. The letter reports the first plan was to scale down the principal of the bond issue, but it was concluded finally to reduce the burden of interest.

Milwaukee Police Raid Office of Union Operators

Milwaukee police raided the offices of Local 164, Motion Picture Operators' Union, last week, confiscated records of the organization and detained three men, including two operators and the business agent of the union. The raid followed the bomb attack on the Parkway theatre, independent neighborhood house, the night of October 8.

Mayor Daniel Hoan has been out of the city and upon his return will meet representatives of the competing unions. Under the mayor's police power he will order the theatres closed as a protective measure for the public unless he is assured there will be no more vandalism, his secretary stated.

Universal Reports Loss of $759,646 for Nine Months

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and subsidiaries, report a net loss of $759,646 for the nine months ended July 30. This figure is reached after allowing $6,089,850 for amortization of negatives and $450,535 for depreciation in capital assets as well as for other charges.

The figure for nine months compares with a net income of $243,469 for the same period in 1931. As for July 30, 1932, total current and working assets were $8,453,871 and current liabilities were $2,350,441.

Coast Studios to Move Previews from Hollywood

Producers may move previews on new pictures out of the Hollywood territory, in the belief that audiences there are so used to previews that their reactions are meaningless. Patrons flock to previews as to a bargain sale and exhibitors are only too glad to run them from the business point of view.

Some producing companies, which have their own theatres, capitalize on previews by running them at theatres where a box office stimulant is seriously needed.

Laemmle, Jr., Calls for Registry of Story Ideas

Carl Laemmle, Jr., Universal production chief in Hollywood, has advocated the plan of Jack L. Warner, in charge of Warner-First National production, for the registration of all story ideas. He bases his contention on the detrimental effect of the "cycle" in film production on both the producer and the exhibitor.

Speaking of the imitation of a costly original by several other companies, as is often the case, Mr. Laemmle said: "These socalled 'cycles' are undermining the picture business. These 'quickies,' tossed on to the market in hopes of a clean-up at the expense of the studio making the costly original, seldom accomplish their purpose, yet producers go on cutting their own throats by making them. It is vital to the industry as a whole that something be done to put a stop to the practice."

Johnston Announces Eleven Monogram Features Planned

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, now on the Coast outlining production plans for the balance of the season, has announced 11 features scheduled for production up to January 1.

The pictures planned include "Strange Adventure," "Guilty or Not Guilty," "Young Blood," "Man's Law," "Black Beauty," "West of Singapore," "Lucky Larrigan," "The Fighting Champ," "The Rangers Ride Again," "The Return of Casey Jones," "The Ape."

Threaten Price Cut to Balk Proposed Philadelphia Tax

Philadelphia theatre owners have threatened to cut admissions to 25 cents for all performances to escape the new amusement tax proposed by the city council's special commission on increased revenue tax. The commission would place a levy of five cents on each ticket in excess of 25 cents up to 99 cents and set a tax of five per cent of all tickets sold for $1 or more. Legitimate theatres, ball and amusement parks, circuses and carnivals would also be affected.

REAL DOG-FIGHT IS IN PROSPECT OVER BRITAIN'S SUNDAY SHOW ACT

Proposal That Permission Be Not Extended Past January 31 Is Laid to Confusion Over How Law Is to Be Operated

by BERNARD CHARMAN
London Correspondent

The Sunday Cinemas Act is now law in England, and with its coming into operation the Home Office has issued a circular to all licensing authorities recommending that permission to open on the Sabbath shall not at present be extended beyond the period ending January 31. And, bless you, the reason for this recommendation is the doubt which arises in connection with the administration of several points of the act.

The first point on which the legislators of this land of the free have yet to make up their minds is the allocation of the 5 per cent charity fund, supposedly earmarked for the suggested Film Institute.

A Regular Dog-Fight

And so we enter on a period of snapping and snarling, a regular dog-fight which will extend the length and breadth of the country, and in which the contestants will be on one side the cinema interests backed by the more broadminded section of the public which believes that every man knows what is best for him, and on the other the legion of the Lord's Day Observance Society together with its satellites who hold that the best way to save us from our wicked selves is to restrict our powers of free action.

Up and down the country, in big towns and small, the cohorts are marshaling for battle, while the little local authorities blanch at the prospects of the thunderbolts of hot words which are to be hurled at them from both parties before they can make their momentous decisions. Through each battle will be continued the pouring out of public money; and burden will fall on the local rates, because our enlightened law-makers had not the courage to go all out and make a clear-cut decision in their original ruling.

So far as it is possible to translate the Sunday Cinemas Act into plain English, the position is this:

In any area in which any cinema has been allowed to open regularly on Sundays, the local authority may permit all cinemas to open on Sunday. At the same time, to quote one of our leading evening papers, it may exact such proportion of the profits as it pleases, to be applied to such charities as it pleases, and it must allocate 5 per cent of the sum thus exacted to be transferred to the Cinematograph Fund, in a manner not yet specified, for purposes not yet defined!

In any area, on the other hand, where cinemas only occasionally or never have been opened on Sundays a regular routine must be followed before the delectable state can be reached. In the first place, a meeting of municipal electors must be held. Then, whatever the result of the first meeting, a poll may be demanded by one hundred electors, or may be instituted by the Council without the electors. The final decision, moreover, is the responsibility of the local authority, regardless of the attitude of the electors. And that goes on for days and days. . . .

Though it all sounds like the plot of a Gilbert and Sullivan opera or an excerpt from "Alice in Wonderland," the matter has its serious side. How serious may be gauged from the position at Croydon, a London borough which has been striving for years for the privilege of Sunday entertainment and last year lost the issue only by the vote of the chairman of the licensing committee. Croydon has become one of the storm centers of the battle and each side has gathered to its standards all the weight and power of authority that it can muster.

On the side of the cinemas are one bishop, one clergyman, one doctor, several representatives of local commerce, Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, the Kinematograph Renters Society (supplying financial help) and the press. The ranks of the enemy, led by the zealous Mr. H. H. Martin and his henchmen of the Lord's Day Observance Society, contain one local councillor, several Nonconformist ministers and a number of clergymen of other denominations.

According to weight of numbers the cinemas should carry the day, but its sponsors appreciate the strength of the opposition and still await the issue with trepidation. Deputations from both sides are about to wait on the Council, who will be asked, first, to ascertain the views of the electors, secondly, not to do so. If the Council agrees to the first request, a meeting of electors will be held to ask the home secretary to apply the Sunday Cinemas Act to the borough, and, unless a poll is subsequently demanded by 100 electors, the decision of the meeting will be final.

An Illuminating View

The attitude of the bishop who dares to side with those who desire to be amused on Sundays is illuminating. He says: "We hope this scheme will result in pictures being shown that are really suitable to the day. We have here an opportunity to move away from a merely negative attitude towards Sunday as a day when certain things cannot be done towards a more positive endeavor to shape and use Sunday for really worthy ends. Everybody knows that going to the pictures is a means of recreation, and a means of recreation which I sometimes enjoy myself. It is also a means of education. Wisely chosen, pictures are really a means of self-development and a help to the higher sides of our being. If we carry this experiment through successfully our example may be followed, and we may be rendering some service to the whole community."

Presumably there are more than several reverend gentlemen in the United States who might be edified by these few kind words.

An indication of the bewildering comparisons to which the operation of the act lays itself open is given in the following figures of charity contributions already demanded by the authorities in districts where applications for Sunday opening have lately been ratified. The towns listed are, for all practical purposes, of roughly equal size.

At Southampton the cinemas are required between them to allocate £100 per annum to charitable causes; at Brighton, £210 for the last three months of the year (a rate of £840 for the full year); Southend cinemas must contribute £500 in a year, and at Coventry the combined annual levy for the various theatres gives an aggregate total of not less than £1,164! At Coventry, in fact, one hall alone is asked to pay £188, or nearly double the amount to be extracted from the whole of Southampton's fourteen halls!

How long a law which permits such anomalies and absurdities will be allowed to remain on the statute book is the question which now excites lively controversy. Popular opinion has a way of settling such matters for itself; and popular opinion will not allow itself to be befooled for an unlimited period. The very patchwork nature of this clumsy piece of legislation must be its own undoing, and the optimist will rejoice at the thought.

PAPER WATERMARK ENDS FILM SUIT

The testimony of a paper manufacturing executive in Hartford, Conn., federal court last week ended with a favorable verdict for the defense after five years of litigation in which A. C. Morrison and the Majestic Theatre Company of Hartford were suing Fox Film, Vitagraph and United Artists on a charge of conspiracy. The plaintiff had contended that the theatre had been put out of business through a combination of film companies, and based the charge on a theatre lease dated April 13, 1927. The paper on which the lease was drawn was stamped with a watermark "par value 100 per cent," Mr. Morrison admitting he had phrased and typed the document himself. Defense counsel held the lease could not have been signed in that year, and brought to the stand George Witham, mill manager of the Parker Young Company of Lincoln, N. H. He testified the paper on which the lease was written was not manufactured before 1929 and was not placed on the market until 1930. The lease was thereby invalidated and an instructed verdict for the film companies resulted.

EFFICIENCY DEVICES AT BUSINESS SHOW

Many Developments of Direct and Indirect Application to Film Industry Are Exhibited at National Exposition

The 29th annual National Business Show was held recently at the Grand Central Palace, New York, displaying a wide range of new developments in the office equipment and general business field, some of which have a practical and direct application for the motion picture industry's executive offices.

Featured at the show were the personnel psychology tests demonstrated by the Psychological Corporation, a national organization of psychologists headed by Henry C. Link. The tests are based on a vocational interest questionnaire written by Professor E. K. Strong of Leland Stanford University and calibrated against 24 specific occupational groups. Heretofore the clerical work of scoring a test has required almost a full day, but with an adaptation of special Hollerith-International tabulator the whole test of 420 items is scored in less than ten minutes. Three kinds of tests are possible. One is a general intelligence or mental alertness test indicative of aptitude for certain lines of mental work, another is a personality test indicative of certain traits that make for success in sales and executive work, and the third is a vocational interest test indicative of the similarity or dissimilarity of a person's interest with those of successful men in various professions and businesses.

For Mimeograph Exploitation

The A. B. Dick Company exhibited a new dermaprint photographic stencil which brings the principle of photo-engraving to the mimeograph. Line drawings, for instance, may be transferred to the dermaprint stencil which may then be run off on a mimeograph machine at the rate of 5,000 copies an hour, the reproductions ranging from post-card size to some of 14 by 20 inches. The same film also showed the Edison-Dick mimeoscope, an illuminated drawing table which facilitates line tracing with highly lighted visibility beneath the copy being traced.

A duplicating machine, which turns out copies in four colors, was displayed by the Ormig Sales Company. Without stencils, gelatin, ribbons, type or ink the machines will turn out reproductions of any kind of illustrations, statistical work or letters. A sheet of ordinary coated paper is backed up with a hectograph carbon sheet and the illustrations, figures or letters are drawn, typed or hand-written on this, thus making a master copy, or original, on the coated paper. As the copy sheets are fed into the machine they are automatically treated with a duplicating fluid which effects instant transfer from the original.

For Foreign Languages

The varityper, which writes in approximately 50 languages in nearly 400 different type styles, was shown by Varityper, Inc. The type styles range from ordinary newspaper letters to the most formal script, a twist of the wrist being all that is necessary to change the language or type face on the machine.

Calculating machines were prominent. The Ralph C. Coxhead Corporation exhibited a "mathematon," an electrical automatic apparatus which is controlled by four buttons and is capable of multiplying, dividing, adding and subtracting. The Elliott Addressing Machine Company has a post-card printing and addressing machine which prints a message and an illustration on one side and the address on the other, the cards being fed into the machine at the rate of 60 a minute.

The New York Telephone Company's exhibit featured teletypwriter service. The teletypewriter permits instant written communication within and between business organizations, making possible important economies and improvements.

Filing systems received considerable attention. The Shaw-Walker Company showed several filing systems, one of them featuring a section of a "morgue" for photographs which are so filed that any one picture is instantly available in a collection of thousands.

Church Federation Plans Previewing

Appointment of a committee to organize a film preview board of the New York Federation of Churches is expected at a meeting this month. A number of other Protestant groups have adopted resolutions calling for similar action. Since the factor of completing the previewing before a picture is released precludes establishment of previewing committees except in New York and Los Angeles, it is expected that the list of selected pictures published in the weekly paper of the New York Federation will be picked up by other Protestant groups. Women probably will be in the majority on the New York preview board.

Carl E. Milliken, of the M.P.P.D.A., said last week that the New York groups request for information on previewing was typical of a rapidly growing interest among Protestant churches in the question of selecting good pictures for their members. The Hays office stands ready, Governor Milliken said, to give information to church groups. Their cooperative spirit, he believes, will benefit the industry generally.

Quite a few of the 200 publications in the Protestant religious press are now carrying some form of film list. Some individual church bulletins also are listing pictures on occasions.

Louisiana Commission Grants Film Reduction

A 50 per cent reduction on the return of films shipped by train was granted last week by the Louisiana Public Service Commission at its regular meeting in the St. Charles Hotel, New Orleans. Chairman Francis Williams listened to the arguments presented by Howard W. McCoy, Publix district manager; Harold J. Wilkes, Paramount exchange manager; L. C. Montgomery, Paramount booker; and Mrs. J. B. Heine, secretary of the Film Board of Trade, that this reduction had been granted in states surrounding Louisiana, but that Louisiana had apparently been overlooked. Representatives of the American Railway Express company argued that the reduction in other states was only a trial and that it should not be made mandatory in Louisiana until its success had been established.

Union Seeks New Contract

The union of sound men on the Coast is attempting to devise a contract arrangement whereby members will be retained on the payrolls during studio closings. A concession would provide three-men draws instead of four. The Roach studio is understood to be opposed to the plan.

NOVELTIES AS BUSINESS BUILDERS PROVE AID TO SMALLER THEATRES

Inexpensive Articles Presented To Audiences Found Helpful For Goodwill; Used Also in Direct Tieups with Pictures

The widespread practice of presenting small and inexpensive articles to the audience as a whole, in connection with exploitation tieups on pictures or as business builders, is producing satisfactory results in the main, opinions of exhibitors in all parts of the country show. The policy is used for the most part by neighborhood and suburban houses, seldom by downtown first-runs and de luxe theatres.

This practice differs in all phases from that of awarding costly prizes through lucky number methods, with the prizes ranging all the way from large cash awards to automobiles, long trips with expenses paid, refrigerators, and even completely furnished homes. Only recently has the exhibition field begun to clear itself of the ruinous competition thus entailed. A study of that situation showed that in nearly all cases exhibitors had gone to extremes and the major gift awards were reacting like a boomerang.

A second check has been made to ascertain the extent of use of inexpensive novelties and their reaction at the box office. While some exhibitors reported negatively, due in part to the manner of presentation, theatres for the most part indicated that the use of novelties for audience appeal are an aid to business when used in moderation.

The policy of distributing novelties is also practiced to a large extent at children's shows on Saturdays. They also are used in general presentation to women patrons. Some owners make use of them when showing the first episode of a new serial. In many instances the articles are presented in direct tieups with certain pictures.

Following are territorial summarizations of the extent of the use of novelties, and the results achieved.

Depends on Gift and Handling at Kansas City

Most showmen in Kansas City find the benefits of novelty giveaways depend on the type of gift and the manner in which the presentation is handled. Loew's Midland and the Publix Newman, large downtown theatres, believe in occasional giveaways to stimulate business, but chiefly as goodwill builders. John McManus, manager of the Midland, where articles of minor value but distinct appeal are distributed several times a year, is convinced the practice is beneficial from a good will standpoint. He says the gift must be of a type the patrons will reach for and tell their friends about. Mr. McManus says that in the case of a theatre such as the Midland, Kansas City's premier de luxe house, the giveaway must be conducted in a high class, dignified manner in keeping with the surroundings and designed to leave a good impression with class patronage.

A number of exhibitors playing serials find novelties directly exploiting the subject important in stimulating children's business. These are given chiefly when the first chapter is shown. However, exchanges report this type of exploitation is less frequently used, due to the present mode for rigid economy.

HOW EXHIBITORS USE NOVELTIES

As stimulus to the box office.
To build community goodwill.
In direct tieups with pictures.
To draw child attendance.
As favors for women patrons.
To launch new serials.
In "Pay Envelopes" to all patrons.
As tieups with merchants.
In cooperation with newspapers.
As expression of appreciation for patronage.
At weekly Family Nights.

Houston Finds They Help If Used in Moderation

Houston exhibitors are agreed that novelties for audience appeal are an aid to business when used in moderation, although, as one exhibitor said, it is a thing "easy to run into the ground." Opinion, however, is divided on the benefits of offering money for prizes in newspaper contest tieups. One exhibitor declares that no contest is worth the trouble it takes to plan it unless the first prize is cash. "No matter what the amount, cash will draw hundreds of contestants, where an article and passes will draw 10." Other exhibitors disagree. One insists money should never be offered. Newspapers in Houston are not enthusiastic about contest tieups, although they do not turn them down entirely. Many firms, on the other hand, are always willing to enter into a novelty tieup, even restaurants giving free meals.

"Pay Day" Envelopes Successful in Spokane

The most successful novelty giveaway recently tried in Spokane is the "Pay Day" idea. Every patron entering a theatre is given a pay envelope, which might contain anything from a five dollar gold piece down to a theatre ticket or a penny. Managers report that this has noticeably increased business. However, with the fall season, Spokane exhibitors are concentrating on screen programs.

Oklahoma City Suburbans Find Novelties Helpful

Novelties passed out in Oklahoma City to whole audiences are definitely an aid to "B", or suburban houses, but they exert little or no influence on the average patron of an "A" house, according to exhibitors. The patronage of "A" houses is definitely established, except for variation of interest in stars or pictures, it was pointed out, and novelties are not used in them.

Suburban New York Houses Adopt Practice

The presentation of novelty giveaways in the Greater New York territory has been confined almost exclusively to the outlying districts in suburban localities, with neighborhoods in town offering small gifts only occasionally. The most numerous attractions for giveaway nights appear to be china and vanity sets.

Little Use of Gifts In Virginia Theatres

While it is true that several Virginia theatres, including a few leading houses, have figured in offers made by newspapers of free tickets for best answers to advertisements or certain articles about film stars, little use of gifts has figured in the business either in Richmond or in other parts of the state. Gifts are not distributed among audiences and there seems to be no offering of novelties to increase attendance or to hook up with any of the newspapers in regard to any gifts other than tickets. There have been cash prizes, however, offered by certain newspapers, as to best gags or compositions relative to certain productions. In fact, most of the contests seem along the lines of publicity and to help both the theatres and the newspapers in certain communities.

Found Useful as Souvenirs to Women Patrons, Also in Connection with Showing of First Episodes of a New Serial

San Antonio Uses Them in Film Tieups

While practically every house in San Antonio occasionally uses novelties and inexpensive articles in tieups with pictures, theatre managers say they have little or no box office value. Circuit managers say that scarcely a week passes that the managers are not instructed to work up some kind of novelty or business tieup. At the present time, the Texas theatre, Publix's ace house, is working such a stunt. It is a tieup with Chase and Sanborn Coffee in connection with Marlene Dietrich's "Blonde Venus."

New Orleans Suburbans Find They're Incentives

A survey of New Orleans suburban houses shows that patrons demand "something for nothing," no matter how small, as an incentive for visiting places of entertainment.

Considerable Benefit To Portland Suburbans

It is the consensus among suburban exhibitors in Portland, Ore., that novelties of various kinds, giveaways for the entire audience, have been of considerable benefit to the box office. Second-run downtown houses on numerous occasions have tried similar plans, but results were not as satisfactory.

Sizeable Business Added in Cincinnati

Comparatively few exhibitors in Cincinnati territory give gifts or novelties to stimulate attendance, but those who have done so report a sizeable increase in business. Some exhibitors use the china plan occasionally, but not regularly. When they do, they generally announce that it is merely an expression of appreciation on the part of the management for past patronage. With the advent of better pictures, the plan is not necessary, they say.

Held Down in Milwaukee In Budget Curtailment

Within recent months Milwaukee exhibitors have not used novelties extensively in connection with exploiting pictures. When used in the past they have been promoted primarily for boosting children's patronage, and have always been found successful in this connection. The majority of exhibitors feel that the use of inexpensive articles in tieups with pictures offer good promotional advertising, but with the curtailment of exploitation budgets the use of such novelties has slowed down. Also gum and candy samples contributed by the manufacturers were used to some extent by exhibitors in promoting pictures. Many theatre operators believe, however, that the future will see a greater use of novelties as a means of promoting pictures.

AID CHILD PATRONAGE

Used Less Frequently In Buffalo Neighborhoods

Use of novelties for the entire audience may have helped some Buffalo neighborhoods in the worst days of the depression, but recently they have been almost entirely discarded, in the belief that only strong pictures and effective shorts will attract a steady clientele.

Nolte Says Circuit at Baltimore Opposes Use

Charles E. Nolte, general manager of Durkee Theatrical Enterprises at Baltimore, said they have been fighting the practice of giving away premiums to gain patronage for the past 15 years. "In our experience," said Mr. Nolte, "we have found that giving away any premiums to increase patronage is a detriment to business—it cheapens the theatre in the eyes of the public. The sooner the exhibitors of the country concentrate their efforts on trying to give good shows to the public, the better it will be for the theatres." The Durkee Enterprises control about 15 theatres in Baltimore and in Maryland.

Tampa Exhibitors Find Practice Brings Results

The giving of presents, or a treat of some kind, to the entire audience has been pretty well worked at Tampa. The principal novelty present given away to audiences was a vanity set, and this to the women only. There were quite a number of items in the set and as one item was given each prize day, it was possible for one to get an entire set by coming to each change of program. This developed quite a following among the ladies and helped business.

Used Occasionally At Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C., exhibitors apparently feel that the presentation of gifts to audiences is not necessary as an inducement, since the plan is used only very occasionally and, in most instances, is a tieup with some manufacturer, say of face powder or perfume, desiring to do some extensive sampling. If a picture won't draw them in, some Washington exhibitors declare, the best thing to do is to change the picture. This has been done on numerous occasions. The sentiment in Washington may be due to the fact that all the downtown and a majority of the neighborhood houses are circuit-operated, giving them a flexibility of product not always available to the independent. But the local independents are all assured of good product.

Practice Prevalent At Dallas Houses

Practically every other picture house in Dallas, including suburban theatres, has at some time in the last few months given prizes and many of them continue to do so at regular intervals, in most cases weekly family nights where groceries are offered.

Varied Opinion Of Detroit Exhibitors

Some exhibitors feel that a small item of little intrinsic value, but with a definite picture tieup, could be used to advantage; others take the stand that any form of give-away is poor showmanship.

H. M. Ritchie, general manager of Allied of Michigan, believes that, while premiums may be used profitably in small towns where there is little or no competition, they are ineffectual in Detroit. He reported a current falling off in the use of giveaways there. Novelties for children are regarded with favor by some exhibitors. They consist of toys, such as paper airplanes, small musical toys, tops, kites and marbles; celluloid buttons picturing state maps, animals, ships, personalities and sport symbols; small statues to be colored and other similar items. Novelties in the class of the celluloid button appeal to children. Some theatres give tickets for complete sets of collected items.

Inexpensive Articles Aid Birmingham Houses

The arrangement between picture houses and business houses giving inexpensive articles has not been used extensively in Birmingham, Ala., but when the plan has been used it worked well, at little cost to either party. The idea of giving cars and other valuable prizes has seemingly been cast aside as too costly and artificial by houses in Birmingham.

Occasional Gifts Help at Seattle

Seattle theatres, with very few exceptions, have not gone in very much for the idea of giving away novelties to all patrons. However, in remote instances where tieups have occasioned gifts, the results were entirely gratifying to the management. With few exceptions, first-runs have not participated recently. The general belief in Seattle seems to be that novelty gifts build goodwill for a theatre after the patrons are in the house, but the other merchandise, as used in various forms of contests, sometimes influence attendance in the case of weak attractions or dull business.

Opinion Divided In North California

The giving of novelties to stimulate attendance at theatres is on the wane in San Francisco and other northern California cities. Some credit this to the season, and the natural pickup in business, while others express the opinion that the plan has run its course and that the public again is looking for picture value and not for merchandise. That some houses have met with real success with gift plans is an acknowledged fact. The most satisfactory premium in this territory seems to be china, with 10 theatres handling this exclusively. As a rule, one night a week is a china premium night and presentation is made only to ladies. About eight weeks seems to be the limit for a successful run on china.

Steffes' Validity Suit Taken Under Advisement

W. A. Steffes' application for a temporary injunction against major distributors in his suit which is designed to test the validity of zoning has been taken under advisement by Judge Gunther Nordby of Minneapolis. Next March has been set as the time when hearings will commence.

Mr. Steffes will be represented by Abram F. Myers and Paul F. Good, candidate for attorney-general in Minnesota.

Emmett Corrigan Dead

Emmett Corrigan, for years a stage and screen player, died on Saturday at the Masquers' Club, Hollywood, of heart failure. He was 65.

Hollywood Forces Cooperating: Saal

"Hollywood has become dead sober about the importance of its work," Bill Saal, president of KBS Productions, said on his return to New York from the Coast.

"General conditions," observed Mr. Saal, "have shown a lot of people that they had been living in a fool's paradise, and many of them are only now seriously buckling down to doing their job well. There is greater cooperation among the people in the various fields of production; greater recognition of the large stakes involved; and a greater sense of responsibility. I sincerely believe our batting average has been higher than ever before, simply because all, from the highest executive to the grips, have been working together."

Laemmle Renews Schlaifer's Pact

Carl Laemmle, Universal president, has signed L. J. Schlaifer, general sales manager, to a new one-year contract, effective January 1. The new agreement was signed without waiting for the expiration of Mr. Schlaifer's present contract, which runs out December 31.

Mr. Schlaifer, former United Artists sales executive on the Coast, had been the object of reports of an impending change in the post he holds. The contract renewal automatically puts an end to the reports.

Exhibitor Suit Against Publix Due November 14

The trial of the monopoly action, instituted against Paramount-Publix and other distributors by Joseph Quittner, Middletown, N. Y., exhibitor, will be held in the New York federal district court November 14. Triple damages in the amount of $3,000,000 are asked by the plaintiff, based on his alleged inability to obtain sufficient films to operate his Middletown theatres.

Mr. Quittner charges that when he was unable to meet the terms of Paramount's film contract several years ago, Publix erected a theatre directly opposite his most important Middletown house, and that thereafter he was unable to obtain sufficient films from all large distributors to operate his theatres.

Burkey's Anti-trust Suit Will Be Heard December 5

The anti-trust action of Walter O. Burkey against the Kansas City Board of Trade and major distributors, pending in the federal district court, Kansas City, more than a year, will be heard December 5 before Judge Albert L. Reeves.

Mr. Burkey, former owner of the local Admiral theatre, charges he was forced out of business through the operation of the old arbitration system and standard contract. Block booking is also cited as a basis of suit. The plaintiff asks $408,000 in triple damages under the anti-trust laws.

"SAM GOLDWYN WEEK"

Meehan Points to "Cynara" and "The Kid from Spain" as Distinguished Attractions

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

So far as previews are concerned, the last week might have been called "Samuel Goldwyn Week." Two of the distinguished attractions, "Cynara" and "The Kid From Spain," came from this astute United Artists producer. "Cynara" is completed and in final release form. "The Kid from Spain" is still in the out-of-town tryout stage, but a little bird tipped us off it was being shown in Long Beach, where all good Iowans go after they retire.

We are compelled to admit that it is about four editions of the "Ziegfeld Follies" all wrapped up into one pretentious package. If you can imagine how the late Mr. Ziegfeld might have staged his show in Barnum & Bailey's tent, you get a rough idea of what they let loose in this production. If there is any depression around, it doesn't look as if Mr. Goldwyn or his bankers have heard about it. Gorgeous sets, beautiful girls, dancing, music, bull fights, and a riotous lot of tomfoolery by Senor Eduardo Cantor, the best damned bull thrower in all Mexico—these are the chief ingredients of this extravaganza which is so ultra-lavish we can imagine Earl Carroll's eyes watering when he gets a look at it!

Beautiful Girls, Too

Remember reading press agent yarns from Lynn Farnol, typewriter impresario for Mr. Goldwyn, about how the producer was searching the nation for its most beautiful girls to put into this show? Well, we laughed up our sleeves—both suits—reading them. The old stuff, says we. Not after seeing them girls. Trained by that master of ballet moderne, Busby Berkeley, they do a couple of ensemble numbers which knock the spots off anything seen on the screen, particularly one which is done entirely in a swimming pool!

Never mind what happens to Cantor, or the plot. Just the idea itself will convince you it is funny. Cantor has to flee to Mexico, and there to save his face has to pose as the son of Spain's greatest bullfighter. Ultimately, he has to go into the bull ring and face old "Bull Durham" in person. Sidney Franklin, famous Brooklyn bullfighter who really crashed them in Spain, is an interesting member of the cast, by the way, and does some stuff in the ring. Able support is given Cantor, if he needed it, by Lyda Roberti, Robert Young, Ruth Hall, John Miljan, Robert Emmett O'Connor and several others.

The versatility of Mr. Goldwyn as a producer is demonstrated by his other attraction, "Cynara," starring Ronald Colman. Here is romance, tragedy, pathos. The story of "Cynara" is old as the hills—the eternal triangle. But under the magic spell of fine production, splendid direction and wise casting, it becomes a gripping drama. Colman is in a part perfectly suited to his talents, and somewhat reminiscent of his characterization in "Arrowsmith." Mr. Goldwyn entrusted the script of Frances Marion and Lynn Starling to the capable custody of King Vidor, who is always at his very best in a story of the humanities. Kay Francis, Phyllis Barry, Henry Stephenson and several other clever thespians lend fine support.

A Surprise Package

Paramount pops out with a surprise package in "Evenings for Sale." Featuring Herbert Marshall, Mary Boland, Sari Maritza, Charlie Ruggles, George Barbier, Bert Roach, Lucien Littlefield and others, it turns out to be a very clever romantic comedy with catchy music, colorful scenes and a neat blending of comedy with drama and romance. Stuart Walker's direction is deft. Gus McCarthy says the women will like it. Between you and me, Mac liked it himself, too. It is a neat job of cinema.

Due to our being absent from school last week, we missed the opportunity of telling you that "Rackety Rax" is a riot of fun. Fox got hold of a real novelty in this one, and Victor McLaglen drew a role which is one of his best in a long time.

I took a look at Ralph Ince's first picture in a long time, "Men of America," made for Radio. Ralph abandoned the megaphone a couple of years ago to play heavies. Coming back, he proves he still knows how to put hair on the chest of screen melodrama. Chic Sale is featured along with Bill Boyd. There's plenty of punch and fast action, together with a liberal portion of Chic's rural wisecracking. Dorothy Wilson, Radio's "stenog" screen find, is very charming.

While we are on the subject of Radio pictures, our most reliable "grapevine" brings us enthusiastic reports about "The Conquerors," latest picture featuring Richard Dix and Ann Harding.

We are all steamed up about production activities these days. Good attractions are coming out right along, and we have seen enough of others now in production to believe that Hollywood is going to do its part in delivering the best batch of product since the talker cyclone hit this industry.

Interpretation of Cleveland Settlement Brings Confusion

The interpretation of the agreement which recently concluded out of court the monopoly suit filed by independent exhibitors of Cleveland against distributors, has given rise to a certain amount of confusion. The agreement, covering protection, availability and arbitration, is to go into effect January 1, 1933. The confusion involves a question as to whether protection terms refer to produce released January 1 or pictures available on that date.

In addition, it is understood not all producing companies have signed the agreement, which raises the further question of its validity. Samuel Horwitz, attorney for the exhibitors in the monopoly suit, is preparing a statement covering both controversial points.

SCHOOL AND SCREEN

by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

As among the important pictures of this month SCHOOL AND SCREEN has elected:

"White Eagle," Columbia
"Chandu, The Magician," Fox
"Seeing the U. S. A. by States," Picture Classics Operalogues, Educational
"Klondike," Monogram
"All American," Universal
"That's My Boy," Columbia
"S.O.S. Iceberg," Universal
"Last of the Mohicans," Mascot
"Air Mail," Universal
"The Golden West," Fox
"Little Women," RKO
"Theft of the Mona Lisa," RKO

Opera, symphony, travel, adventure, romance built on the fundamentals of an ethical ideal, clean sports, and the little interpretations of fine literature, are among the screen's current offerings for the coming season. Despite general economic conditions, to the credit of the industry it may be said that one company after another has come forward with an outstanding, brilliant and cultural offering as a gesture in behalf of the better motion picture.

To any fair minded critic of the screen, the current product must have some appeal. Here and there may be a weak spot, a picture not suitable to juveniles, an intellectual, exotic, brilliant, technical achievement like "Strange Interlude" or "Grand Hotel". On the other hand, there are a number of fine, wholesome, dramatic motion pictures to meet the demand of the most fastidious.

School and Screen is interested in picking out of the pictures of the month those productions that should be of value and educational importance to the young people of the American audience. This service relies for its contact upon the teachers, the Parent-Teachers, and the club women of the country, of whom there are many thousands. We are privileged to select from many productions pictures worthy of juvenile attention and classroom discussion. A picture does not have to be educational in the sense that geometry, geography and mathematics are educational to become a mental experience in the life of a high school boy or girl. It may be musical, dramatic, tragic; it may be historic, or gallant in its interpretation of life as it may be lived with something of a grand nobility. These are the things we would emphasize to the young people as a counteractant to the exotic boudoir scenes, the abnormal phases of living, that some of the most glamorous pictures present.

At this season of the year, we hear much of the exuberance of youth. The air is full of football, enthusiasm, cheers, flying pennants, girls wearing chrysanthemums. There is school spirit, eagerness, the nerve of a clean vitality. The motion pictures, reflecting this background to the folk who may not attend the games, have in this season accomplished two glorious pictures of football.

"The All American"

Universal set the pace in sports pictures when it made the successful "Spirit of Notre Dame." The picture, without love interest, was clean and wholesome—it registered at the box office. In the wake of this one Universal has produced "The All American," one of the strongest football stories that has come to the screen. The winning team is All American, a team that any football lover will be interested in. The story is strong, thrilling, clean, with a quality of sportsmanship in it that is worthy of scholastic attention. It is the post college adventures of a football player who has received a deluge of publicity. The denouement is a fine lesson to boys who would capitalize popularity and sacrifice the more important fundamentals of right living.

In the same class, and with equal brilliance, Columbia presents "That's My Boy" in a stirring, dramatic story of gridiron sports in which Richard Cromwell and Dorothy Jordan are co-starred. In this film we see a boy who is the sensation of the Freshman football squad. The coach believes him to be one of the greatest gridiron finds of all times. The boy has an intelligent running capacity; they call him "Snake-hips"; he has the genius to dodge through any line to a touchdown. In this, there is real money, more than half a million dollars to the University for which he is playing. Business men, with an eye to the earning capacity of the team, attempt to make things easier for the football star. They make him partner in a company that will be highly repaying. They provide for his clothing. He is invited to change his skylight room to one in more sumptuous surroundings. He is the idol of the team and the best bet of the interested bankers. Out of all of this turmoil, his own character has to assert itself in self-sacrifice, agonizing and determination.

We have had several important sports pictures. We do not know of any one that has been stronger in ethical values, more glorious in spirit and finer in dramatic sequences, than "That's My Boy." This may be recommended to any audience, any where, with a sense of assurance that it will not miss fire. "That's My Boy" is a strong, poignant, virile lesson in the ethics of a boy's development. The picture is worthwhile; it cannot fail to hit its high mark with any audience.

"Klondike"

This is a curious drama of romance. It finds its setting in the Klondike, and its beginning in the magnificent offices of a New York doctor who, undertaking an emergency operation that he believed necessary but almost hopeless, found himself indicted by the widow of the deceased for murder. With a reputation that is ruined he decides to go to another land. He flies with an aviator by way of Alaska, expecting to reach Tokio in a special speed flight. One sees the glorious photography of a plane flying over jagged snow-capped mountains, in fog and in ice. The wings of the plane become labored under the weight of frozen fog and gradually it is forced down and down to a calamitous ending. Beautiful photography, a sensitively dramatic heart interest, announce the story poignantly. This is the problem of the ethics of a good doctor who attempted what he thought he should do. When the plane crashes there is an opportunity for him to change his identity with the dead pilot. But a little boy's broken leg is more than his professional instinct can bear. In this instance he must be the doctor and not the pilot.

There is something of fine and beautiful integrity about a picture of this kind. It is free of sex and all of the ramifications of the secondary entanglements. There is something of strong drama, clean and finely whetted, when the disgraced doctor sacrifices his last hope to operate on a needy case. Behind all of this there is the romance of the Klondike; men who pay their grocery bills with grains of gold; men whose grains of gold do not amount to enough to pay for their blankets. There are camaraderie, generosity, understanding in the Klondike that offer something to the average boy or girl to think about.

The fine flying sequences, magnificent mountain scenery, the strong human drama, the acting of Captain Frank Hawks, who, as a famous flier, comes to the screen in this picture as an actor as well as an aviator, all make this picture unusual. Altogether, the picture brings something of surprise.

Music

Educational pictures will release the Kendall-DuValley series titled "Operalogues," which are short versions of the great operas interpreted in terms of selective artistry. This may be one of the best ways to introduce to young people the beauty and the glamour of grand opera. The music is exceptional; the acting high grade. In every way the Operalogues are a cultural adventure. They should be on Family Night or Junior Show programs.

We are deeply interested in the development of high grade entertainment for young people. Many theatre men have realized the importance of the growing demand for cultured entertainment. Women's clubs, schools, church groups, are clamoring for the motion picture that will develop and advance the thing they are trying to do. The motion picture producers have not failed in this field. The material is available, but it requires selective programs if it is to be brought to the attention of those who are interested in this whole work. The following pictures are analyzed with the hope that teachers will make use of them in the development of student appreciation of better pictures, and for the growth among young people of a new critical awareness of the distinctions in the art of the cinema.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE CLASSROOM

The All American

Universal

Richard Arlen, Andy Devine, James Gleason, Gloria Stuart, Preston Foster.

"The All American" marks Universal's 1932 offering to sports lovers. Its cast is made up of men who actually have won an "All American" rating.

That's My Boy

Columbia

Richard Cromwell, Dorothy Jordan, Mae Marsh, and famous football stars.

There is great football and sincere human drama in Columbia's latest offering, "That's My Boy," which will be released within the next two weeks.

Questionnaire: "The All American" "That's My Boy"

1. Recall three football pictures that you have seen. Which do you consider the greatest?
2. What are your reasons?
3. What do you consider the important things in a great sports picture?
4. Do you prefer drama, or action on the football field?
5. Why have most of the recent sports pictures emphasized the ethics of the game.
6. What do you understand by the ethics of football?
7. Describe the plot of either of these football stories.
8. What was the keynote theme in each one?
9. If a boy is tempted by big money do you think he has any right to risk the good name of the college for which he stands?
10. Describe two episodes in the picture which you thought were outstanding.
11. What did you think was the climax of the plot?
12. What three episodes, in your estimation, showed the boy's character development?
13. What was the most exciting moment in the picture?
14. What was the moment of greatest heart appeal? (In this we refer to the great human value, not sentimental interest.)
15. What do you think was the director's best achievement in the picture?
16. Did you note any inconsistencies?
17. Name three items that you consider especially important to the story's development.
18. Do you think sports develop character?
19. What have your sports done for you?
20. Do you believe that the boy in the picture was justified in accepting favors for his services to his college?

Write a 250-word composition on "The Development of Character Through Sports."

Klondike

Monogram

Thelma Todd, Lyle Talbot, H. B. Walthall, Tully Marshall, Frank Hawks.

This is the story of a doctor's ethics. He has performed a delicate operation against the advice of fellow surgeons. The patient was a prominent citizen and he died under the experiment. The patient's widow accused him of murder. This presents an unusual situation, but in screen story it is important, for it presents something of the grandeur and dignity of the medical profession. The doctor, temporarily disgraced and ruined by the unfortunate publicity, cuts all strings and leaves with an airplane pilot for Tokio by way of Alaska. The picture has something of beauty, moments of fine dramatic tensity and a lesson in the behavior of a gentleman. For this reason it is a picture worth recommending to young people.

1. What does the word Klondike mean?
2. Where in Alaska is the Klondike?
3. What is the history of the Klondike as you have read it?
4. Why did this picture particularly impress you?
5. Did you think the doctor was justified in his defense?
6. Tell something of Alaska as a possession of the United States.
7. Describe the country and its hazards.
8. Over what kind of country did the plane fly before it met with its disastrous ending?
9. Who is Captain Hawks?
10. In what currency do the men of Alaska settle their bills?
11. How did they come in possession of this currency?
12. Describe the weather in Alaska.
13. The director of this picture had a serious problem in the filming of the mountain scenes. How do you think these were accomplished?
14. What was the great test of the doctor's character in this picture?
15. What was the most amusing incident in the picture?

Maryland

This series of charming and informative descriptions of the history, activities and cultural contribution of the states, is important to school people because it emphasizes those personal things in the history of every state that should be known to the student. At the present time two films have been completed, "Georgia" and "Maryland". Last month we reviewed "Georgia". This month it is a pleasure to present "Maryland", one of the most romantic, as well as the most historic, of the states in the Union.

1. Who was the first white man to explore the waters of the Chesapeake?
2. For what are the tide waters of this inland sea particularly famous?
3. Describe how oysters are farmed.
4. How did William Penn meet Lord and Lady Baltimore?
5. You will hear the word "terrapin" often. Describe how Maryland contributes it to a demanding public.
6. Where is Annapolis?
7. For what is this naval station particularly noted?
8. Name three economic products of Maryland.
9. What had General Washington to do with one of these?
10. What has the city of Hagerstown contributed to Maryland?
11. Frederick is a storied city. It was there that Chief Justice Taney administered the oath of office to Abraham Lincoln. Tell the story of Frederick as you saw it in this picture.
12. Who was Barbara Frietchie?
13. How did she come to make the flag?
14. Tell the story of the making of the flag.
15. Baltimore is rich in history. It has become a mighty commonwealth. At the present time it is the seventh city of the United States. Tell the story of Baltimore as you saw it in this picture.
16. Describe the Baltimore fire.
17. Describe the resurrection of the city.
18. Look up in your text books and describe the building of Baltimore.
19. What present institutions has she contributed to science?
20. Tell what you think Maryland has given to the Union as a state.

ORPHAN ANNIE

EVERY STORE WINDOW IN TOWN IS YOUR BILLBOARD FOR THIS SHOW!

Get the big press and exploitation book that has been prepared by RKO for this attraction. In it are hundreds of ideas to help you hang up new box-office figures. Dozens of fine newspaper ads, written and designed to sell theatre tickets... columns and columns of publicity material that newspapers will print... and a wealth of special features that will grab extra space for you because they're good!

And on top of that enough tie-ups to make every store window in town a billboard for your show... department stores, novelty stores, clothing stores, candy shops, drug stores, hardware stores, jewelry stores and almost every other kind of store sells some kind of "Little Orphan Annie" merchandise, all have special window display material and all are waiting to cooperate with you.

if there ever was a showman's show... it's

"LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE"

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Box office receipts from 117 theatres in 20 major cities of the country for the calendar week ended October 29, 1932, reached $1,582,107 in the aggregate. This compares with a total of $1,608,014 for the previous calendar week ended October 22, also from 117 houses in 20 cities, indicating a decrease of $25,907. During the more recent seven-day period no new high individual house figures were recorded, while four new low individual grosses were noted. The preceding week indicated three new "lows" and no new "highs."

THIS JOB HAS BEEN FILLED!

AN exhibitor friend of ours who has been USING Hearst Metrotone News since its inception
ASKED us why we didn't brag about the SPECIAL newsreel football coverage
APPEARING weekly in Hearst Metrotone News...
OUR answer:
"It's just part of our job . . . why brag about it?"
WHEN vague and unsubstantiated statements
ARE made about newsreels we want you to remember
THAT Hearst Metrotone News modestly believes
THAT its football coverage is not duplicated anywhere else!
EVERY week we cover the major gridiron contests...
EVERY week we special many local games...
WE checked up on football coverage of last year
And found we exceeded all other newsreels...
THIS year we are doing it again because we know
IT brings added patrons to your box-office...
HEARST Metrotone News puts lots of money
AND conscientious application into its newsreels...
WE don't brag about it...not often anyhow...
It's our job!

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Silver Dollar

(First National)

Drama with Comedy

Here is something dramatically new in the line of talking picture entertainment. It's the kind of distinctly American story that held the undivided interest of a large preview audience.

It is a combination of epoch-making historical events and the part that unrealizing men and women played in those fascinating incidents. It is expertly directed, superbly acted, with Edward C. Robinson giving what is undoubtedly the best performance in his career, and with Aline McMahon and Bebe Daniels contributing touches of human interest and glamour that should win the favor of everyone.

It is both highly dramatic and whimsically comic and through it all runs a thread of exciting suspense. Taking the days when the country was looking for gold in the Rockies, when Denver was St. Charles and before the great silver strike was made at Leadville, it pictures the spectacular creation of sudden fortunes, when poor miners became millionaires almost overnight.

Against it all is the character of Robinson, first a prospector, always searching for the will-o'-the-whisp, always failing, but never becoming discouraged.

There is plenty of entertainment of all kinds in this different story. It should stir the imaginations of the adults, particularly the elder generations who remember the exciting days it recalls. As a chapter of one of the most important periods of American history, it should appeal to those of your patrons to whom the thrilling story of western development is something more than the dry detailing of statistics. As a story of a man and his ambitions, it is packed with romance, drama and whimsical comedy. Also it is a picture that children will enjoy—one in which contacts with schools of all grades can and should be made.

The way in which the romance between Robinson and Daniels is handled is particularly striking, and contrary to losing sympathy for both, it adds to it, at the same time always riveting attention on Aline McMahon.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Alfred E. Green. Based on the book by David Karsner. Screen play by Carl Erickson and Harvey Thew. Photography by James Van Trees. Film editor, George Marks. Art director, Robert Haas. Gowns by Orry-Kelly. Vitaphone orchestra conducted by Leo Forbstein. Release date, Dec. 3, 1932. Running time, 78 minutes.

Cynara

(United Artists)

Romantic Drama

"Cynara" is class entertainment that the masses should appreciate. It is the kind of fine entertainment that any theatre, no matter what its class, should be glad to offer its patrons. It effectively combines great acting, expert direction and unusual mounting to tell a story that is far from new in a distinctly new fashion.

Regardless of what kind of stage show "Cynara" was, it is now a motion picture depending on familiar but fine romance and drama, with Ronald Colman's artistic acting always predominant, to form entertainment that not only should be inspiring to those who appreciate a picture above the ordinary in power and scope, but also should grip the imaginations of the less intellectually inclined.

A few words will suffice to tell the story. Jim and Clemency Warlock are happily married. When his wife goes away on a long trip, Jim is fascinated by Doris, a shop girl and the type of person that no one would expect such a man as Jim Warlock to fall for. When their illicit romance is discovered, there is tragedy. The girl commits suicide. Jim's home and career are sunk in scandal. But there is an understanding reconciliation with Clemency, that is typical of real wives the world over. And then a new life in a new place.

"Cynara" is simply but powerfully told. The complete absence of non-essentials is, in the opinion of this writer, the angle that makes it so vitally interesting.

It may be well to recall Colman's work in "Arrowsmith." While it may appear difficult to believe, his work in this picture is even better, a fact which should be your first consideration in introducing "Cynara."

Much care and consideration should be given to your advance campaign. The sound of the title is such that many people may get the impression that "Cynara" is a costume picture, or something that harks back to the ancient Grecian or Roman days, whereas it actually is a very modern story of very modern people.

Thus it would seem to be good showmanship to use as many still pictures as possible in order that that impression will be early eradicated. Advertising and publicity copy, likewise, should stress that information.

Being both a man's and a woman's picture, with the appeal probably being aimed more directly at women patrons, it is evident that the more feminine interest you can arouse the easier will be your task of popularizing "Cynara." Tieups and contacts with women's clubs, social, civic and educational, are directly in order. So are straight from the shoulder appeals to men, based on the idea that "Cynara" is the kind of motion picture entertainment that they owe to themselves to see.

But don't make your appeal so erudite and dignified that it will be over the heads of the masses—the mainstays of your box offices. Get them in to see it, in as large numbers as possible, at the first performances, and you can be sure that the majority of them will become your best advertisers.

Don't worry about how it will appeal to the children. If you get all the adults in to see it who should see it, you won't have to care whether the youngsters come.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

The Kid from Spain

(United Artists)

Comedy

Comedy, sometimes subtle, sometimes of the slapstick variety, then depending on Eddie Cantor's wisecracking and song numbers; comedy that is always laugh-provoking is the highlight of "The Kid from Spain."

Similar to an extravagant stage musical comedy, the picture only hazily follows the main plot—with a series of interlude specialties that whirl the story from one sequence to another. Opening in the girls' dormitory of a co-ed college, there is first a series of song numbers as the girls get out of bed—and what girls they are—climaxed by some sensational dance numbers, with a sensationally novel maneuver in a swimming pool that is just about the last word in novelty.

Cantor is fired from school along with Ricardo because he was found in the girls' dormitory, and after hilarious sessions with the deans and a mixup with a gang of bank robbers, made ludicrous by an incident with a traffic cop, he reaches the Mexican border and has a heck of a time trying to get across the line. Between a gangster and a detective, he is "on the spot," but finally makes the grade.

Then comes the Spanish atmosphere. He's introduced as a great bull fighter, providing more nutty foolishness from a score of angles. Next is presented the great bull fight, and if the reactions of a preview audience are any criterion, this is a certainty to tumble them into the aisle. A little side dish of expert bull-fighting is provided by the only American matador, Sidney Franklin, but Cantor's battle with the bull, in which they both wind up chloroformed, is a masterpiece of burlesque.

While not, in some respects, as sparkling as "Palmy Days," due probably to the length, "The Kid from Spain" nevertheless is a pretty successful adaptation of the stage musical extravaganza idea to the talking picture screen. Although Cantor's dialogue is funny all the way through, there are any number of torrid remarks and asides to which the strict moralists may object, but everything is done with such speed and from such a ridiculously clever standpoint that the laughs they bring should drown out any complaint.

Because there is an utter absence of any kind of dignity, there is only one way to go about arousing patron curiosity in "The Kid from Spain"; without kidding the picture, make your advance appeal as insanely ridiculous as possible. Promise your audiences one of the best laugh pictures of the season and resort to all the nutty showmanship in ballyhoo and exploitation you can conceive.

You have a girl show, a musical comedy, an enlarged vaudeville show and a bit of thrilling spectacle in the bull ring that is lightning fast that should appease the most avid laugh-appetites. There is enough funny entertainment to please the grown-ups and discounting the occasional risque dialogue, songs and action sequences, it is more than satisfactory as juvenile amusement.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Evenings for Sale

(Paramount)

Romance

Short and getting under way almost immediately, there is a noticeable absence of long-drawn-out scenes and but little time wasted in build-ups. This gives it an intriguing air, sure to stimulate patron imagination. Although, at times, it shows what appear to be traces of hasty preparation and quick shooting, these lapses will be evident only to the most critical.

Primarily it is a woman's picture—dealing with a romantic theme and presenting it in such a way that, given the proper buildup, with all advertising and publicity focused on stimulating feminine curiosity, it is almost a surety that women will become enthusiastic about "Evenings for Sale."

The yarn is not only nicely romantic, but it has been presented with so many subtle touches that it draws attention to the point it seeks to emphasize and lets the detail such as a catchy musical scoring and quick flashes of sequence of incidents buildups, work their way into the story harmoniously.

It deals with an impoverished Austrian nobleman (Herbert Marshall), who, a victim of after-war social revolution, is about to bump himself off. For one final fling of happiness, he goes to an elaborate masque ball and there, accidentally, meets a young lady (Sari Maritza) who falls in love with him. Also he meets his old army orderly (Ruggles), who offers him a job in a cafe as a gigolo.

As such he wounds the heart of Sari, but wins the sympathy of a wealthy American widow (Mary Boland), who has a "Merry Widow" complex yet is awe-stricken to learn that her "bought evening" has been spent in the company of a real Count. She almost becomes engaged to him—through some laughable Ruggles technique—but when she learns the true status of Sari she makes it possible for the Count to retain his ancestral castle and put him on a social scale where he can wed the girl. Then she goes back to America happy that her "Merry Widow" dream has been realized.

There is a lot to sell in "Evenings for Sale." Although, as yet, there is nothing sensational about any of the cast names, the fact that "Trouble in Paradise," in which Marshall scores a big hit, will be given prior release should help his draw in this. It's almost certain that Sari Maritza will capture the interest of both men and women and Charles Ruggles' comedy is more than satisfactory—particularly in view of the fact that he is not called upon to get "lit up" in order to get his stuff across.

Mary Boland is the real star of the picture. Her combinations of jittering happiness and heart-tugging disappointment should awaken a responsive chord within all who see the picture.

Inasmuch as the entire setting, save a few minutes at the start, is centered in Vienna, the choice of musical background, featuring such favorites as "Blue Danube" and other rythmic waltz numbers, gives "Evenings for Sale" a sort of light opera tinge, which angle is further emphasized by the gay masque ball, and the Continental cafe sequences.

The brevity of the picture makes it easily possible to arrange a special musical prelude and offer an all-musical program to accompany "Evenings for Sale," not jazz band stuff, but string orchestras who can put over the Strauss waltzes with the proper effect.

The title is catchy and can easily form the basis for an intriguing teaser campaign. In fact, the more work you put in in advance on this picture, pepping up curiosity, the greater your chances are of making it the surprise indicated. Go after matinee business strongly and you can depend upon those who get in to see it to do plenty of talking.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Virtue

Possessed of a certain dramatic effectiveness and succeeding in becoming reasonably entertaining, this picture nevertheless presents the exhibitor with something in the nature of a problem in selling. The reason is that the theme is concerned primarily with the attempted and finally successful return to respectability of a girl of extremely easy virtue.

There lies the chief selling angle, if not the only one, for the exhibitor's campaign, however, but whether or not he will be under the necessity of using a "kid glove" treatment or not, will depend entirely upon the social conscience of the particular community. Too much stress on the "fallen woman" point may produce an adverse reaction if the patrons are inclined that way. In that case, the exhibitor must put the greatest stress on the rejuvenation fight of the woman, and not talk too much about the off-color portion of her career.

It cannot be recommended that the exhibitor adopt the practice of a Broadway house in its use of signs "suggesting that children under 16 refrain from attendance." Such an indication is unjustified, since the film is handled with reasonable restraint, considering the theme.

Carole Lombard is the best selling name, as the girl who falls in love, makes an effort to mend her ways, and finally succeeds in proving to her husband that she really merits his faith. The other name that lends itself to selling is Pat O'Brien, always an able performer, as the smart, woman-wise taxi driver, who marries Miss Lombard, misunderstands an action which leads him to believe she has returned to her old ways, then saves her from a murder charge and realizes she has been honest with him.

There is a straightforward characteristic inherent in the picture which unquestionably will react on the audience with a certain definite appeal. This is in no sense a film for children, but should, with the exercise of a little care in the selling campaign, and the support of a good selection of diversified short subjects, allow the exhibitor to present a program which should return at least average business at the box office.—Aaronson, New York.

20,000 Years in Sing Sing

(First National)

Drama

There is a great deal of difference between "Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing" and the usual type of prison picture. True, there is much of the harsh grimness of prison life packed into it, but it is done from an unusual angle. Built on the book by Lewis E. Lawes, famous warden of New York state's great penitentiary, it has been dramatized in such a way that entertainment predominates over propaganda and the elements of drama, romance of both kinds and suspense are highly elevated.

While it is an exposition of the Lawes method of dealing with criminals, whereby corrective methods displace the more commonly believed disciplinary tactics, and thus is rather educational, it nevertheless tells a powerful story in a fascinating manner.

With several prison pictures current, there is the danger of letting this production fall into a cycle feeling unless it is handled in a way that stresses the difference between it and the other pictures.

Tracy, a wise-cracking tough mug, is sent to prison and refuses to conform to the humanitarian rules. A stretch in solitary changes his views and when he passes up a chance to escape, he is given more consideration. Later, when his girl is injured in an auto accident, he is given a reprieve of 24 hours and while on leave kills Calhern, who is responsible both for his being in jail and for Bette Davis' death. Sticking to his promise, Tracy returns to Sing Sing and is electrocuted.

There is much in this story in addition to the title that should appeal to the every-day theatregoer. Naturally there is the widespread interest in Sing Sing and also in the work that Warden Lawes has been doing to bring about a new consideration for criminals. The picture graphically shows that dangerous men are treated as dangerous men, but those who exhibit signs of becoming useful citizens, if they once can get out from behind the bars, are given every chance to make good their ambitions.

Try to get over the idea that this is out of the rut of the usual type of jail picture. There is much of the romantic color of the "Big House" and some of the drama and pathos of "The Last "BLAME THE WOMAN," starring Adolphe Menjou. Directed by Fred Niblo. Presented at the Brooklyn Fox Theatre. The cast: Claude Allister, Benita Hume, Kenneth Love, Desmond Jeans, G. D. Manetta, Roland Gillette, Toni Bruce, Shayle Gardner, Stanley Vilden and Phillip Strange.

Adolphe Menjou's fans can see him in his latest "talkie," "Blame the Woman," at the Brooklyn Fox Theatre, in a clever and quite different role, that of a pseudo Count, a slick and suave croo, or confidence man, who, plying his nefarious trade among the nobility of London society, robs them of their jewels and diamonds in his own ingenious style. This "latest" role affords Mr. Menjou, one of Hollywood's outstanding and ever-popular actors, an opportunity to express the depth of thespian abilities.

Claude Allister, noted comic, is cast as Menjou's right-hand man who gives the factional element to this story of crime. Everything is working sweet for these gentlemen crooks, until they meet up with Benita Hume, the woman who beats them at their own game, finally engineering the capture nearest London big house.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Goodland, Kansas

DEAR HERALD:

We are back in the old Jayhawker state. These Jayhawkers have dug their toes in and say "tohel with the depression." That's the kind of people these Jayhawkers are.

We drove over here from northwestern Kansas to visit our old friend, Grasshopper Sprague, and to spend Sunday with him, but we found when we got here that he left Friday with his mother to spend the winter in Miami, Florida. What we'd like to know is, who told him we were coming.

Last winter we met him playing around out in Hollywood, and now he is on his way to Florida. There's one exhibitor out of fifteen thousand who is able to retire and spend the winters in sunny climes, and the industry should get his picture and publish it to show to exhibitors that there are freaks in every line of business. If he writes us about catching tarpon and yellowtail out in the Gulf we hope a mud turtle bites him. He'd no business going down there without us.

G. W. Luce of the Riviera theatre at Gering, Nebraska, told us that since he had reduced his admission price to ten cents his business had increased clear beyond his expectations, that he plays to two capacity houses on Saturday and Sunday and fair business through the week. He broadcasts his programs every week over the Scottsbluff station by remote control and he thinks this has been a wonderful help.

S. L. Hestbeck operates the Lyric theatre at Chappell. The crops around Chappell were almost entirely destroyed by the drouth this past season, but S. L. isn't discouraged. He says it will all work out in time. How's that for optimism?

At Julesburg, Colorado, we met our good friend, Mrs. P. J. Zorn, who operates the Hippodrome theatre. Her daughter, Miss Elizabeth K. Zorn, presides in the box office of evenings and takes care of her duties as county superintendent of public instructions during the days. She is a candidate for re-election, and being a lady of exceptional ability, and a candidate on our ticket, we hope she wins, and we'll bet several shiners she does.

R. E. Guild of the Peerless theatre at Holyoke, Colorado, said that when he found a man who could take nothing from nothing and get a profit out of it he was going to hire him to run his theatre, that up to date the results he has obtained has been nothing plus nothing with nothing remaining, and that looks to us like a whole lot of nothing, but he also said he was going to fight it out on the same old line if it took him all winter and part of next summer. There's a scrapper for you, and his modus operandi (or something like that) will bring the old ship to a safe anchorage unless the ocean dries up. There ought to be more like him.

Some scientists claim that this world is more than a hundred thousand years old. Others claim it is over twenty million years old, and one man's guess is as good as another. We are not concerned as to the age; what we want to know is where did they get the stuff to make it out of. They must have imported a lot of it before thay had a tariff on imports, otherwise where would Missouri be? This is a question that the politicians ought to take up, for there is just as much sense to it as there is to a lot of their palaver, all of which is about as pleasing to us as a jazz orchestra and a radio crooner.

Dr. Frank E. Rider of the Crystal theatre at Wauneta, Nebraska, is also a dentist. He pulls their legs at the box office and their teeth in his dental office. We don't know what success he has at the box office, but he has a reputation all over western Nebraska as a high-class dentist.

We didn't get to visit with him long, as there was a lady customer in the chair. He invited us back some time when we could have a visit, which would indicate that our appearance had aroused no suspicion in his mind. He impressed us as a swell fellow.

Sometimes we want to hit a fellow right on the nose. We felt that way when we called on D. C. Shoemaker of the Crystal theatre at Araphoe, Nebraska. The first thing he did when we called was to tell us about the four and five-pound rainbow trout he had recently caught in the upper waters of the North Loupe river in Cherry county, Nebraska. We have fished that whole country, and to remind us of it right when we were heading for the Longhorn state and away from those familiar grounds, is enough to justify homicide in any community. These boys ought to be more considerate of our feelings. D. C. thinks that when the election is over, business will pick up. We are voting that ticket ourself.

Holdrege, Nebraska, looks to us like a mighty fine town. There are something like thirty-five hundred people who get their mail there besides the country folks. The Porter Amusement Company furnishes the best entertainment obtainable at the Sun theatre, and from the number of customers who turned off their radios and repaired to the Sun for a delightful evening, we would surmise that they appreciated the efforts of the Porter Amusement Company.

Raybourn and Bennie of the Raybourn theatre at Almena, Kansas, remind us of a couple of beavers. They build the dam before the flood comes.

Every time we have called on them we have found them busy with a paintbrush and a carpet sweeper, and the Raybourn theatre is the most complete and up to date theatre we have seen in a town the size of Almena, which boasts of something like six hundred, no less, and we would guess no more. They have also rebuilt and redecorated a theatre at Oxford which is said to be the pride of that community.

Mr. Bennie flies an airplane. He scatters bills for their shows from his plane all over every town in that locality. He wanted us to go with him on one of his trips but we declined with appropriate thanks, and Mrs. Raybourn said to us, "You great big booby coward, come on and I will go with you," and we replied, "Lady, that's an inducement that but few men of our age could resist, but we don't know whether our wife has kept our insurance up or not." It's worth traveling a lot of miles to meet these delightful folks and see the Raybourn theatre.

Oberlin, Kansas, is where we got caught in a hotel fire one time and the people on the street knew the color of our pajamas. That's one thing we don't like about a hotel fire. Beardsley and Stevenson operate the Opera House; that is, Beardsley does the fishing and duck shooting and Stevenson plays the golf for the firm, and we surmise that their wives run the theatre. We asked Beardsley how business was and he said that the flight from the north had just started and that it was a little too cold for bass. Then we asked Stevenson, and he said he was going good until he got to the number nine green, then he blew up and ruined his score. The fact is, if you want to get any information you will have to get it from their wives. Those girls know their business.

On election day we will probably be a thousand miles from our home town, and it will be the first time in fifty-two years we have failed to vote. If they elect the wrong man and things go all wrong we can say, "Well, it isn't our fault, we didn't vote for him." There will be a lot of satisfaction in that.

Stress the idea of realism, and, if you care to, pound on the angle that this is a realistic inside view of the workings of the world's most famous penal institution. Don't be afraid that there is little that will hold the interest of women, for there is plenty. Also there is nothing that cannot be shown to all but the youngest children.

If you have seen "I Am a Fugitive," you can appreciate the quality of Spencer Tracy's acting, inasmuch as it is fully on par with Paul Muni's for effectiveness and pulling his auditors along with him. The story moves rather slowly at first, but once it gets into its real plot, there is enough action, romance and dramatic suspense to hold anybody's interest.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Here's George

(P. D. C.—British)

Broad Comedy

'Way back in the silent days Buster Keaton made a great hit with a rough-stuff comedy centered 'round a house equipped with every conceivable electrically controlled device and a few more besides. Remember it? Well, here's a new picture which exploits the same idea, possibly on more modern lines, but certainly with the same wealth of riotous farce arising out of an accidental mixing of the controls. You don't have to laugh at this kind of thing, you just can't help it, especially when you have a comedian of the calibre of George Clarke to bear the brunt of the fooling.

If you don't know George, imagine a Chaplin mustache, a fatuous grin, a pair of astonished eyes with arched brows, and a monocle, and you have the ingredients. The whole welds into a personality of the species whose best known prototype is Claude Allister, though there is a clear distinction between the inanity of the one and the helplessness of the other. Your audience should, in fact, take George to its heart, and you shouldn't have much difficulty in selling him to them.

You've plenty of broad comedy to work on, based on the tribulations of George in face of his prospective ma-in-law, with a galaxy of funny situations bursting on the screen in rapid succession, with no respite until the play works out to the essential happy ending. George Clarke, Pat Paterson and Ruth Taylor work harmoniously as a comedy team, and their antics have been assisted by the slick straightforward direction by Redd Davis and the neatly timed editing of Dan Birt.

Promise your patrons a good laugh with George; arouse 'em with a teaser campaign to tell them that George is coming, so that the title "Here's George" is the natural culmination. Tie up with the stores who handle labor-saving devices for the home, working in the comedy angle as far as possible, and make a show of the stills portraying the picture's funny incidents, and you should do the business.—Charman, London.

Comedy-Drama

Produced in England with a capable cast of English players headed by Adolphe Menjou and directed by Fred Niblo, well known as an American director, this picture never becomes too serious, contrives to be amusing in spots, generally reasonably entertaining.

It will not do to take the film too seriously. Rather it should be treated lightly in any selling campaign. It is a story of gentleman crooks, with Menjou and Claude Allister as the crooks who have few scruples, ready fingers, and facile tongues. Allister is amusing as the deliberately stupid-appearing and over-accented Londoner, while Menjou is the usual able performer who handles his role with a sure touch.

These two names will mean something to the American audience, Menjou, of course, being of real box office caliber as a marquee name. In the feminine lead is Benita Hume, capable and attractive, who works with an ease and naturalness that indicates her ability.

The two crooks work their way back to London where Menjou cleverly steals an expensive bracelet and makes good his job through the use of disguise in face, dress and speech. Allister meanwhile has picked up a few loose pound notes. Unfortunately, however, for them, Miss Hume, a nimble-witted crook herself, appropriates the bracelet, and from then on it is an amusing case of crook chase crook, while Scotland Yard chases the first crook, Menjou. The laugh lies in the fact that Menjou is continuously criticizing Allister for his inability to keep away from women and thereby often having proved their undoing, while he himself is hooked by the pretty Miss Hume and her sad story, into losing the bracelet. To add insult to injury, she permits him to find out that she is going after a certain valuable emerald. He, with Allister's aid, gets it, then Miss Hume's husband steals it back, replaces it with the bracelet, and the last scene shows Menjou and Allister breaking rock in prison uniform.

Sell this as lightly diverting fare, with a crook-trick-crook angle emphasized to best advantage. Promise good performances headed by those of Menjou, Allister and Miss Hume, and surround the feature with reasonably strong short subjects.—Aaronson, New York.

Produced by Eric Hakim. Distributed by Principal Pictures. Directed by Fred Niblo. Story by Lord Castleross. Release date, October 15. Running time, 74 minutes.

Hook and Ladder No. 1

Fair

A fair cartoon but inclined to be ridiculous, even for an animated short subject. The fire chief hears the apparatus rushing down the street and proceeds to make a careful toilet before attending the fire. The flames chase the girl and dance with her, until the chief performs his rescue via ladder.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Bosko at the Beach

(Vitaphone)

Amusing

Little animated Bosko has an outing at the beach where he meets his sweetheart, is annoyed by his lop-eared hound and rescues her small brother in amusing fashion. Without being in any way an unusual cartoon, this is light enough and bright enough to fill in nicely on any bill.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Playgrounds in the Sky

(Atlantic)

Scenic

The Bavarian Alps parade their rich scenic splendor of snow, and the famed Nebelhorn again wins the camera praise which it merits. Some of the shots have been seen before.—Running time, 10 minutes.

THE DOCTOR PRESCRIBES

SHADES OF THE OLD medicine man! We've discovered him. Who? None other than "Doc" Lee, physician extraordinary to the poor, down-trodden box office.

Is your theatre suffering from low blood pressure at the ticket machine? Has it been severely run down and well nigh due for a nervous breakdown? Does its joints squeak from lack of use? Have you been wondering whether it ought to have an operation or whether it would be more merciful to let it die a peaceful death?

SO LONG AS THERE'S life there's hope and so long as there's hope there's Joe Lee, and we'll stake our reservation in the hereafter that the good, old (in experience) reliable "Doc" can feel your theatre's pulse, stick his finger into its innards, measure its possibilities and then write out a prescription or two that will make Ponce de Leon's much-talked-about fountain of youth look like the well-known hooey.

What's the occasion for this rave, asks you? Well, we'll try to tell you. It was like this: About ten days ago we were finally able to steal a night off and duck across the bridge to where Lee makes his headquarters. There, much to our surprise in this era of depression and deserted box offices, we found a line and a crowd and four policemen to keep them from pushing the theatre off the block.

"WHAT'S THIS?" WE ASKED ourself. Have we suddenly been transplanted back to the good old days? It certainly looked like it. So we battled our way through the crowds and up to the private sanctum of the "Doc." Sort of bearded the lion in his den, as it were, but we were keen to find out how he was lining them up when so many other theatres were darned near starving to death.

The answer was even more simple than you'd suspect. GOOD OLD CIRCUS STUFF. There's "Doc's" prescription and you don't have to pay a dime for it either.

You may well ask, just what do you mean by good old circus stuff? Exactly what we said. He has turned back the clock to those days when a showman wanting to tell his public that he had something for them to see, made up one of those dramatic looking, yet seat-selling circulars that not only made them stop and read, but also run to the box office.

AND "DOC" DOES NOT STOP at circulars in his health campaign for the theatres under his supervision. He's giving them today what brought them out in droves in years gone by: A real old-fashioned amateur night with all of the trimmings. Does it pull? Well, they were staging one the night we put in an appearance and they were packed right up to the well-known rafters.

Picture that sight: A crowd out front, a line a half block long, a theatre with standees jammed in the back of the orchestra, and both balconies, plus a few who were enterprising enough to sit on the steps along the way down those balconies. That's doing business, brother, and we don't mean maybe.

ALL OF THE OLD HOKUM that was sure-fire in days of yore, that's Joe Lee's prescription for every failing box office, and after a period of over a year, when crying was the most popular theatrical pastime, his houses are all doing business, and plenty of it. Is that proof enough that where there's a will and a real showman, there is surely a way out of your troubles?

Give Dave Stern, too, a great big hand for his aid on those amateur night gags; ditto for the Irish night, etc. This is the sort of stuff that is making Lee's houses the most popular amusement places in their respective communities. And, says Joe, if that's what they want he'll give it to them.

THERE IS SOMETHING reminiscent about this guy Lee. In fact, he's a sort of a puzzle because when you look at him he reminds you of something of the old days, yet the moment you start talking to him you fully realize that here is a man as young and dynamic as one could hope to meet in many miles of travel. Restless, with a mind always alert and planning, he has that rarely found faculty of looking deep into the difficulties of each individual situation and arriving at the correct answer. And when a man can repeat that a dozen times out of twelve, then it's far from luck or "the breaks"—it's ability, and in no small measure.

IF YOU WANT TO SEE showbusiness as we recall it in the good old days, take our tip and travel over to see "Doc" Lee. He's operating on a patient every day and none of them have died yet. Good ol' "Doc."

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

Far be it from us to criticize the younger generation for the curiosity registered in this cartoon, for all these wild women from Borneo, Bali and other points south must certainly be making the boys wild, too. To all appearances, Cartoonist Dick Kirschbaum has skillfully portrayed the thought advanced by "Parana."

SAM FRIED TREATING RIDGEWOOD PATRONS TO RARE ATMOSPHERE

The cycle of animal pictures has been instrumental in giving the theatre patrons in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, N. Y., some rare and foreign atmosphere, according to reports on the activities of Sam Fried, manager of the Parthenon Theatre there.

Not long ago we reported that this Randforce showman earned a medal or two for his work in connection with the circuit's campaign on "Bring 'Em Back," which was enhanced by live animals, atmospheric fronts and whatnot, and on top of that arrives a couple of snapshots showing exterior and interior displays constructed for the showings of "Congorilla." The snaps will not show to any particular advantage if reproduced, owing to profusion of detail and lack of sharpness, hence we are omitting them this time. However, it's easy to see from the originals that Fried again brought the jungle to Ridgewood, according to decorations atop and on sides of the marquee. The inner lobby was likewise decorated with hanging vines and reed growth and a huge frame featured a big head of a gorilla and many scene stills from the picture.

So we know that Sam is still hitting the ball out his way. Thanks to Monty MacLevy for sending in this information, and we'll be on the lookout for other news concerning the men in the Frisch and Rinzler crew over in Brooklyn.

Ranger Club Activities

At the first inter-district meeting of the Buck Jones Rangers Club in Greater New York, some 150 representatives of the 75 local units gathered a short time ago at the office of Columbia Pictures Corp., sponsors of the organization. Harold Davos Emerson, national chairman, presided over the meeting.

It took Buck Jones Rangers to chisel two shows out of as many Brooklyn, N. Y., theatres a few weeks ago.

On an early Saturday in September the Shore Road wanted to put over a big show for the boys, but had no stage. However, the Dyker, a short distance away, had one, and the two managers cooperated to the extent of admitting the boys who had bought their tickets at the Shore Road. After putting on their tap dancing, singing, etc., they returned to the Shore Road and horned in on another show—all for the sum of 10 cents.

As a means of keeping name of Ranger Club and theatre before the eye of the public many managers are using a Ranger book cover, which bears a Club seal and information as to when the Club meets, etc. The back cover carries the Ranger pledge and laws.

Most managers are aware of the value of the book cover as a means of tying up theatre and school. The average cover in use fits most any book and there's always space for a theatre imprint.

NAT HOLT SENDS US WORD OF BIG REVUE HELD IN RKO, DAYTON

We are obligated to Nat Holt, divisional director for RKO in Ohio, for sending the Club a news account of the "Fashion Revue and Big Stage Show" held recently at the RKO Keith's Theatre, Dayton, Ohio. Mr. Holt, accompanied by Mrs. Holt and Abe Lipp, the latter representing the Heisingsfeld interests in Cincinnati, was present at the opening.

The Revue was put over in cooperation with a leading local newspaper and Dayton merchants and a six-column photo of the crowd of people on hand for the first show is described by a visiting New Yorker as in keeping with the vast throng that greeted the opening of the Roxy.

As the guests of honor arrived at the theatre they were welcomed by two newspapermen and their names were broadcast over loud speakers. They were also asked to pause a few minutes under the bright Kleig lights while a few feet of motion pictures were ground out.

The stage show and the Fashion Revue were combined for presentation; that is, portions of the stage show were put on while the 16 models provided by the newspaper were displaying the latest in fall fashions. The models consisted of a dozen young women and four young men. At the close of the show most of the audience remained to see the feature picture.

According to a batch of tear-sheets we have at hand both newspaper and merchants supported the event in a whole-hearted way, with all of the large ads giving prominent mention to the theatre. While the Keith's manager's name is omitted in the newspaper story, we'll give credit to James Weed, whose name is listed in our files, for his share of the work. Thanks to our good friend Nat Holt for passing along the information.

ROUND TABLE BIOGRAPHIES

Like many a member of this organization, Burges Waltmon, assistant to general manager John Boswell, in charge of the two Warner houses in Owensboro, Ky., began his career in showbusiness as an usher; in fact, he even started a notch lower as extra usher during evening shows at a theatre owned by the Columbia Amusement Company.

Burgess Waltmon

From that extra-time job he secured a job as regular usher; then doorman, and subsequently the post of assistant manager of the Arcade and Orpheum Theatres in Paducah, Ky. From there he went to his present post, when Warner Brothers took over the house about a year or so ago.

Waltmon was born in Cunningham, Ky., Aug. 14, 1909, and received a high school education in a Paducah institution. He started his career in showbusiness at the age of 17 years and he's in it today because he likes the game. He's a member of the Chamber of Commerce in his town, and still a single man—that is, up to the time we gathered this information.

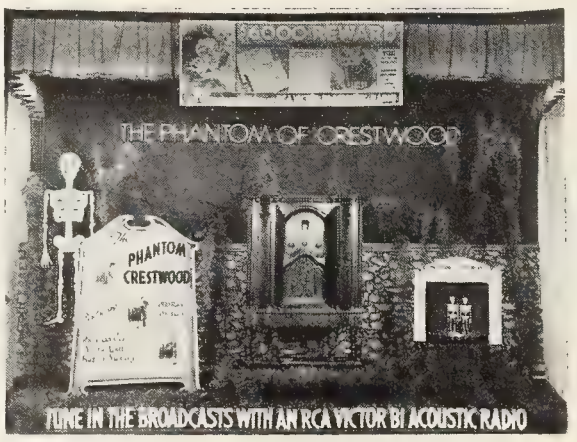
Is Guy Guilefully Guying Some of Last Year's Product?

AL GILLIS PROMOTED FOUR-PAGE SECTION IN LOCAL NEWSPAPER

In connection with the Fox-West Coast Drive among theatre managers for district honors, which the Pacific-Northwest division ran away with and consequently won a flock of cash money for Frank Newman and Terry McDaniel, Al Gillis, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., promoted a four-page Shopping News Section through a tie-up between newspaper, merchants and theatre as one of his campaign angles.

The middle section of the front page carried a large display ad on "Managers' Opportunity Week" and copy declared that it was the chance of a lifetime on part of citizens to help bring back F. & M. presentations to the Broadway Theatre by supporting the box office during the week. Some "ding-dong" politicians, as Al describes them, tried to crowd good, legitimate theatre readers out of the inside spread, but we note that Gillis managed to hold his own. He covered himself with glory on the fourth page by stealing half of it for another big plug for the return of vaudeville.

"Fleet Week," which we take to be the annual visit paid Tacoma by the ships of the Pacific fleet of U. S. warships, was also recently celebrated and Al and his theatre received credit for opening the show with a lavish display of fireworks on the roof; and, we are advised, fireworks are not even allowed in the city on July 4. It meant tremendous crowds around the theatre on that night. During the week he promoted a stringed sextette from the U.S.S. Tennessee and had the Navy boys playing in the lobby every day. The Chamber of Commerce, Service Clubs and merchants all cooperated 100 per cent.



The above, plus early returns on West-Coast Managers Drive, indicates that Round Tabler Gillis has been very much on his toes. Just as soon as we receive full dope on honors won by the many managers in the several districts, we'll see that the worthy ones are mentioned. In the meantime, we and all his friends wish Gillis continued success and we'll be looking for further news from Tacoma and other points northwest.

Al, in case you don't know it, was our own opposition 'way back in those Poli-Connecticut days. 'Member, Al? We do.

Free Wheeling!

One of the features of Greater Picture Month at the Ambassador Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., is a tie-up with the local Public Service Company for free return fares for those attending the show. Passengers paying their one-way fare are given a check which may be endorsed at the theatre box office, good for return any time between 8.30 P. M. and 12.30 A. M. that night. The arrangement will continue until Nov. 6.

RADIO FILM TIE-UP

Above is a sample of the effective window displays arranged with Victor Radio by Leon Bamberger of RKO for the exploitation of "Phantom of Chestwood." The little skeletons in the shadow box do a dancing act. The attractive streamers shown in the upper and lower foreground were available at low cost.

LEW PRESTON WAGED A UNIQUE CAMPAIGN ON PRISON PICTURE

Lew Preston, formerly district supervisor of the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, N. Y., for the Randforce Circuit and now a district manager for the Brothers Skouras out in Green Bay, Wis., engineered a campaign on "Last Mile" before leaving the Ridgewood Theatre that brought record returns to the box office.

To start the ball a-rolling he used teaser trailers on the screen one week prior to opening date, together with a personal endorsement of the picture from Warden Lawes, the much publicized head of Sing Sing prison. When the trailer was flashed on the screen a distinctly novel effect was created by placing an especially built electric chair directly behind the screen, with an usher doubling as the doomed man. Two 1,000-watt spots with green gelatin were focussed on the usher, thus adding to the illusion of a death-chamber. To round out this cheerful picture the rest of the ushers were dressed in convict costumes, the doorman as a warden and all wore on their coats a button imprinted "The Last Mile."

With the creation of prison atmosphere still in mind, Preston arranged a commodious 10′ x 8′ prison cell in the lobby for on advance display, block-built with three-sheet cutouts inside. The prison background was further enhanced with large circles overhead and one-sheet cutouts. When the picture opened he had a man dressed in convict costume and sign on his back patrol the neighborhood. Attached to his ankle was an old-fashioned ball and chain, which rattled off additional atmosphere as he walked his beat. The front of the theatre was dressed with a 30′ x 4′ prison background scene with cutout pictures of convicts.

During run of picture the electric chair already referred to was placed on a platform built on the marquee and lighted by a large overhead dome. Flashes were installed in the death-cap and the house electrician also erected a carbon spot on the roof. It was arranged to have the ballyhoo man in hiding along the street in front of the theatre located by the spot, at which time he would run among traffic and tie it up. With the theatre fire-siren going full blast this stunt proved to be a real crowd stopper, tying up traffic at times.

Amplifying Lew's statement that no one in Ridgewood could help but know that "Last Mile" was playing his theatre, we'll go a bit further and credit him with supplying enough atmosphere to fully convince the neighborhood that the picture was somewhat related to prison life. Anyway, we have his word for it that the film pulled in a record gross for the week. Next time you hear of the exploits of Showman Preston, word will come from Green Bay, so until then we'll sign off.

Peacock Back With Harris

W. L. "Pop" Peacock, former manager of Warner Brothers' Orpheum Theatre, Titusville, Pa., and recently in charge of the Grand Opera House, a Warner house in Wilmington, Del., has resigned his position to rejoin the Harris Amusement Company, an association he continued for fourteen years prior to his outfit being taken over by the Warner Brothers in 1929. Peacock will report to the newly organized Pittsburgh office of the Harris Company.

FINE CAMPAIGN PUT OVER BY FITZGERALD AND WEISS ON COAST

Hundreds of inches of free newspaper space were obtained during an advance campaign made on "Doctor X" by Edward Fitzgerald and George Weiss of the Warner Theatre, San Francisco, Calif., in connection with a number of the stunts summarized below. The picture opened to record trade and was held for a second week.

Included in the campaign was a "Doctor X" Man Hunt tie-up with a local newspaper, with a reward offered for the capture of the man as he visited stores throughout the city; newspaper serialization of the 12 chapters of the story; newspaper interviews arranged with prominent doctors and brain specialists, thus tying in with story; tie-up with newspaper for short teaser announcements in classified section; a ten day teaser ad campaign, "Watch for Doctor X"; use of 16 banners on trucks of newspaper; special radio programs touching on pictures; broadcast over radio of crime stories from local police records; extensive out door posting campaign, which featured the slogan, "No One Seated During Last 10 Minutes of Picture"; distribution of 5,000 "pledge cards" to patrons, asking them not to divulge finish of picture; special letters to select list of nurses, doctors and hospital staffs; and a tie-up with opticians for use of the line "You Can't Believe Your Eyes."

Large cutouts of "Doctor X" were made for each corner of the marquee; sidewalks of all downtown streets were stenciled with the title words on morning of opening day; a tie-up was made with a drug firm for the printing of prescription blanks signed by "Doctor X"; awards were promoted from local merchants for an essay contest tie-up with newspaper; a similar contest for children to write their most unusual experiences; distribution of 8,000 "mysterious announcement cards" in hotels; 200 window displays of stills; distribution of cards in taxicabs; distribution of 10,000 blotter cards in downtown offices; use of a special window display which could be moved from one vacant store to another; tie-up with taxi-cab firm for 10 per cent reduction to patrons of the film; imitation telescope in public square, inviting people to take a free look, with illuminated sign advertising film hung over end to see instead of moon or stars; use of the cake-of-ice-melting gag; masked ushers one week in advance, with cashier and doorman also wearing masks, and use of a special trailer.

Fitzgerald and Weiss deserve all kinds of credit for the extra large amount of free newspaper publicity they secured, evidence of which is in a campaign book before our eyes. It was a corking piece of work and we're sure their fellow showmen will benefit through use of many of the suggestions outlined above.

Rocky Mt. Men Convene

A convention for the managers of the Rocky Mountain division of Fox-West Coast, which now includes Montana, was recently held at the Brown Palace Hotel, Denver. The opening day featured a luncheon for the managers, exchange managers and bookers and a number of guests. Charles P. Skouras and party attended and the affair was presided over by Division Manager "Rick" Ricketson.

M-G-M

Showmen!

THANKSGIVING WILL SOON BE WITH US!

Every year the Round Table Club has asked all members and showmen to make a decided effort to aid the needy and unemployed of their respective communities. This year is no exception. On the contrary, the need is greater and more imperative than ever before.

There is no necessity for making such effort costly to the theatre. It can always be so arranged that whatever expense you are put to will be returned. The regular staff should, only naturally, donate their services. The newspaper should back up your efforts with plenty of good publicity and propaganda. The welfare and civic authorities should spread their organization work to match the campaign of the theatre and paper.

Unlimited goodwill and prestige for the theatre can result from special performances to aid the needy. Admissions in the form of old clothes, canned goods, groceries, meat, etc., etc., will go a long ways towards reaching a goal of as many baskets of food and clothing as there are needy in the community. Added to such admissions the donations of food, etc., from merchants should just about top off your work to perfection.

Every line of publicity or word-of-mouth advertising in connection with these special matinees or performances is valuable advertising for you and your theatre. Take advantage of this worthwhile slant and lend a helping hand to further a much needed endeavor.

UNIQUE BALLYHOOS FEATURED CAMPAIGN WAGED BY ED HALEY

Heavy building, an advance newspaper campaign and a novel bally featured work done on "Horsefeathers" by Eddie B. Haley, manager of the Fitchburg Theatre, Fitchburg, Mass.

In addition to the newspaper campaign, which was started ten days in advance, 2,000 roto heralds were distributed prior to opening date. The picture was also given a special plug through a mike set up on the stage.

The accompanying photo, in addition to showing the wagon used to ballyhoo the Marx Brothers picture, also shows in the upper portion a truck bally used for "Love Me Tonight." For the former, two men were dressed as clowns and they drove the wagon all about town. The house on wheels was made to resemble a jail, with cutout heads of the Marx Brothers in the windows behind the bars. The heads were arranged so that when the wagon was under way the heads moved back and forth.

The truck bally was made from compoboard and with its light colors presented a bright flash. The white pedestal, on which the cutouts of Chevalier were attached, was arranged so that it revolved in a complete circle when the truck was in motion. A girl to represent Jeanette McDonald was employed to sit in a garden truck on the rear of the specially build truck platform. Sound was installed and the latest Chevalier records played. Like the Marx picture, "Love Me Tonight" was given a big campaign and the opening was on a par or even greater than the former.

The last time we heard from Haley we believe he was in charge of the Star Theatre in Concord, N. H. Now he is at the helm of the Fitchburg, a fine new 1,750-seater with vaude and picture policy. He likes the Round Table Club and we find his work very interesting, as do his fellow Club members. What could be better than that? We'll be on the lookout for further news from his neck of the country.

CALGARY SOFT BALL TEAM CAME THROUGH FOR SHOWMAN EGAN

Considerable has been written from time to time in this department concerning the trophy-gathering proclivities of the Paramount Ladies Softball Club of Calgary, Canada, an organization with which Pete Egan, manager of the Palace Theatre in that city, is, to our knowledge, closely associated.

Pete, learned showman that he is, had a good hunch when he sponsored this aggregation of Canadian sportswomen, for they not only cleaned up everything in and around Calgary by winning the City Championship, but annexed the Provincial Championship as well; to say nothing of taking home loving cups donated by the Palace Theatre and the Bon Ton Market.

We don't know anything about ladies' soft ball games down in this neck of the country, but from a glance at the photograph of the entire team, which Pete sent along, they look anything but soft. In the lower right hand corner of the photo is a reproduction of the Palace Theatre Benefit Trophy supplied by Manager Egan, for which he received in return a lot of worthwhile publicity and good will.

KOHEN ENGINEERED A STRONG CAMPAIGN ON ANIMAL PICTURE

In line with the many interesting and attractive fronts made by Club members in connection with campaigns on "Bring 'Em Back," it would hardly be fair not to include some evidence of the fine work done on this picture by Spitzer ("P. T. Barnum") Kohen, manager of the Regent Theatre, Elizabeth, N. J.

We have two photos at hand, one of the exterior and marquee and the other a shot of the interior atmospheric displays in the lobby. We're reproducing the former and would also like to show the latter, except that the mass of jungle foliage would only result in a big blur of nothing when made into a cut. However, the original shows that Spitz's promoted a lot of other things than a number of animals. Grass, weeds and other jungle props were gathered in nearby fields. Billboards, heralds, window cards, newspaper advertising and publicity were also extensively used.

According to reports, Kohen's campaign on this picture was one of the most pretentious ever put on in the history of the Regent and box office receipts were entirely in keeping with it; in fact, three times greater than the regular week's gross. All of which is a feather in the cap of "Barnum" Kohen. Thanks to Al Zimbalist, of the Warner-Jersey publicity department, for passing along the information.

There are a lot of live-wire showmen over in the Warner-New Jersey division and it's a pleasure on our part to pass along word of their tctivities to fellow Round Tablers.

DECENTRALIZATION!

Once more this important word flashes across the country and starts several thousand showmen wondering whether the time has finally arrived when they will again take up the reins and run their theatres as they did in the days before national circuits crowded individual management off the map.

"I told you so" occupies no spot in the present turmoil. Rather, it is a natural turn of the wheel of fortune which was bound to happen sooner or later; that it happened later is just too bad for some of the circuits who should have recognized the fact, long ago, that theatre operation is more of a local, individual proposition, and not a home-office swivel chair affair.

So boys, if decentralization is going to put you back into the manager class and out of the key-carrying classification, we are sincerely hoping that you will be equal to the change and prove beyond all shadow of doubt that you can make a better job of it your way than the national circuits did theirs.

Theatres coming within this plan will be well worth watching for the next few months. We are confident of the outcome. "CHICK"

"RICK" RICKETSON NOW IN CHARGE OF NEW ROCKY MT. DIV.

"Rick" Ricketson, Rocky Mountain manager since the Brothers Skouras took over operation of Fox theatres, has been appointed manager of the newly created Rocky Mountain division, comprising the Montana and Rocky Mountain zones. The move was made to reduce administration overhead.

Divided into three districts, headquarters for districts one and two will be in Denver, with district three headquartering in Butte, Montana. Managers will be: for No. 1, Frank Culp, until now Denver city manager; No. 2, Dave Davis, lately city manager North Platte, Neb., and No. 3, Chas. U. Yaeger, formerly booker at Denver and manager of different Fox houses. Yaeger will also book for his district.

Culp's territory takes in cities in three states, Colorado and all the Fox towns in Wyoming and Nebraska. They are: Loveland, Longmont, Boulder, Fort Collins and Sterling, Colo.; Cheyenne, Rawlins, Kemmerer, Rock Springs and Sheridan, Wyo., and McCook and Alliance, Nebraska.

Davis' territory takes in the rest of the Fox cities in Colorado and two in New Mexico, as follows: Denver, La Junta, Florence, Canon City, Walsenburg, Trinidad, Montrose, Delta and Durango, Colo., and in New Mexico, Las Vegas and Las Cruces.

Yeager's district includes, besides the headquarters city of Butte, Great Falls, Lewiston, Billings and Missoula, Mont., and Pocatello and Idaho Falls, Idaho.

CORRIGAN TREATED CHICAGO FANS TO NEW KIND WARFARE

As a change of diet from machine guns, bombs and other accessories of modern gang warfare, citizens of the Windy City were treated several weeks ago to the sight of what appeared to be two fellows battling it out on the platform of a moving truck. This novel bally was arranged by C. W. Corrigan, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Chicago, for "Winner Take All."

Cutouts of Jimmie Cagney and his opponent were set up in fighting pose in the arena-like platform of the truck, which was driven through the principal thoroughfares of the town. Note that the conventional ring chairs, pails of water and other fight accessories were in evidence and that the sides of the truck were appropriately bannered.

In addition to the above Corrigan also arranged a tie-up with "White City," Chicago's largest amusement center, for the printing and distribution of several thousand cards, one side of which carried illustrations and copy on picture while the other advertised the week's fight program at the amusement park.

The combination of the above materially aided box office receipts for the run of the Cagney picture, so we are told, and the bally unquestionably attracted a lot of attention. Just a word about the accompanying photo. Unless our eyes are at fault, the two young battlers who posed for this picture were real, not compo-board. However, the idea is the same, so don't let's worry about that. We'll be looking for some more news from Corrigan.

MEN WITH FOX IN NORTH CALIFORNIA WIN DRIVE HONORS

Eight checks of $100., each one representing a slice of the $10,000 melon recently cut by Fox-West Coast for its managers, were recently turned over to company managers in Northern California by Charles Skouras during a special luncheon tendered managers in San Francisco.

Checks on which Skouras affixed his signature went to Joe Enos, California theatre, San Francisco; Bob Sharpe, Fox theatre, Richmond; John R. Fredericks, Kimmer theatre, Fresno; Elwood Laws, Fox theatre, Turlock; Eddie Hussong, Fox theatre, San Mateo; Don Baldwin, UC theatre, Berkeley; Art Miller, State theatre, Oakland, and William Mitchell, Grand Lake theatre, Oakland.

Skouras also announced that a new and bigger contest with a distribution of $12,500 in cash prizes will start the latter part of October and last for 10 weeks.

STANFORD REVIVED TIN CAN GAG AND PUT IT OVER BIG

We'd almost forgotten the good old stunt of having the kiddies round up a flock of old tin cans for the promotion of a Tin Can Matinee when word arrived of one put over by Allison Stanford, manager of the Fox-Hanford Theatre, Hanford, Calif.

He tied up with the City Council and as the result of cooperation from that body and the local newspaper close to 30,000 old cans were brought to the 1,200-seat house by over 1,500 youngsters, who were treated to a free show for their efforts. The reproduction of the small snap-shot shows one stack of cans in front of the theatre. The event was called "Clean-Up Day."

Stanford gets in a lot of good work for his theatre by cooperating with city authorities and the above is an example of what can be accomplished. Newspaper tear-sheets at hand testify to the large amount of free space obtained. He also arranged to donate a loving cup to the winning team in the Merchants' League and we'll show you all a picture of Stanford and the Mayor acting their parts in this ceremony just as soon as the mail brings it in. In the meantime, continued success to this Round Tabler.

Nance Now With Warners

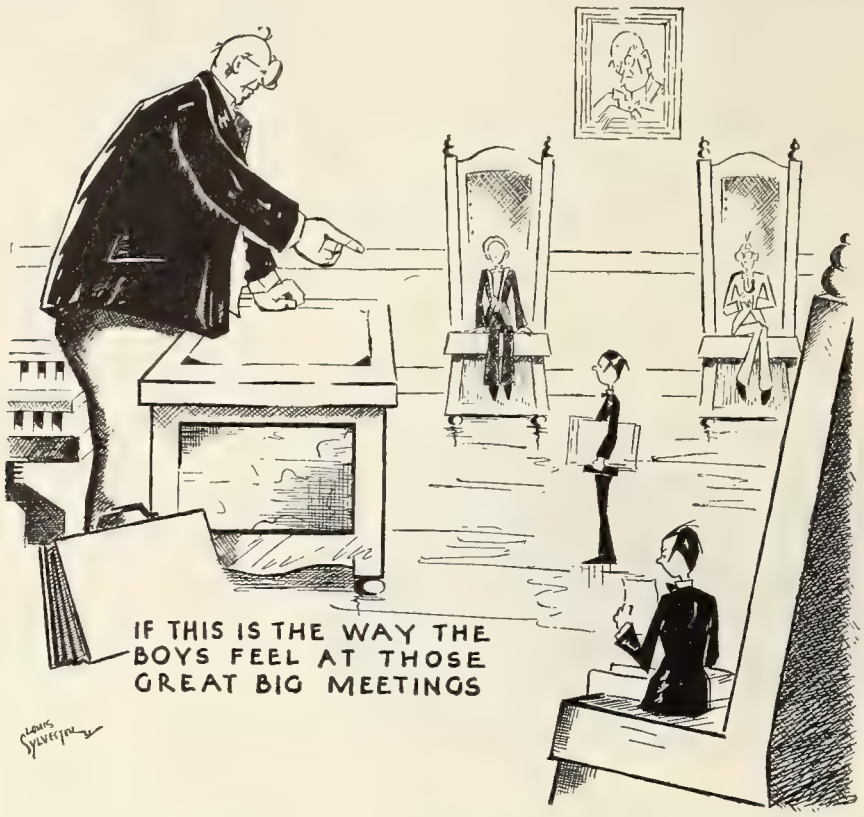
F. D. Nance, former general manager of Hall Industries Theatres, with headquarters at Beeville, Texas, recently resigned his post to take charge of booking for Warner-First National at Dallas, Texas.

GOOD WORK DONE BY SAM FRIED ON FILM OF EMIL JANNINGS

Following are a few more notes on what Sam Fried, Randforce man who manages the Parthenon Theatre out in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, N. Y., is doing to sell his shows:

This time it's a Jannings picture, "Tempest," and no sweeter territory—unless it be the Yorkville neighborhood across the river—could be desired to exploit a German-made talkie, Anglicized to the extent of subtitles in English.

Nothing available but stills, it was necessary to do some special sign work on this one, consisting of four 22 x 28's; three insert program cards; three special window cards for display on bulletin boards in neighborhood halls; one special 40 x 60 of Jannings in "Variety," "Last Command," "Way of All Flesh" and "Now in Tempest"; one 19 ft. teaser snipe on 24-sheet four days in advance and followed by special 24-sheet; one 40 ft. oil cloth banner attached to valance three days in advance of opening, and a one-sheet card in front of theatre reading, "Doors Will Open at 12 Noon."



Additional effort included a 1-card trailer three weeks in advance and followed by a sound trailer one week in advance; mailing of 3,000 special heralds on regular mailing list and to 50 German societies; special newspaper campaign in Brooklyn newspapers and two neighborhood papers, with readers calling attention to the picture having explanatory titles in English, and two-column ads in two Metropolitan papers printed in German. Both programs for the occasion and newspaper ads were set up in the heavy, black type and borders that appear to be so popular in German papers and other advertising mediums.

It is apparent that Fried took full advantage of the fact that a good-sized portion of territory around his theatre is populated with people who both speak and read German, to say nothing of the Americanized descendants interested in seeing one of the Fatherland's popular screen idols in his latest picture.

WE OFTEN WONDER!

By LOU SYLVESTER

Here's our old friend, Lou Sylvester, and welcome he is back to our Club pages. His inimitable style and keen sense of humor were well received when he first sent us some of his "We Often Wonder" cartoons, and this week inaugurates the beginning of another of this series.

LOUIS ORLOVE NOW IN CHARGE OF NEW HOUSE IN MILWAUKEE

We thought we had Louis Orlove all set as manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Milwaukee, since he was transferred to that house from his old and well known stand at the Uptown in the same city, but such is not the case, according to latest report. Now, we understand, he's the skipper of the Modjeska, another Midwesco house in the South Side of the city.

Louis may not qualify for "East Side, West Side, All Around the Town," but it can at least be set down that he is a familiar figure in neighborhood activities on the North and South Sides. North Avenue still reverberates with a movement started by Orlove when he was vice-president of that merchants' organization for the gathering of 2,200 signatures for a petition seeking a cross-town bus line, which is now in the hands of the proper authorities.

Installed as manager of the Modjeska for the short term of five days, in a neighborhood where he managed the Mirth Theatre several years ago, we note that it did not take him long to renew acquaintance with the community newspapermen. A lengthy two-column story touching on his attributes as a theatre manager and showman of the highest calibre, also discloses that the name Orlove means "Eagle," which, perhaps accounts for his keenness of perception, etc., without including some of the less worthy characteristics of this Russian-American emblematic bird.

According to what we hear he will need eagle-like tendencies to compete in his newly-assigned neighborhood, what with a nest of houses double-featuring at from 5 cents to 25 cents per copy and a Warner theatre directly across the street. However, we'll bank on "Eagle" Louis to overcome all obstacles and we'll be mighty interested to hear all about how he went about it. We'll tell his fellow showmen more just as soon as the Club reporter in Milwaukee gets busy.

Max Melincoff, who handled both the Palace and Lawrence Theatres for Warners in Lawrence, Mass., before going to Boston to assume his new duties as d. m., arranged for a great attention-getting tieup when "Doctor X" played the Palace Theatre. He tied up with a local drug store for distribution of an aspirin tablet prescription. The throwaway was made to resemble a regular doctor's. Copy read as follows:

Doctor X, Palace Theatre Bldg., Lawrence, Mass. Office Hours 1 to 11 P. M. Continuous Daily. Patient's Name ..... Address ..... Lawrence. 1 Aspirin Tablet for nervous condition. This prescription will be filled without charge by (Druggist's name and address). Doctor X.....M. D. You Will Need This After Seeing "Doctor X."

In consideration for the ad on the prescription, the drug store gave Melincoff a whole window in which was placed a huge blow-up of the prescription with a dozen stills from the picture.

MAYBE A TIE-IN?

Just a reminder that the National Education Association of the United States will commemorate American Education Week with a nationwide broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System network, Friday, November 11, from 3:30 to 4:00 P.M. (Eastern standard time). The program will originate at Station WCAH in Columbus, Ohio.

Leading educators affiliated with Ohio State University will be the speakers. Boyd H. Bode will talk on "Our Freedom To Learn." "Fads and Frills in Education" will be the subject discussed by Earl W. Anderson, and W. W. Charters will speak on "The Present Emergency in the Schools." The program will be interspersed with music.

This may be an excellent opportunity for managers to improve their relations with school authorities and local broadcasting station by helping to publicize the event.

SURPRISE NIGHT AND SOME OTHER ACE GAGS USED BY L. HEGEMANN

The last time we were in touch with L. P. Hegemann, manager of the Penn Theatre, Ambridge, Pa., we asked him to shoot in details of a "Surprise Week" he promoted down in his town. Well, here tiz and for good measure he added two or three other stunts recently used to boost up the good old box office.

The surprises for Surprise Week included Gold Night, on which occasion $25 in gold was given away; Radio Night; Furniture Night; Diamond Night; Poultry Night, and the big event was topped off with the give-away of a new Ford roadster, all done in the usual give-away fashion, familiar by this time to all of our members. Exceptional results were obtained from the extra effort and it's almost unnecessary to state that Hagemann promoted all these gifts without cost to his theatre.

The photo on this page illustrates a portion of the effective campaign he made on "Red Headed Woman" and shows a tie-up made with a leading store in connection with a Jean Harlow Dress Creation Contest. The store donated a dress and all the whole affair cost the theatre was a few courtesy tickets. A one-sheet advertising that all red-headed women over 16 years of age would be admitted free also caused a lot of comment.

The ballyhoo camera truck he used for "Panther Woman" was not only used to good purpose on that picture, but also served to exploit "Make Me a Star." In the former campaign the taking of preliminary pictures of the girl contestants was made more interesting by arranging for them to appear in a small sound-proof room on the stage. This made a great hit with the audience. Film left over from "Panther Woman" was used for a "Who's Who" stunt on "Make Me a Star," giving courtesy tickets to those who identified themselves on the screen. This also proved most effective.

Returning to Hagemann's Surprise Night, he certainly gave his patrons a surprise all right by promoting such handsome gifts and he is to be commended for his enterprise. Give our best regards to Monty Salmon when you see him, L. P., and tell him we'd like to hear from him. Continued success to you and don't forget to keep in touch with your Club.

VARIOUS FORMS OF ADVERTISING TO ROUND OUT YOUR CAMPAIGN!

No Need to Repeat if You Will Take the Trouble of Mapping Out Your Plans Far Ahead of Play Dates!

by CHARLES E. ("Chick") LEWIS

This article started in last week's issue. We are merely trying to bring to light show-selling ideas to augment the usual newspaper advertising campaign. It's primary purpose, however, is to encourage you to further activtiy than just straight newspaper advertising to increase business.

LAST week we attempted, and hope we succeeded to a certain degree, in briefly relating the difference between the regular newspaper advertising and the other forms, useful or necessary to proper show-selling coverage.

Particular stress was laid upon such advertising mediums as your regular and special mailing lists and how best to use them for maximum results. The various phases of outdoor advertising were likewise discussed and cut to pieces for the benefit of those who might have some doubts on the subject.

Then we went into that much discussed slant on so-called high-powered showmanship, the circular and herald. We set forth, as clear as we possibly could, the many dangers of this form of merchandising and the terrible waste resulting from improper make-up and particularly, distribution.

We are continuing at this point, where we left off last week regarding the proper distribution methods for any form of house-to-house campaign.

In larger cities the various Election Boards have printed from year to year election district maps. These are useful in many ways to various civic bodies and are available to everybody upon the payment of a small fee. At the same time that these maps are revised and printed, the same Board publishes a printed list of registration names and addresses.

The combination of these maps and lists furnish as near a perfect special mailing or distribution list as one could ever hope to secure. With the aid of the maps you can select the exact books you want covered, either by your mailing list or the teams who are going to dispose of some special circular. For mailing purposes you then pick the names of your selected blocks from the registration book and there you have what you want.

If your town or city does not use this system you can still secure a perfect map for distribution purposes by getting duplicate tax assessment maps. These are larger than the maps described in the preceding paragraphs, but just as useful. Regardless, however, of how you make your plans, you should know your entire community and drawing population from geographic point of view. It will prove helpful in many other ways than those set forth in this series.

You Decide for Yourself!

At this point we pause for a moment or two to emphasize a point which unfortunately we find necessary to stress from time to time. Here we are devoting a lot of time and space for the purpose of providing you with some helpful suggestions for your own benefit. But we have never, in the five years that we have built up the Round Table Club, tried to set ourselves up as experts or know-it-alls.

Everything contained in this article, and everything written for your perusal throughout the Club section is purely suggestion. Take 'em or leave 'em, as you see fit. If you find them helpful, that's swell; if not, no harm done.

In this particular article we have incorporated, and will set forth further, dozens of ideas that have been tried in the past and found unusually satisfactory. They are not fly-by-night notions brought to life by bootleg licker. Neither are they freaks of imagination. Each and every one was used by the writer or proved to him by others. Therefore, you need have no fears about trying them yourself. You won't go wrong and it may turn out to be the solution to your particular problem in getting your theatre across to much extra business.

Airplane Advertising!

It seems only natural that with the progress of flying, both commercial and otherwise, in this country, that the use of airplanes for advertising purposes with theatres should soon follow. It has, and with fine results, too, as witness the 'plane flying around New York and environs dragging a trailer sign advertising a current hit on one of New York's better theatre screens.

This form of show-selling is certainly gaining in favor if we are to believe our mail bag for the past few months. Any number of tie-ups with air machines have come to light and best of all they can be promoted without cost to the theatre just as other forms of no-cost exploitation have been proved time and again in the past few years.

Plane companies are more than eager to get together with theatres for the tremendously valuable advertising they can derive that helps make the public air-minded and more inclined to fly from place to place.

If you have not worked out some campaign with your local flying field then you are behind the times. They will throw heralds from the plane over the city or in surrounding towns. You can work out the trailer sign idea in some satisfactory manner that will startle your native population into realizing that your theatre is right on the job with up-to-the-minute merchandising.

Stage Attractions

This subject may be a little out of the way for this particular article, but since we started out to talk about everything but the picture we can see no harm to emphasizing what may be a box office boon to many houses.

About ten years ago a professional amateur gag swept the country and resulted in theatres using the idea to realize a tremendous profit. The idea was simple, like all good ideas, and merely consisted of adding some class to the old reliable amateur night idea. Instead of relying entirely upon local entries for the show, some enterprising booking men lined up the show with talent about one step higher than the stage-frightened amateur and sometimes a wee bit better than the real professional talent of the good old vodville days.

These were presented in a series of amateur, surprise, and talent discovery nights and did they do business? Just as some of the managers who used this gag years ago. Well, now the point we are trying to get across is, that the same idea can be revived and put over again. It has been lying dormant for many years now and may fill that long felt want for stage talent again. With vaudeville an impossibility due to heavy overhead caused by musicians and stage hands, this is the out.

Many new names for these specialty nights are not being used, such as radio star night, barrel of fun night, and a wide assortment of others all suitable where novelty in names are necessary to revive interest. We suggest that you try to work this idea out. Your first contact, of course, will have to be from the nearest city where you can arrange for the semi-professional talent to augment your few locals. Without such extra material you will have to depend solely on the locals and you are the best judge of how good that idea will be.

Once your arrangements for the show are completed and properly advertised via trailer, program, newspaper and special broadsides, you should next turn your attention to the staging of the show itself with great care that you have a good accompanist at the piano and an unusually fine master of ceremonies. With these two O. K. you can even put over a poor show. Avoid all chance of the idea being razzed by keeping the loud-mouthed element in check. Unless your house is peculiarly suited to it, do not allow the sloppy, slap-stick stuff such as the hook, seltzer bottle squirting, etc.

If the radio star night idea is used, amplifiers are of course necessary. We have been told that a hook up direct to the loud speaker horns behind the screen is not good. A radio loud speaker on either side of the stage hooked up to the amplifiers and a "mike" on the stage will do the trick nicely. Then your stage can be simply set to resemble a radio broadcasting studio. A few little props will round out the idea to perfection and avoid a sloppy appearance to your stage. A drape over the piano, a flower basket on both sides of the setting, a few upholstered chairs, etc., all help the atmospheric effect.

All in all, we favor the stage talent idea

ADVERTISING DIGEST!

in one form or another as a means of reviving the almost exhausted box office. If you can see a profitable slant in so doing, hop to it and cash in while the time's ripe. If you can't, then forget about it.

The Trailer Controversy!

We are really not so much concerned, at this moment, over the trailer controversy as we are over trailers and their mission in show-selling. As far as we are personally concerned we are completely sold on the tremendous value of our own screen and its possibilities for getting a message over to our patrons. But we are just as convinced that over-use of that same screen can make this swell medium just so much applesauce.

All too often, a showman here and there stops catching his own first performance and thereby fails to know just how much or how little time his trailers are taking up. And also all too often he will leave word that he wants to "catch the trailers," and when notified dashes into the audience from that sacred (?) office where he spends much too much time and looks them over as they flash onto the screen.

But that is not a practical way of looking over your trailers. You must really sit through the entire show, which for many reasons is of the utmost importance. Then, when the trailers are run off you can judge for yourself whether you are giving them too much.

When I say "trailers" I naturally mean everything coming under this heading, which means coming attractions, institutional announcements, etc., and advertising if you are still old-fashioned enough to believe in this source of revenue.

In this era of those doggoned double features it is impossible to expect any audience to sit through a full week's coming attractions. We care not what type of trailers you prefer, but too much is too much and one must exercise some judgment in this matter.

Institutional trailers have a definite value for theatres where such angles are really worth while. Only the other night I looked through one of a series of institutional trailers at a theatre on Long Island where, in a neat, dignified manner, they presented the second or third of their series dealing with the improvements, service and comfort angles of the theatre. First, the trailer was made up beautifully. Second, it was carefully and sensibly worded so as to avoid repetition and monotony. Third, it got its message over in the quickest, yet most convincing way.

What more can anyone ask of a trailer? I inquired and learned that these institutional trailers are changed weekly, and very often when some coming attraction warranted such treatment, the trailers were tied to the picture in something like this form: After a few frames of the intimate message angle a reference was made to the better pictures always being played at the theatre and then said, "while on the subject of pictures, may we call your attention to a production of outstanding value and particularly suited to the tastes of this fine community . . .," etc. Then followed the plug for the picture.

Action or Animated

On the question of what is the best form of trailers to advertise your coming attractions, we can only put this question in the same class with many other questions which are best answered or decided by the individual manager of each theatre.

Policy, number of changes a week, patron reaction, etc., etc., are all essential sidelights to the question, and while much can be said for and against all forms of trailers, the last word should be said by the house manager.

Where conditions warrant, we recommend that the use of the talking trailer be confined to the one coming outstanding attraction of the week. In this way you avoid giving them too much in the way of trailers, yet, at the same time you give sufficient emphasis to a picture that you want to get over impressively. Whatever form of trailers you use for the balance of your coming attractions should be the form that best appeals to you.

This will bring to a close the second of our articles on the subject of advertising. Additional material will be published in an early issue pointing out other slants on this industry-old problem and will be augmented with items particularly requested by readers who we can always depend upon for suggestions. If YOU have any thoughts on the matter please step forward and let us all in on the secret.

SCANLON AND ARTHUR HALLIWELL PUT OVER TIE-UP AND DISPLAY

We note that the enterprising Mr. John Scanlon (Johnnie to you), manager of the Warner Theatre, Torrington, Conn., recently effected a tie-up with a creamery concern in his town that not only caught the attention of every kid in his community, but served as a corking method of garnering a lot of good will and publicity for his house.

While the photo of the display shown here does not do full justice to general excellency, owing to colors, lighting effects and floor covering, it will convey a good idea of the attractive way Scanlon and Poster Artist Arthur S. Halliwell arranged the give-aways and posters. The ponies you see are made of aluminum and retail for about $30 each and were given to those who brought in milk bottle caps, ice cream containers, icicle sticks or some other proof of this creamery's product. The awards were, of course, made in the usual give-away fashion.

In the background the anniversary display centered about a huge birthday cake with a large, upright candle. The cake was a foot deep, three feet in diameter and made of plaster paris with real colored frosting.

It was spotted from above with an amber baby spot. Two floodlights, one green and the other red, were concealed behind posters on each side of the cake and the W. B. shield was used for a background. Fall releases of a Ruth Chatterton, an Arliss, a Constant Bennett and a Joe E. Brown films were selected for posters. Generous use of colored lights, foil paper, flitter and cutout letters added to the general effectiveness.

A corking deal and a dandy piece of art work is the way our eyes see the above and much credit is due both Scanlon and Halliwell for the parts they played in arranging such a worthwhile tie-up and effective display of merchandise and posters on coming attractions. We are indebted to Halliwell for this contribution. Give Johnnie our best regards, Arthur, and ask him to shoot along a letter when he can find time.

TYSON CRASHED THE FRONT PAGE WITH A STUNT ON "ZOMBIE"

The cheerful practice of using coffins, so much in vogue in "White Zombie" exploitation, brought George Tyson, formerly advertising manager of Warners Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., front page representation in the form of a four column photo, head and caption in a leading local newspaper.

The picture tells the story: grouped around a casket is a crowd of people, with a police executive, several "cops" and other officious looking people in the foreground. The head reads, "Lost Coffin That Gave the Police a Shock." A sub-head reads, "Police in charge of the disturbing coffin that bounced from a truck in Penn avenue, near Point Breeze." The caption explains that: "the coffin caused police no end of excitement; they hurried it to station No. 6 to escape a growing crowd, opened it, found a corpse that later moved, turned out to be Bill Sloan, the Mechanical Man, promptly put under arrest by homicide detectives when he confessed it was all a press agent stunt for 'White Zombie,' a Warner Theatre picture. This is a Sun-Telegraph picture."

So what? You make your own book . . . even though this coffin gag has been described as gruesome exploitation by many in our unusual business, both public and newspapers appear to regard the stunt with interest, morbid or otherwise. Any time a worthwhile newspaper gives a gag of this sort a big break on the front page, it's NEWS! So—one of the Club medals to George Tyson, and thanks to Monroe Greenthal, of U. A., for sending in the dope.

Omaha Transfers

The following changes were recently made among managerial ranks in the Omaha district: E. A. Lake has replaced Arthur Abelson as manager of the Publix-World Theatre, Abelson going to the Des Moines booking office; George Bannon, formerly of Grand Island, Neb., is now in charge of the State Theatre, recently reopened in Omaha, and Lou Golden, who hails from California, has replaced Marvin Park, transferred to the Orpheum, Minneapolis, as manager of the RKO Orpheum.

HERMAN LORRENCE HITTING THE BALL AT NIAGARA FALLS

It's quite unnecessary to report that Herman Lorrence, former showman-extraordinary, who recently returned to the game of show-selling after divorcing himself from the art to explore the intricacies of the accessory end of the business, has regained his old aggressive form and is demonstrating same as manager of the Strand Theatre, Niagara Falls. That, of course, was to be expected. However, he caused such a furore among the good folk in his community when hatching a plot to publicize "American Madness" that we'll have to set it down for the good of the profession.

For two days before opening of the picture he had two girls calling every number in the 'phone book (unlimited service up there, by the way) telling them, "Are You Aware That the Depression Was Caused by American Madness?" Then the girls hung up the receiver. Result: 'phone company was deluged with requests to trace the call; the police department called up and stated that people were worried about the mysterious calls and while they could not do anything about it would like to tone down emphasis on the words "American Madness," and the seeds of publicity were well sown by that time.

For another two-day stunt he had three dilapidated individuals, tattered, torn and badly in need of a shave and a hair-cut, carry "A" boards all over town. Copy read, "I Am the Result of American Madness." The men were hired by someone apart from the theatre, so that anyone asking who they were working for received a reply which in no way involved the theatre. On the opening day the name of the theatre was added.

Additional effort included the hiring of four boys to shout "Extra" and distribute tab heralds in all parts of the city; a tie-up with laundries for distribution of a slip reading "Margaret Walker Says It Is American Madness for a Man to Let His Wife Do the Family Washing"; another tie-up with a milk bottling concern for distribution of bottle hangers, and a throw-away in the form of fake Canadian money. (Niagara is close to the border and both Canadian and U. S. currency is in circulation.)

We'd like to show a photo of the fine front arranged for the afore-mentioned picture but that's out of the question for the simple reason that we haven't one. At any rate, practically all of the stunts described above were arranged by Lorrence without press book aid and we believe a number of his fellow Club members will find them useful in shaping their own campaigns. It certainly did not take this showman long to get back in the swing of show-selling again and we're going to look forward to a lot more news concerning his activities.

Plugging Via Radio

A daily fifteen minute radio program is being used by Fox-West Coast to tell the whole state of Washington and elsewhere about attractions at the four Fox downtown houses in Seattle. "Jerry and Eddie from Hollywood" appear nightly over KOMO, leading NBC station of the territory, and get over their plug with popular songs and papper. The Paramount Theatre is also conducting a slogan contest, with a season pass give-away, to check listener interest.

POSTER ART WORK FOR THE THEATRE!

Feeling that football material would be very much desired at this time, we are glad to be able to present two swell football displays from the work-shop of D. Newton Perkins of the Majestic Theatre in Jackson, Miss.

Both can be worked out for present-day releases and will make a most impressive appearance in any man's lobby. Needless to say, but just as well to mention it, stills can always make a good display better especially when those stills are selected carefully and with a seat-selling thought in mind.

EARL LONG DIRECTED GALA PREMIERE FOR HAROLD LLOYD COMEDY

With outstanding pictures commanding only mediocre attention and boxoffice recovery slow, at best, it is evident that originality in exploitation alone can spell the difference between profits and probable losses.

Duluth, Minn., was treated to a sample of such exploitation, intelligently handled, for the special evening opening of "Movie Crazy," Harold Lloyd's latest at the Lyceum Theatre, a Publix house.

The stunt, a Hollywood premiere with all embellishments, was conceived and directed by Earl Long, advertising director for Duluth Publix theatres, formerly connected with the Publix home office in New York, and George Irwin, house manager. Its cost was negligible and its results surprisingly satisfactory. There was an immediate favorable reaction in the boxoffice, which sold to S.R.O. on the first night.

Announcement of the premiere was made in the local newspapers in news stories and in the regular theatre advertising. Mayor S. F. Snively was on hand to lend authenticity to the stunt and police lines had been formed to keep back the crowd of several hundred who jammed the street in front of the theatre.

A public address system had been installed with Long at the "mike." The mayor was beside him to greet the "screen great" as they arrived in taxicabs and private motors, which had been promoted by the theatre management.

A false front had been added to the theatre and a carpet runner extended to the street curbing. The entire setting was illuminated with flood lights. Twenty characters in all arrived to be greeted by Long and Mayor Snively. The entire performance lasted but 14 minutes, after which the boxoffice was opened.

Characters were supplied without cost by the Mask and Wig club of a Duluth high school. The club supplied its own costumes, some of the girls promoting gowns from a local merchant in return for credit from the announcer. Interest was high among the students who thronged the theatre several hundred strong.

Characters represented, each with a few lines of dialogue to speak, were: Amos 'n Andy, Kay Francis, Nancy Carroll, Floyd Gibbons, Bebe Daniels, Prince of Wales, Laurel and Hardy, Charles Lindbergh, Will Rogers, Rudy Vallee, Harry Lauder, Zasu Pitts, Jimmie Walker, Harpo and Groucho Mark with a blond girl for a foil, Conrad Nagel, Greta Garbo, Seth Parker and Mahatma Gandhi.

The stunt is admirably adapted to "Movie Crazy" but could be used for any comedy of feature length. Its reaction is favorable and its results immediate. The Club is indebted to Prevost Coulter, Motion Picture Editor of the "Duluth News-Tribune," for sending in the foregoing.

Ed Fay Using Radio

Ed Fay, well known showman over in Providence, R. I., is providing some real competition for film houses in his city by using the local radio station for a bi-weekly broadcast of personality chatter about picture stars, etc., on forthcoming attractions. Jack Sullivan, local newspaperman, is winchelling for Fay's stunt.

THANKSGIVING LOBBY DISPLAY!

This attractive Thanksgiving display, depicting a scene from the era of our Pilgrim forefathers, was designed and executed by Jack Greiner, art director of Warner theatres in Atlantic City. A rustic tripod, fagot and antique cooking pot were used to provide additional atmosphere.

LAWRENCE PUT OVER BIG TIME STUNT WITH POPULAR RADIO TEAM

It's quite a trek from Piqua, Ohio, to the Crossroads of Broadway and there's a vast difference between Schine's Piqua and the gorgeous Paramount, but we can report that the well known Mills Brothers recently played the Piqua and then opened a few days later with their names in lights on the Paramount's big marquee. The only difference lies in the fact that while it cost the Paramount at least one thousand iron men for the services of the famous colored singers, it didn't cost the Piqua a farthing—all through the good offices of Sid Lawrence, Schine district manager in Ohio.

One year ago, according to report, the Mills Brothers appeared at the Piqua and received exactly $173 for their act, which was a lot of money at that time and still is, for that matter. Sid Lawrence became well acquainted with the boys and tried to get their names on the dotted line for a sum well in excess of what he paid them for their act, but his efforts went for naught. The rest, as you well know, is radio and stage history. The boys are up in lights now, but they heeded Lawrence's request that they stop over in Piqua at the first opportunity to give a performance for the benefit of the local Welfare Association.

Piqua turned out en masse to see the Mills Brothers and the Welfare Association's treasure chest was swelled accordingly through Sid Lawrence's good deed. The newspaper came through with a corking two-column head and story. The accompanying photo shows Sid flanked on either side with a brace of the Brothers Mills. Good boys, observes Sid, and deserving of the success they've attained.

ANDY GOLDBERG OF NEWARK HAS GOOD MATINEE BOOSTER

Andy Goldberg, manager of the Warner Hawthorne in Newark, has hit upon something that is bringing him in additional business, while at the same time, is winning for him invaluable good will in his section of the city.

Goldberg has tied up with the high school football team, and permits the use of his theatre in the mornings, before the show opens, for football rallies. The entire school turns out for the rally and then stays on for the show, having previously paid their admission price. He first tried this stunt out for "One Way Passage," and now it's a regular weekly stunt.

Thus Goldberg boosts his matinee business, wins the good will of the students, who go home and tell their folks about the rally and the picture, and then gets the parents to attend the show in the evening.

ODLUM IN ELMIRA

George B. Odlum, who left Elmira, N. Y., three years ago to take charge of a theatre down in Wheeling, W. Va., is again back in his home town and at the helm of the Colonial Theatre.

George has some stiff opposition up his way, what with Harry Watts as skipper of the de luxe Keeney and Manager Jackson at the Strand, but the first two weeks have already shown real results and all the boys are looking forward to a merry winter's battle for whatever cash Elmirians have budgeted for amusement.

GOOD WILL SECURED FREE RADIO PERIOD FOR MANAGER SPENCER

Maybe some of our members are trying to figure out how to chisel a 15-minute broadcast period out of some radio operating company and would like to know how this was arranged by C. T. Spencer, manager of the Tivoli Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, Canada.

He and the advertising manager of the station put their heads together and worked out the program. The bulk of the broadcast was made spicy with bits of news from the studios, a la Winchell style, with just enough allusion to current attractions to keep away from a straight advertising slant. The program was given the title of "Tivoli Topics."

During the program snappy band recordings are used instead of jazz music and the chatter is stepped up to a similar pace. To make sure that he receives just what he wants, Spencer writes the continuity himself. Since starting the programs he has received many favorable comments and believes he has hit on a corking scheme to plug good will for his theatre and to get in a few words on what's playing currently.

The accompanying illustration shows a display board made by his sign shop to sell new season pictures well in advance. Neither the original photo nor this reproduction does justice to the general attractiveness of the board. The color scheme is silver and dark blue with background made of craftex combed and then streaked with silver.

Getting back to the subject of cost-free radio broadcasting periods for the theatre and some managers' ability to promote this sought-for medium for exploitation, it appears that the reason why some are successful and some not harks right back to the old question of local good will enjoyed by the theatre. Just being on friendly terms with the radio staff secured the privilege of a free 15-minute period for Spencer and the gag is certainly working out very much to his advantage.

He also had his wits working when he decided to use the Winchell patter style in his copy on studio notes. Winchell is all bent over from the bankroll he is amassing for vending that sort of stuff, so it's rather safe to assume that the masses like it. It's a cinch to pick up suitable material for notes. The fan and trade magazines are full of them. Writing good continuity is another matter, but not too hard a one for the average manager to tackle.

Scribe Goes Showman

F. Edward Hebert, well known newspaper and advertising man in New Orleans, recently resigned his post on a local paper to handle publicity for the St. Charles Theatre, which opened Oct. 28.

EARL HOLDEN WAGED SPLENDID CAMPAIGN ON "MYSTERY" FILM

In the face of strong opposition, including a circus, Earle Holden, manager of Keith's Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., boosted trade 50 per cent above average with the following campaign on "Dr. X."

Two weeks in advance he used a special trailer containing a personal message from the management and began his teaser campaign by taking best ads from press book and enlarging to a 40 x 60. At the same time, 300 bumper cards were placed on autos in daily use, such as bread trucks, dry-cleaning trucks, and arrangements made to use special tire covers on 30 taxi-cabs. Cards on the former read, "He's on his way to Atlanta to see Dr. X."

One week in advance a tie-up was effected with a leading drug firm for a lobby display of chemical apparatus, enhanced by the use of dry-ice kept in large jars of colored water and which was instrumental in drawing people to the inner lobby. The store also cooperated to the extent of featuring a special "mystery sundae" and announcing same with banners hung around the store. All soda men and waitresses wore ribbons bearing title words of picture and contested for a month's pass offered by the theatre for sundae-selling honors. Through a special tie-up in effect between theatre and broadcasting station, the radio was also used one week in advance.

Considerable word-of-mouth advertising was obtained by holding a special midnight show at 11:30 P. M. the night prior to regular engagement. On the same night, from 8 to 8:30 P. M., the radio station broadcast a special "Dr. X" playlet, in which the climax of the picture was not divulged. A group of professional dramatic actors exercised their talent and the only cost to theatre were invitations to attend the regular show.

In order to get newspapermen interested in the picture and consequently receive a break on advance reviews, a special screening of the picture was made one week in advance for the men and their wives. Following screening, a buffet luncheon was served in the lower lounge. This preview was given at night to lend more atmosphere to the picture.

During the run of the picture a special prologue materially helped by word-of-mouth advertising. Nothing elaborate, reports Earle, but patrons appeared to get a kick out of it.

When ready for the feature a close-in was made and green lights were brought up full. When this was completed the organist gave a blare of trumpets and began, in low tones, the playing of a very "mysterious" number. With the beginning of this number, the assistant manager made in serious note the following announcement over the public address system:

"Ladies and gentlemen of the audience: We are about to begin a strange journey—a journey into the land of mystery, thrills and suspense. It is time to be serious. A gruesome fiend, who kills by the light of the moon, is at large. Owing to the thrilling and unexpected climax of the feature, which we are about to present for your great enjoyment, the management respectfully requests that you do not reveal the solution of this greatest mystery of all time to any of your friends; for to do so, would be taking away from them an added joy and treat when they, too, see this picture."

When the above announcement was completed the organist stepped on his instrument with full force and launched into the finale from Faust as the picture hit the screen, continuing to play through the opening titles and stopping when the first scene of the picture came on. Incidentally, when the prologue was presented, the audience indicated its appreciation by keeping intensely quiet.

It's been quite some time since Club members last heard from Round Tabler Earle Holden; in fact, not since he was city managing for the Sparks Circuit down in Florida. It's great to get a line on his activities again and we're sure all his friends in this organization feel likewise. The campaign outlined above brought him excellent returns and he's passing the information along the line. Now that he's on the active list once more, we'll be on the lookout for further news concerning show-selling at the Georgia.

An Ornate Herald

Manager Josephson of Consolidated Amusement Enterprises, New York City, issued a strikingly attractive herald not long ago in the interests of the Oxford Theatre, Bronx. Ingenuity of type layout, use of scene stills from the featured picture and appropriate copy, all combined to produce a pleasing effect.

SID DAVIDSON'S NUTTY FRONT!

Nuts of all kinds—walnuts, pecans, peanuts, etc., were used by Sid Davidson, manager of the Earle Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., when he constructed a front for a Wheeler & Woolsey picture. A big nut man down in his town supplied all the material and even arranged a mezzanine exhibit of nut-foods, canned nuts, plain and fancy nuts, etc., under the auspices of a local food broker.

HICKS USED STORK MOTIF EXTENSIVELY ON "BLESSED EVENT"

Cut-out storks, flying storks and other kinds of storks—all associated with "Blessed Event," attracted wide attention to the opening of that picture at the Hollywood Theatre, Hollywood, Calif., house managed by J. Hicks.

The accompanying photo shows the two huge storks at either side of the entrance. Another shot we have at hand shows a balloon holding aloft a net banner, on which appears the figure of a stork with a wrapped-up baby dangling from its bill. Sewed-in letters spelling the title appeared top and bottom of the stork. The banner was painted with phosphones and flooded with lights at night, making it visible for miles.

Stoflet's P. O. Stunt

C. R. Stoflet, manager of the Margie Theatre, Harlan, Ky., was on the job when the new post office in his town was opened. He saw to it that Mrs. Conway Smith's letter to M-G-M, arranging for the booking of "Grand Hotel," was the first one to go through the canceling machine, and, consequently, crashed the front page of the local newspaper for a nice little story.

MORE MEMBERS MEAN MORE IDEAS!

JACK G. VAN

holds forth down in Allentown, Pa., where he manages the State Theatre for Wilmer & Vincent and we're glad to announce that he's another new member of this organization. Step up and shake hands with the rest of the gang, Jack, and tell them you intend to do your part to keep up the good work. Knock off an account of some show-selling stunt that helped you out, send it in to Club headquarters and we'll pass it along the line. Let's go.

is not only manager but president of the Corporation that operates the Long Beach Theatre, Long Beach, Calif., and we are taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in the Round Table Club. There's a seat at the Table waiting for him and we hope he will make full use of it. There's always something doing in show-business out his way and we will look forward to hearing all about what methods he's using to boost the good old box office. Come through, Sidney, so we can give you a proper introduction to the rest of the fellows in this organization.

hails from out in Pine Bluff, Ark., where he skippers the Alamo Theatre. This is our acknowledgment of his recent application for membership in this ever-increasing army of showmen and we want him to know that we're mighty glad to add his name to the long list. Now, if Miller will just see to it that we are duly informed on what's going on in showbusiness out his way, we won't have occasion to pick any arguments with this newly elected Round Tabler. We'll be on watch for his next letter.

is located up in Albany, N. Y., and manages the New Arbor Theatre on North Swan street. He's another new recruit in our army, fellows, so step up and give Jack the Club hand. There's lots of stiff opposition up in his town and we know that Albany showmen have to be forever on their toes to get their share of the trade. Hence, Jack ought to have some mighty good recipes to pass along to his many fellow members of this organization. Shoot along your ideas, Davis, and we'll do the rest.

joins the growing contingent of lady-members of the Round Table Club at this writing and she not only manages but owns the Gem Theatre out in Osceola, Ark. Welcome to the gang, Miss Emma, and this acknowledgment of your application is to let you know that we and all your fellow Round Tablers are glad to have you in this ever-increasing organization of showmen and show-women. Let us know what you are doing to boost box office trade at the Gem.

is the house manager of the Uptown Theatre in Utica, N. Y., which, if we remember correctly, is an independently operated neighborhood house. We are also in receipt of his application for membership in this organization and it is now duly recorded that Meyer is another private in the ranks of this big army of showmen. At the rate he's going in this game (he's only 21 years old) it ought not to be very long before an oak leaf or eagle decorates his chevrons. Drop your Club a line, Meyer, and let us know what it takes these days to pull 'em in up in your town.

FRED YOUNG

is another foreign representative proposed for Club membership by E. R. Lim and Fred manages the Flora Theatre in Malang, Dutch East Indies. His application is further evidence of the international scope of this great organization of showmen and another link in the chain of communication among managers in all parts of the world. As we stated to his fellow countryman, Njoo, we'll be on the lookout for some interesting slants on how showmanship is practiced by Young in Malang and we're sure all the rest of the fellows in this Club will want to know what both are doing to boost the box office.

hails from out in Ocean Park, Calif., where he manages the Rosemary Theatre for Fox-West Coast. We are also mighty glad to acknowledge his application for membership in this showmen's Club and hope he'll do his full share toward keeping up the good work of this department. What was that last stunt you used, Harold, to bring in the extra shekels? Jot the information down and shoot it along to Club headquarters so we can pass it along to the rest of the fellows in this organization. We'll be awaiting your next letter.

hails from up in Utica, N. Y., where he manages the Lincoln Theatre and we're glad to record that he, also, has joined this big army of live-wire showmen. There's lots going on in showbusiness up in his city and we'll be on the watch for news of what Harold is doing to boost business. This department has been favored with a lot of good show-selling tips from Utica managers and we hope Lewis will keep up the good work. Shoot along some of your ideas, Harold, so the rest of the gang will know what sort of a showman you are.

is still another owner-manager to become a member of this outfit and a cordial greeting is also extended to this newly elected Round Tabler. He operates the Star Theatre, Upper Sandusky, Ohio, but gets his mail in Cleveland. Now figure that one out. At any rate, Leo is in this big army of showmen now and we will expect him to live up to the best traditions of the Club. Surely, he has a few tricks of show-selling up his sleeve to pass along to the rest of the fellows. We'll be looking for his next letter.

is the managing director of the RKO Rivoli Theatre in Toledo, Ohio, and this new member of our Club was proposed by the well known "Duke" Hickey, Universal exploiter par excellence. It's almost unnecessary to state that our Club will be the better because of "Happy's" affiliation, for he's a real dyed-in-the-wool showman, so we'll tell his fellow showmen right now that they can look for some snappy show-selling stunts from this newly elected Round Tabler. We'll be looking for his next letter.

manages the Palace Theatre down in Fredericksburg, Texas, and he's another new Club member in line for introduction to the rest of the gang. Some news of showbusiness from his section of the country will be a welcome addition to this department and we hope Norman will come through with a lot of interesting information about what he and his staff are doing to boost the good old box office.

is proposed for membership in the Round Table Club by E. R. Lim, our representative in the Dutch East Indies, and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his application. Njoo is the manager of the Sientje Bioscope Theatre in Makasser, Celebes, D. E. I., and we'll be very much interested to hear about what kind of exploitation methods are used over in that far-away country. If he'll drop us a line now and then and let us know what he's doing, we'll see that word is passed along.

assists Rockey Newton with the management of the Capitol Theatre out in Davenport, Iowa, and he's another one of the many assistant managers who have become members of this organization. He's had a lot of experience in showbusiness and between White and Newton we ought to be kept duly informed on all that's going on at the Capitol. Rodney succeeded Donald Olson, who formerly acted as Newton's assistant and was recently appointed manager of the Fremont Theatre, Fremont, Neb. All right, Rodney tell Rocky that we want to hear from him and if you can't get him to jot down a few words on what's going on at the Capitol, take a shot at it yourself.

is the skipper of the Marine Theatre, an A. H. Schwartz house located at Flatbush avenue and Kings Highway, Brooklyn, N. Y., and becomes a member of the Round Table Club through the good offices of Lenny Freund, manager of the Bliss Theatre, another Schwartz theatre over in Long Island City. Workman has a fine house and is located in a neighborhood where managers still ply the art of exploitation. We hope he'll keep his Club posted on what's doing there.

SONGWRITERS RENEWING DEMAND FOR ROYALTY OF 33⅓ PER CENT

DANCERS

DeWolfe, Metcalf and Ford
Buffalo Hippodrome

"What, No Rumba?" is the title this trio gives its unusual terpsichorean act. The comedy that accompanies the difficult steps plus unusual costuming brings a big hand, the tall, gangling man especially rating an ovation.

La Fayette and La Verne
San Francisco Warfield

This couple do an Apache dance and start in about where others leave off. It's ruthless and thrilling and leaves the audience out on the edges of the seats. On one occasion the man grabs the girl by the hair and whirls her around and brings the act to a finish by throwing her through a window.

Berry Brothers (2)
New York Paramount

Opening fast with a hot two-in-one specialty this pair goes into a sure-fire bit in which one offers accompanying chatter to the other's low-down strut, featuring a top-spin-whirling split which results in a spontaneous outburst.—H. P.

Harry Lossee
Detroit Fisher

Lossee appears, scantily attired, in what might be called an Indian trance-dance. His muscular leanness and stern appearance make his poses impressive. This act, despite its undeniable merit, won't do for an audience inclined to deride the esthetic.

Bunny Sharpe
Buffalo Century

"A sweet little girl in a sweet little dance," as introduced, sums up the act. Pert little blonde, Bunny drew applause on beauty, personality and attractive black costume.

Two Jays
San Francisco President

Tap dancing is the specialty of this pair and they display some very intricate work. They are grace personified.

Eleanor Powell
Buffalo Buffalo

The long, tall gal who made a hit in Broadway revues came near stopping the show with her unusual tap dance number.

Three Little Words
Detroit Michigan

A trio of fast colored dancers, offering illusion bits and accelerating challenge steps.

American Society, Endorsing Basic Contract, Is Assured of 13½ Years of Continuation by Signing of 600 Members

The songwriters' basic contract—which aims to establish a minimum royalty of 33⅓ per cent for all members of the Songwriters Protective Association—is again being brought to the front now that three-fourths of the 800 members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers have signed agreements which will insure the society's continuance for the next thirteen and a half years.

"The American Society has previously endorsed this contract in principle," explained E. Claude Mills, general manager. "The ASCAP acts only as an endorser of the form of the contract, but we have no power to compel our publisher members to accept any form of contract."

Negotiations between the Songwriters Protective Association and ASCAP regarding the minimum contract were under way last spring and summer but were discontinued pending decision of the American Society's members to prolong the life of that organization. Contracts with ASCAP members are usually renewed every five years. Present contracts were to have expired on January 1, 1936. Within the past few months, however, the society has asked its members to agree to a renewal of the existing contract for ten years beyond January 1, 1936, for the purpose of obtaining an expression of confidence and permitting the formation of a long-time program over that period.

The basic contract, while it would not establish any maximum royalty and would leave the prominent composer in the same position to demand big royalties that he is now, would at least guarantee the "little fellow" a minimum percentage royalty and thus eliminate much of the catch-as-catch-can system now current, it was pointed out.

It is expected that the songwriters within another week or two will renew their effort to obtain the formal endorsement of the American Society.

Dubin, Warren Finish

Al Dubin and Harry Warren have completed their song writing contracts with Warner-First National.

COMEDY

Bert Gordon and Company
San Francisco Fox

Bert Gordon, the Bronx cowboy spinner of tall yarns, has expanded his old act into an effective musical comedy and offers 40 minutes of rollicking fun. The action switches rapidly from New York to Tia Juana. The settings are splendid and there are some delightful dancing numbers, especially a couple with a Spanish flavor offered in a Tia Juana saloon. Francis X. Bushman, Jr., who has grown to quite a size, fills the role of Rattlesnake Pete, and there is plenty of assistance from Kathryn Crawford, Enrica and Novella, and others of the cast of 50. It's a rootin', tootin', hard ridin' and rough lovin' farce comedy, but it has a lot of good lines, good music and more of a plot than often is seen.

Ruth Roye
Brooklyn Paramount

This effervescent commedienne has a style of delivery that puts her over with the audience. Her comedy songs are up-to-the-minute and her comic antics are most enjoyable. She opens with "Everything's Going to Be All Right," and after a good hand goes into "I'm the Life of the Party," and encores with "Or Katrina," first chorus in English, last in German.—E. D.

Flo Lewis
Denver Denver

This nut act is good for a row of laughs, especially when Flo is climbing in and out of the rear seat of a toy auto, which is chauffered by Leo Karlyn. Their wrestling match, she in the rear seat and he in the front, is good. He tosses her out of the car and drives off.

Speaker Lewis
Detroit Hollywood

This is a monologue intended to tie in with current political interest. The jokes are poor and the laughs scattered.

Keene and Williams
Baltimore Hippodrome

Comedy hokum, with some songs and acrobatic steps in comical manner, keeps this act moving and the routine goes only fairly well.

George Beatty
Buffalo Hippodrome

"Half singer-half wit," Beatty in his own billing describes his act aptly, with his droll humor, stories, mugging and topical songs. He drew prolonged applause.

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

Frank Conville
with Miss Sonny O'Dea
Baltimore Century

A Chaplinesque act with Conville appearing in pantomime comedy and costume somewhat like the film comedian and Miss O'Dea opposite in the comedy.

Henry J. Kelly
New Orleans State

Kelly holds his act up very well with his comic songs and gagging. Dressed as a comedy Mexican, he utilizes his extremely high voice to good effect, has a pretty miss do two dances, and wins a nice hand.

Brems-Fitz and Murphy Brothers (4)
Baltimore Century

Quartet with one as clown, another as policeman in part of the act offering a burlesque of operatic arias and general slapstick which got laughs but petered out and failed to get much applause.

Johnny Burke
Detroit Fisher

Burke is a comic doughboy with a high pitched voice. His best bits are two: a monologue describing a transport trip to France, and piano impressions.

Buck and Bubbles
Buffalo Hippodrome

The piano work, softshoe dacing, burlesque singing and slow, sly humor of this pair keeps the audience with them, continually expecting something that never seems to happen. That unfulfilled suspense seems to be their strength. They won heavy applause.

Jones and Rea
New Orleans Orpheum

An act reminiscent of good old burlesque, both parties are in rube makeup and cracking gags which are somewhat old, but the audience found them funny. The act drags, however, and the closing song is not particularly good showmanship.

Marty May and Jean Carroll
Baltimore Hippodrome

From the time May walks on the stage until he leaves, the audience laughs and laughs. It's a comedy act with music and "dumb" girl hokum handled well by Miss Carroll. It closes with May violining "No One Cares," and going off key at times.

RKO Opportunity Revue Winners Presented

Winners of the RKO Opportunity Revue, a score of talented boys and girls from all parts of the country, were presented at the Palace in a miniature show written by Arthur Swanstom, with Bert Walton acting as master of ceremonies. Among those who show promise are Arthur Matthews, a singer; Arnold Gluck, of Kansas City, who looks and acts like Charles King; the Beverly Sisters, of Pittsburgh, a song and dance trio, and Ozzie Swanson, of Brooklyn. The troupe leaves on tour next week.

NOVELTY

Jerry and Her Baby Grands (6)
New York Astoria Triboro

Jerry has an entire new act this season . She has one less piano and but three specialty performers with her. The gorgeous Phelps Sisters open the turn with an introductory song, which they sing in front of the curtain drop. At the finish of their song, curtains part, disclosing Jerry at the center baby grand and Genevieve Herbert and Priscilla Holbrook at the other two.

They are dressed in pure white costumes and gold wigs, and are seated at white pianos in a silver and black setting. They first offer special arrangements of popular tunes, followed by a vocal rendition of "Long About Sundown," sung by the Phelps Twins. Jerry and the other two girls accompanists drew hearty applause for their artistry. A scrim curtain partly hides the pianos from view and is used for rain effects and a rainbow as the Phelps girls sing "rain" numbers and Vivian Morgan, in abbreviated rain costume, does a fine toe routine. They close this with a vocal rendition of "Rain, Rain, Go Away," by the Phelps Twins, and a whistling chorus of "Here Comes the Sun," by Jerry, to good applause. For their grand finale, the Phelps Twins and Vivian Morgan do a radium illusion dance on top of the baby grands as pianists play appropriate music. The three pianos now in the act obviously give the turn more balance, the costuming and settings are beautiful and the act as a whole fairly breathes class.—E. D.

Pan and Peggy Garvin
Detroit Hollywood

This act would be useful to entertain at a drawing room reception, or to keep an audience quiet while projection booth repairs were being made. The sisters call themselves troubadours, appearing with guitars and not-very-new popular numbers. An uncalled for encore includes mediocre tap dancing.

INSTRUMENTAL

Barney Rapp and
New Englanders
New York Palace

Opening with a lively rendition of "Lullaby of the Leaves," Rapp's orchestra accompanies Kay Picture's tap specialty and then offer "I Know You're Lying But I Love It," adding a comical touch by a bit of "Lies" of famous personalities of the day. Babe Miller, blues singer, earns a nice reception for her singing of "We Just Couldn't Say Goodby" and "Mood Indigo," followed by Jane Allen, who keeps the tempo hot with a pleasing acrobatic dance. A novel arrangement of "You Made the Night Too Long," with a band vocal chorus, introduces a song and dance bit about "Dinah," by a sepian lad. A batch of suspended whisky bottles proves a novel xylophone for the band, who played "Stars and Stripes" for a rousing finale. Rapp encores with a comedy number for a novelty finish. This act has what it takes to please.—H. P.

Hollywood Merrymakers
Detroit Hollywood

"The All American Girl," with interpolations of college songs, won this group the sort of response that ordinarily is heard only at football games. The audience sang and clapped in time to the music.

SINGERS

Harriet Lee and Her Leaders (5)
Jersey City Loew's Jersey

Radio's latest addition to vaudeville has proved as big a success in this field as in its own. Miss Lee, a personable blonde, singing popular songs with her "leaders" (three harmonizing songsters), and accompanied by a male pianist, won the audience with an entertaining program. They work in one, and each of their numbers is delivered in a different style, and in special arrangements. Numbers include: "It Must Be Love," "Rain, Go Away," "It Was So Beautiful," "Bunch of You," and "Cabin in the Cotton."—E. D.

Adelaide Hall
New York Paramount

Miss Hall opens to a nice reception and proceeds to please with a vocal of "I Must Have That Man," from the "Blackbird" show. After the number, a dividing curtain discloses the Mills Brothers, who offer an accompaniment to Adelaide's hot rhythm tap dance. In a later spot on the bill Miss Hall again earns a reception for her rendition of "Digga-Digga-Do."—H. P.

Rosemary and Priscilla Lane
Detroit Michigan

If these two can retain their apparent youthful enthusiasm they should even surpass their sisters, Leota and Lola. At the "mike," they offer a joyous version of "Crazy People," and throw themselves ardently into "Some of These Days."

ACROBATICS

Three Whippets
Detroit Fisher

Three lads who look like Cubans offer a fast and seemingly tireless routine of tumbling. Speed is the dominant note in this act. At its conclusion the audience released accumulated approval in clamorous applause.

Onslow Troupe
San Francisco Golden Gate

These gymnasts show how balancing and tumbling is done in Norway and present some new stunts. Their act is liked.

Maxellos
Buffalo Hippodrome

These five equilibrists offer a fast and at times thrilling act which won good applause.

Indianapolis Houses Offering Stage Shows

Two Indianapolis neighborhood houses, the Zaring and the Fountain Square, are giving stage shows on weekends while downtown only the Lyric, a Fourth Avenue Amusement Company house, is showing vaudeville. The Indiana, ace Publix house here, has a revue from a local radio station, WKBF, slated for the near future. This is not a stage show but the acts, including an orchestra, singers and instrumentalists, will come up in the pit, thereby avoiding union troubles. Further booking of stage shows depends on what kind of a settlement can be obtained from the unions.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

TED MEYN (Jersey City Loew's) used a subtle bit of flattery in introducing last week's organ solo. In it the popular Ted told the audience that they had been chosen as the best singing audience in America by the Jersey Journal and this publication. Ted didn't have to resort to flattery to make this audience sing, because they always do, but a greater response than ever was their thanks for the compliment. He gave them only three numbers to sing this week—"If You Were Only Mine," "Masquerade" and "Here's Hoping." As a finale Ted and Joe Jordan, house music director, offered a duet, on the organ and piano, of the ever popular "Nola." A great reception was accorded them.

BOB HAMILTON (Brooklyn Fox) presented a distinctly different type of solo called "Meet the Organ. The organ was demonstrated novelly, entertainingly and still had all the aspects of a good solo. Hamilton used a motion picture film to explain the workings of the organ, and though he demonstrated each individual stop and combination in the usual fashion, there was the added beauty of first-class playing of difficult numbers between times. This reviewer has witnessed the demonstation of organs many times but has never seen the equal in rapt attention and tremendous applause given by this audience.

TED CRAWFORD (Phoenix Orpheum) presented a screamingly funny solo entitled "No Place Like Home (Oh Yeah)." Opening with a parody on "Home," which ribbed the song composers who write about their "Cabins," "Shacks," and so on, Crawford followed with a singfest on "Shanty Town," "Home," "My Hide-Away," and other "home" songs. Next he orally announced that he had written a "Home" song to end home songs. Then followed a mad, senseless number called "In My Old Kentucky Home in Omaha,' which had the audience in mild convulsions. The lyrics of this number covered every state from Alaska to Alabama and were most cleverly written. A parody chorus on "Shanty Town" left them laughing heartily and singing lustily.

HERBIE KOCH (Buffalo at Buffalo), again without the Missus but with that inimitable "Now, EVERybody" through the microphone, had the staid Shea's Buffalo audience whooping it up in his "When Friend Meets Friend." Numbers included "Makin' Whoopee," with original words; "The Night When Love Was Born," Shanty in Old Shantytown," "Sweet Sue," with tongue-twister original words, and "Lovable" for the finale.

Prepare Holiday Trailers

National Screen Service Corporation, New York producers of trailers, has prepared special subjects for use on Armistice Day and Thanksgiving Day.

Organist Nine Years at House

Signed to Write Songs

Will Jason and Val Burton, song writers, have been signed by RKO to compose the comedy numbers for the RKO short, "So This Is Harris," starring Phil Harris and Walter Catlett.

MARTEL SETS RECORD AT THE BOSTON "MET"

Seven years ago the Metropolitan theatre in Boston opened. That night found Arthur Martel at the organ. And Arthur is still at that same organ—something of a record.

He also finds time for twice-daily organ broadcasts, and of late his public has grown to recognize his verbal quips as he injects humor into his more serious musical numbers.

It remained for Martel to discover a real way to silence those who would insist on loud talking during his organ renditions. He would gradually push the tones to booming proportions. The talkers would do the same. Suddenly he would shut off the music, leaving the conversationalists shouting at each other in an otherwise silent audience. It gave every audience a big laugh, too.

Martel is credited with opening the first theatre organ in this country in a rebuilt church down in Atlanta, Ga.

Banjo Virtuoso Heads Special F. & M. Unit

Eddie Peabody, American comedian who made a hit with his banjo in London, opens Friday at the Brooklyn Fox theatre. He went to London on a gamble last winter and found himself a sensational hold-over act in the London, Liverpool and Dublin music halls. At present he is headlining in the special show built around him by Fanchon and Marco. It is called "Eddie Peabody's Happiness Idea," and from recent reports from all over the circuit in houses in which the show has played, Eddie and his company are giving out plenty happiness. When the present tour ends, he will return to London as a result of his last winter's success.

Barney Rapp and Orchestra Headlining Palace Bill

Barney Rapp and his New Englanders, who just returned to New York after a successful coast-to-coast tour, have been radio and vaudeville favorites for many years, but this week marks the first time they have headlined at the New York Palace.

Dedicates WJSV

The Columbia Broadcasting System dedicated its newest network unit, station WJSV, Alexandria, Va., last week. The new station will serve as Columbia's outlet for Washington, D. C.

Named Conservatory Head

George B. Phelps has been named head of the School of the Theatre, Horner-Kansas City Conservatory.

OVERTURES

WALT ROESNER (San Francisco) and the Fox Grand Orchestra are headed back toward the classics, after a fling at jazz and the lighter forms of music of the hour. This week's offering is a "Pageant of Melody," featuring numbers from the works of Rudolph Friml. Among the selections are "Indian Love Call," "Allah's Holiday," "Song of the Vagabonds" and "Only a Rose," the last named being marked by especially fine work on the part of two trombonists. The offering is warmly received.

RUSS MORGAN (Detroit Fox) works in "Beautiful Ohio," "By the Waters of Minnetonka," "River Saint Marie," "Alabama Bound" and "Old Man River" as an overture which drew generous applause from a full house.

SIDNEY LOWENSTEIN (Philadelphia Fox) as guest conductor of the Fox orchestra, offered "Beautiful Galatea," an overture rarely heard in Philadelphia.

Canadian Society Wins Test Case Involving Song Number

The Canadian Performing Rights Society of Toronto was awarded judgment this week in an action for damages against the Madison theatre for playing "Little White Lies," song, which occurred in the Columbia picture "Dirigible." Damages of $10 were assessed against the theatre and an injunction was granted prohibiting the unauthorized playing of this composition by the Madison. The action was regarded as a test case.

String Ensemble At San Francisco Orpheum

In reopening the RKO Orpheum theatre in San Francisco, special attention has been paid by District Chief J. J. Franklin to the musical setup and something different has been arranged. A string ensemble has been organized and placed under the direction of Uzia Bermani, who has won acclaim for his work over the air.

The opening program included "Gypsy Melodies" by the string ensemble and "Old-Fashioned Gems" by a vocal quintet. The music idea was carried out in the screen attraction also. "Singing with the band" is planned as a weekly feature.

Copyright Suit Settled

A suit filed in United States district court, Cincinnati, by Harms, Inc., New York, against James Pappas and John Demetriou, operating the Family theatre, Middletown, Ohio, has been settled out of court. The plaintiffs sought a settlement for alleged violation of copyright in connection with a song published by the plaintiffs.

Des Moines Station with NBC

Station KSO, Des Moines, will become a part of the National Broadcasting Company network on November 5, when a group of radio stars will participate in an inaugural program.

Muth, Fox German News Head, Here

Russell A. Muth, in charge of Fox's newsreel in Germany, arrived in New York from Berlin recently to discuss the Central European situation with Truman H. Talley, vice-president and general manager of Movietonews. Mr. Muth has been editor of Fox Tonende Wochenschau since it was started two years ago by Mr. Talley.

Formerly a cameraman, Mr. Muth was the first to fly over Mt. Vesuvius, when the volcano there was in action. He crashed on the mountainside when the gases from the volcano choked his motor. Later diplomats of the United States and Great Britain were thrown into a quandary when a shocked British Admiralty demanded his arrest for flying over the British fleet at Scapa Flow.

Mr. Muth was also one of the first to write of the adventures of a newsreel cameraman and his story ran serially in 50 newspapers.

Inventor Patents New Type of Sound Studio

Solomon S. Sugar, New York inventor, has been granted a patent on a new type of sound studio which is designed to render the sounds created within the studio with aural naturalness to the performers, give proper amplification to the sound impulses and provide means for absorbing certain sound waves to prevent a too prolonged reverberation, according to the specifications noted in the patent application.

The construction of the studio is said to allow for absorption by the surface of the walls of all sound waves which do not impinge on the pickup device, so that no reflected sound waves other than those from the sound niche will strike the pickup. Proper ventilation is also provided in the studio, it is claimed.

Spend Wisely for
SYNCROFILM

You wouldn't feed your family spoiled meat because you could get it a few cents cheaper, would you? The doctor would charge a lot more than the "saving."

You wouldn't give your patrons an inferior performance because you could buy sound equipment a few dollars cheaper, would you? The income you would turn away from the box office would be like the doctor's bill.

Thrift does not mean buying the cheapest. It means buying the most profitable.

Thrifty theatre owners buy Syncrofilm on its reputation for filling houses and keeping them filled. Are you a thrifty owner? Then buy and try Syncrofilm.

Your satisfaction is guaranteed. You get your money back if you are not satisfied. So far no Syncrofilm owner has asked for his money.

Rice Sues Van Beuren; Claims Shorts Agreement Violation

Grantland Rice, sports writer and director of Grantland-Rice Sportlights, Inc., through which he produces short subjects with the Van Beuren Corporation, has brought suit in New York supreme court to compel Amedee J. Van Beuren, president of the Van Beuren Corporation and treasurer of Sportlights, to account for $21,345 alleged to have been transferred from Sportlights to the Van Beuren Company.

Mr. Rice claims that he and Mr. Van Beuren agreed in 1929 to reserve as dividends all profits above $24,000 a year. He charges that in 1930, Mr. Van Beuren paid himself $20,000, or $8,000 more than the sum to which he was entitled, and funds to purchase 500 shares of its stock, which he then turned over to the Van Beuren Corporation.

Florida Circuit Takes Control of 13 Theatres

Thirteen theatres, located in Miami, Palm Beach and Lake Worth, Florida, have been taken over by Consolidated Theatres, Inc., Jacksonville. Frank Rogers, vice president of the circuit, made the announcement of the deal, which becomes effective October 29.

Monogram, Consolidated Sign

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., will handle the film developing of Monogram Pictures, by a contract signed last week. The agreement covers both negative and release prints on the remaining 24 features scheduled for 1932-33. Approximately 20,000,000 feet of film are involved.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 141

Bluebook School Question No. 141 was: "(A) Does anyone know what electricity is? (B) Steam loses its pressure by condensation or by expanding. Explain in just what way electricity loses its pressure. (C) Tell what polarity is. (E) Would the effect be the same were you to connect your projection light source directly across the poles of the generator, or across the wires connected to the generator poles at some distance from the generator?

These questions brought about the flood. Didn't count 'em, but there were plenty of answers, believe you me! Here are those who sent in correct ones:

NEW ADDRESS OF F. H. RICHARDSON

All correspondence concerning the Bluebook School should be addressed, until further notice as follows:
F. H. Richardson,
No. 3 Tudor Lane,
Scarsdale, N. Y.

As to section A, J. Wentworth says, "The exact composition of the force we call electricity is as yet unknown. It is a force having neither weight, visibility nor bulk, which may be controlled and used by man by following certain well known laws and procedures. It is a force which exists in more or less latent form, in all matter."

Not so bad, I think you will all agree.

T. Van Vaulkenburg answers Section B thus: "We know that e. m. f. in electricity is exactly what pounds of pressure is in confined water or steam. Of exactly what this pressure consists, we do not know, but we do know that in the production of work the pressure is dissipated, and since electricity must pass from negative to positive (that is now, I believe, the latest accepted theory of the scientists) in the production of work, then we may fairly say that in the act of becoming positive, pressure is consumed or dissipated, or however we may prefer to express it.

"Electricity, then loses its pressure (voltage or e. m. f.) in the performance of work in the act of passing from negative to positive. This answer is, however, qualified by the fact that since there may be a closed battery circuit which will run the battery down—well, I don't quite know, but I believe that even in this, work is performed because of the fact that the mere operation of the battery constitutes work. I would myself like to ask your opinion on that point."

Assuming that you have in mind a closed circuit without any power, using devices in circuit therewith—just the connection of the two battery posts with a copper wire—there would be the resistance of the wire and of the battery, which combination would generate heat, and that is ample proof that an effort (work) is required to cause the current to circulate and run the battery down.

More than twenty, headed by Rau and Evans, Williams, Borst, Wentworth and Van Vaulkenburg, say almost exactly the same thing concerning Section C; namely; "Polarity is the difference of electrical pressure existing between the terminal poles of a charged battery or an operating dynamo. It is the negative and positive charge endeavoring to neutralize the electrical pressure (e. m. f. or voltage) existing between them. It is the affinity of the two for each other."

On Section D, K. L. Knight says, "The wires attached to the poles of a battery or dynamo are nothing more than an extension of the actual generator poles. The effect of connecting a projection light source to wires a distance from the generator terminals would be exactly the same, except for resistance set up in the pole extension by the composition of the wires themselves, by the diameter of the wires, by the condition of the various connections, including switches, etc. All these things will cause resistance in proportion to composition, size and excellence of connections, which resistance will operate to consume e. m. f., and thus to reduce the current flow at the lamp as against that it would receive were the connection made at the generator terminals, ballast resistance being the same in both cases."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

THE OLD ERA WENT OUT WHEN THIS FILM CAME IN!

HERE are some of the contributions which Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative has made to the motion picture industry: greater artistic opportunities for the cameraman . . . adaptability to any kind of light . . . lowered lighting costs on the lot and in the studio . . . lessened strain for director and actor . . . greater latitude for the laboratory . . . better prints for the exhibitor . . . All along the line there have been changes in procedure and improvement in results. In fact, the old motion picture era definitely went out when this film came in. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. NOW FORWARD!

WRITING while the tabulators are still at work on the finals, it would appear certain that the presidential election has revealed a tremendous majority with minds made up and in agreement. Nothing should more certainly conduce to renewed public confidence than the fact that what such a large majority desires is brought about, and it has been contended on all sides by all experts that public confidence has been the need of the day for recovery. In that light it would appear reasonable to expect our world to look and perhaps even to be considerably brighter.

There are, also, some more immediate technical and interior reasons for anticipation that the box office will show an upturn as the aftermath of the election. Mr. Charles E. Lewis, exhibitor and editor of our Round Table section, took the pains to make a personal study of campaign influences on the attendance of thirty threatres in the metropolitan area from Westchester County to Long Island and returned with a dismaying report of devastating increases of radio listeners at the very hours when performances were in progress. Reports to the Theatre Receipts department show a decline for last week.

The campaign was full of showmanship, competitive showmanship and entertainment—not the best entertainment, but free and entertaining never the less. The radio set has for weeks been keeping motion picture patrons away from the box office, at home and in social groups listening to the orators, the spellbinders, the promisers and the combatants. Nightly billings of such names as Mr. Herbert Hoover, Mr. Alfred Emanuel Smith, Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Mr. Owen D. Young, with all of the expressed and implied issues and all the vast flood of newspaper attention, constitute serious competition for any array of names and plays that Hollywood might muster. It may be remarked that on several occasions they were considerably louder and funnier than several motion pictures of the season.

This, it would seem from study of current conditions, is the time to sell the public back to the box office.

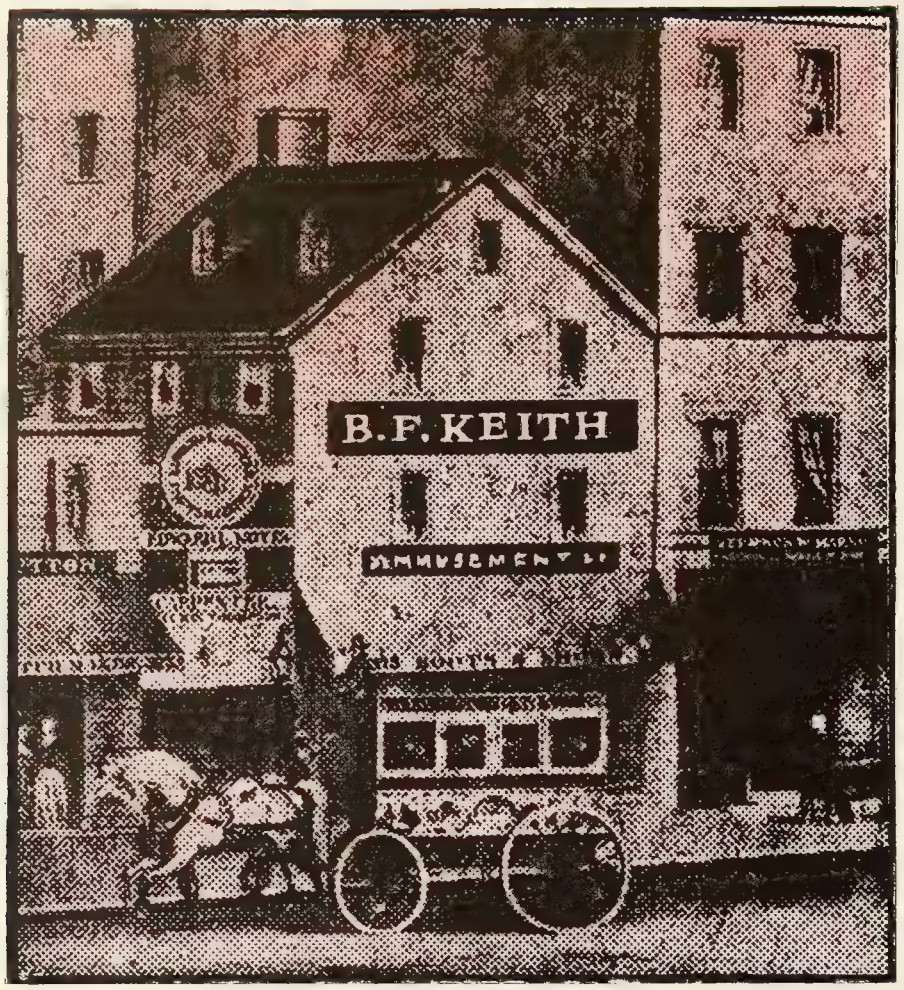
TOO DAMN BIG

THE great experimental evolutionary processes of nature once produced a dinosaur a half a block long. It took so long for his tail to respond to what his brain had decided that his enemies got him. He isn't any more. The Pawlonia tree will grow eight feet high from seed in one season, and usually winter kills back seven feet. A king in Cambodia worked 600,000 subjects fifty years building a memorial sculpture wall miles upon miles long, and now the archeologists can't find the king's name. Thomas A. Edison decided to short-cut all the processes of metallurgy by running iron ore through a mill and breaking the ferrous oxide molecule so magnets could extract the pure iron. He built the world's most stupendous rock-crusher, delivering million ton wallops. They nearly broke Edison, but they didn't bust the tiny molecule. There's an office building in New York so big that it could house the whole of any one of several considerable American cities. More than half of its lofty space is at present useful only for jumping off purposes. D. W. Griffith made the world's biggest picture, "The Birth of a Nation," and then reached out to make the super-greatest, resulting in "Intolerance," which was so big it had to have four stories in it. Griffith paid for it. The world's biggest motion picture theatre was built in New York and did well until everybody had seen the world's greatest theatre. The receivers got it. The world's biggest circuit of motion picture theatres was put together. Now they are taking it apart. The moral, if any, is that the biggest always busts the best.

THE KENT PLAN

WHAT may be termed the "Kent Plan," relating to the readjustment of relations between the producer-distributor corporations and the exhibitors, appears now to be approaching enough acceptance to become the basis for the internal remedy of many of the industry's internal ills. About individual points of the proposals which make up Mr. Sidney Kent's method there may be some debate, but of the spirit and intent there can properly be none.

Mr. Kent's outline acknowledges the mutuality of interest which must be more than a theory if the industry is to escape further turmoils, delaying yet further the devotion of its complete resources to rehabilitation and reconstruction. The motion picture has quite enough problems in dealing with the public against a multiplicity of competitions, without creating difficulties for itself.



Some weeks ago in these pages Mr. Martin Quigley discussed the then projected resort of exhibitor organizations to campaigns for governmental intervention as warranted only in extremity. The motion picture can not afford a war. Bargaining is a normal and healthy activity of business, but bargaining is business only so long as it recognizes the rights of both parties to life, liberty and pursuit of profits.

Now that Mr. William Beebe, the submarine naturalist, can go a half a mile down into Davy Jones' locker, and salvaging divers can work somewhere in the vicinity of a hundred salty fathoms below, the motion picture camera has a new world of adventure to record for us. The whole face of the earth has been photographed but what lies under a full three-quarters of it, the portion covered by the sea, is largely as unknown as the other side of the moon. Many a romantic secret sleeps in the deep where the angel fish play between the ribs of bullion laden galleons on the Spanish Main and doubtless somewhere along the wild west coast of Ireland there are chapters of Armada history yet to come up out of cold green waters. So, too, in the Mediterranean. Somewhere down there is the next conquest of the camera.

SKYLINES OF 50 YEARS

FIFTY years ago B. F. Keith opened a "variety show" in a store room in Boston. In 1896 the Keith theatre began to present Edison pictures, projected with an Armat Vitascope, supplied by Raff & Gammon of New York, agents. Now RKO, the successor, heir and assign of the great mechanism of amusement enterprises which has come into being in the intervening half a century, from the germinal Keith project, is celebrating a golden anniversary. Meanwhile, the enterprise in its ramifications includes a coast-to-coast circuit of theatres, a motion picture producing and distributing concern, a close kinship with the newer art of the air and National Broadcasting Company, and again, at this end of a half century, the little amusement project started in the Boston store is jutting up into the sky in the steel and stone towers of the Radio City at Rockefeller Center, with its new RKO-Roxy Theatre in all its bravery of modernism.

Terminals of a 50-year span: Above is an old newspaper print of the birthplace of B. F. Keith vaudeville, forerunner of Radio-Keith-Orpheum. Below is an architect's sketch of Radio City, showing the garden atop International Music Hall, and RKO and RCA buildings in the background.

KENT PLAN TO SETTLE EXHIBITOR PROBLEMS IN FINAL CONFERENCE

Program Calls For Standard Contract and Restoration of Voluntary Arbitration and Film Boards of Trade

The motion picture industry is on the eve of readjusting the machinery of exhibition and distribution by adopting an entirely new program intended to create amicable relations between buyer and seller and thereby meet today's most serious problems. As the most important development in a decade or more in the field of distribution the proposed new modus operandi would, its exponents believe, immediately alleviate, if not entirely eradicate, the socalled "evils" and "ills" over which exhibitors and distributors have been at odds for years.

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film and in effect "spokesman of the industry," and leaders of the two important national exhibitor units, were grouped on Wednesday about a table in New York at work on the final stages of a project for reform which is all-embracing. It includes:

Adoption by distributors of a standard form of contract as an alternative to the many individual agreements now in use It would provide for additional product cancellation and relief in other phases of exhibition.

Voluntary arbitration as a part of the contract and wherever requested by the exhibitor in lieu of the present system of settling disputes in court.

Re-establishing the Film Boards of Trade in their status of former days.

Settlement of major trade disputes through a "Supreme Court" of the industry.

Revamping of local zoning and protection systems.

Eventual establishment of a selling plan which automatically would adjust the exclusive run situation. A flexible admission basis.

The effects of such a program are of double importance because of the current movement toward decentralization, launched recently by John Hertz of Paramount, and pointing toward a wider expansion of independent theatre interests.

Authors of the project see in its adoption by all industry factions a complete cessation of the hostile moves launched jointly by Allied States Association and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Chicago last September and, of more importance, possibly the beginning of a new economic era in the business.

Spurred on by decision of the exhibitor organizations to campaign for federal regulation, Mr. Kent, who said he was acting personally and for Fox alone, invited the leaders of the exhibitor units to talk over things. They met at the Union League Club in New York October 22 and at the Hotel Carlton in Washington October 29 to secretly discuss the program. The conference resulted in what virtually represented oral agreement by exhibitors to accept most of the proposals of Mr. Kent. Final meetings in New York beginning this Wednesday were called to reduce the discussions to a signed and sealed compact.

A new subcommittee of Allied and MPTOA, and Abram F. Myers, general counsel for Allied, includes Nathan Yamins and Jay Emanuel for MPTOA, and Edward G. Levy for Allied.

Exhibitors are meeting with Mr. Kent at his suggestion and it remains for them to accept or reject his proposals. Upon their decision depends the future of the legislative campaign launched at Chicago and supposed to take form at exhibitor mass meetings in Chicago November 28 and in New York December 1. Abandonment of the proposed mass meeting, is expected to follow successful conclusion of the negotations.

Commenting on the present conference, Mr. Lightman said: "Our organization (MPTOA) always advocated a constructive program and it is obvious that such a progmam is just as acceptable to us now. I take the personal position that if the current negotiations can be concluded successfully with any one company, or more, it will meet with the entire approval of our membership. It is foolish to say such a program is impossible, because it is not, if distributors desire to go along with us. Whether they intend to do so remains to be seen during the week."

It appears, then, that MPTOA is ready to drop the federal legislative platform if a reform agreement can be negotiated with distributors immediately. Mr. Lightman's statement also seems to imply that the situation must be ironed out at once or the anti-distributor program adopted at Chicago will continue to have the support of the MPTOA. Although the reaction of Allied to the program is not known, it is assumed that the forces led by Mr. Myers and W. A. Steffes, Allied's president, will fall in line and discontinue the long fight which they have waged for Government intervention and a corrective measure. It will be recalled that in a statement issued in Chicago in September at the first get-together of Allied and MPTOA Mr. Lightman and Mr. Steffes jointly warned that a campaign for Government control would be adapted as "a last resort."

If an agreement is not reached, an exhibitor leader said this week, all hopes for conferences will be abandoned immediately and exhibitors will resort to efforts to obtain legislative relief as outlined at Chicago. Rumors of dissension within the exhibitor organizations over further "compromise" meetings are in circulation and are said to have originated with the refusal or inability of Mr. Kent to tell them whether or not he was authorized to speak for all distributors or solely for his own company. H. M. Richey, of Michigan, an Allied member of the Chicago joint committee, said the original program submitted by Mr. Kent was unsatisfactory as far as Allied is concerned. However, Mr. Kent said he launched the project individually and indicated it would not commit distributors other than Fox, since he was not acting officially for the MPPDA, or as the official representative of any other company. It is understood that confidential conferences have been held recently at which he presented the program to representatives of all corporations. This was confirmed by Mr. Kent Monday when he said: "I told members of the Hays organization at last week's meeting that I believed this program represented a means to an amicable settlement of industry affairs and that it is a way to make peace with exhibitors." It was learned this week that at first Warners and MGM disapproved of certain phases of the project, but since then Warners has fallen into line and MGM is on the verge. In any event, Mr. Kent already has said Fox will adopt the program regardless of the decision of other companies.

The sponsors of the project were deeply concerned Monday and Tuesday by reports that the pronouncement of Fox's attitude by Mr. Kent to MPPDA members was actuated by or resulted in internal controversy or defiance within the Hays organization. Mr. Kent denied this.

Recognizing that they are in a better position than ever before to solidify the industry, and at a time when it is sorely needed in order to better economic conditions, executives of the leading corporations will, it is understood, take the current matter out of the hands of their attorneys, who heretofore have stood in the way of contract adoption. They will negotiate the agreements directly with representatives of exhibitors. Feeling between exhibitors and the legal staffs of distributors runs high. Several weeks ago theatre owners charged the attorneys by procrastinating had blocked adoption of a standard contract. It is generally believed in distributor quarters that the Kent program, said to be favored by nearly all parties, is the most liberal ever submitted to exhibitors and that its successful operation would settle major differences.

The series of events which led up to the

DIVIDENDS OF DEPRESSION

WE are now well into the most acutely product-conscious season that the motion picture has encountered since the coming of sound. It is no mere burbling of optimism when it is observed that never before has the production machine—Hollywood, if you please—done so well. We are screening these days the fruits of prodigious effort, effort made in a new consciousness of necessity written in the stark letters of the depression mood. No miracle pictures have appeared, but there are many good ones. Also these better pictures are reasonably well spread across the production map.

Obviously enough the motion picture's problems are not yet solved, but this is an impatient industry, much given to intolerances of judgments between its branches, so we hear always a very great deal about what is wrong and very little indeed about what is right.

With as much velocity as is to be expected, or is possible, of so large and complex a mechanism as the motion picture production-distribution-exhibition organization we are building anew the industry these days, and building upon the stable elements, the surviving values that have persisted like good foundations and walls in a fire. The process is not quite as conscious, not as sharply planned as it might be, because it is so painfully difficult and unpleasant to write off the dream castles of '29. But those dream structures are week by week writing themselves off by the inevitable process of disintegration. As their decay becomes more obvious it becomes easier for the accountants to make the final entries which mark the spot on the ledger when the fading of the fictions of yesterday was acknowledged.

Here and there men are going down with their dreams. And here and there men have awakened in the ruins of their castles in Spain and are now to be seen striding out to start anew, carrying only the tools of their craft and an experience enriched by the discovery that their fortune and future is in their ability to work. Self-contented complacent assurance is not nearly so abundant these days as it was some three years ago. The man who knew it all and sat with the ready answer on his lips could have been seen, or if not seen at least located, in any motion picture office in '29. That man cannot be found today.

That has brought us to the more wholesome condition of now, when ensconced authority and fiat law enunciated by the mighty has had to yield to the more natural and permanently progressive policy of "let's try."

The motion picture rode itself into disaster clad in the tinsel armor of an outworn success. The chieftains of that march can no longer thunder down the questionings of newer ideas with their massive authority. They cannot say "I am right because I've made ten million dollars." All too ready is the answer, "And where did you put them, where are they now?"

As is so often observed in these pages, all the real values of the motion picture exist as truly, as potently, today as ever, and on those values and indestructible abilities and powers the industry is today rebuilding. The process is more rapid than the superficial judgments of the moment will admit. It is natural enough that this should be so because the builders are busy with their work, taking tentatively, experimentally, the steps by which progress is to be had, not proclaiming much as they go, while the vociferations accompanying the fall of the dream castles continue to echo about. Some added assurance may be enjoyed now by carefully recognizing them as laments, not law.

These processes are in evidence, if one will be patient enough to look for them, everywhere in the industry. In Hollywood, for instance, that Hollywood which distributor and exhibitor alike have had so continuously on the fire of criticism for the year past, there are today at work all manner of constructive new efforts, revealing a new consciousness of responsibility and of opportunity. New men representing new ideas are being given quite as much of an opportunity as any one could hope for, even if not as much as one might ask. There are young men directing who were classified as idealistic radicals of the Greenwich Village fringe a half a dozen years ago. In somewhat less than key positions, but in important posts close to them, are many young men from among whom the executive production chiefs of the morrow will emerge, and among them are several who give promise because they do not know "so many things that are not so."

And it is not to be hastily assumed that the issues between the masters of the Castles in Spain days of '29 and the experimenting founders of the coming new order are entirely issues among men and corporations. Very often in fact they are issues within the man himself. The write-offs at hand are being demonstrated quite as much in states of mind as in individuals. The ability to write off a state of mind in behalf of a new, or newly recognized, state of facts is incidentally a considerably better index of age than a count of the years. Some of the oldest men in this industry are its youngest in these terms. Fortunately, most of the builders of the industry through the rise of the feature are yet fit to be contributors to the work of now.

Nor do all these observations have to be made anonymously or in terms of vague generality. The steps of the new order are being made by readily identifiable men and organizations. Without any endeavor in this chatting moment to be exhaustively complete, we can point, for example, to certain developments in Universal, where Carl Laemmle, Jr., has within the year risen to full stature alongside his father. The son of the founder is making himself a conspicuous exponent of new ideas. Part of it has been said in productions of important success in their departures from traditional pattern, and more recently in vigorous expression of design, as young Mr. Laemmle's declaration, within the fortnight, for a sharp reduction of dialogue in the drama, in an art that has tended to talk itself into boredom with word weary audiences and to butt its head against linguistic national barriers. Mr. Laemmle just now would seem engaged in a charming movement to get motion into the motion picture again. His immediately contemporary "Air Mail" outstandingly puts point to the principle. In that production we are reminded again that it is possible and most effective of the screen to record things happening as the direct sources of emotion reaction, as opposed to the dependence on the creation of second hand emotions derived from the cloudy mirror of a playwright's vocabulary filtered through a director's understanding and an actor's enunciation.

And we can note, too, just turning over the pages of Motion Picture Daily and Hollywood Herald, many lesser evidences of the new growth, breaking through like the buddings of spring among the leaves of the autumn before. Down among the credits on an MGM production, a Fu Manchu tale, appears the name of Irene Kuhn, author of the continuity. Hardly more than a year ago now she went West, a novice, at the invitation of Winfield Sheehan to contribute the vigor and excitement of her tabloid newspaper technique to the screen. Over on the RKO lot, where David Selznick presides, another young exponent of the new order, or the order of newness, rising from the background of the adventurous and often spectacularly successful career of his acutely minded father, "L. J.", we observe among the directors Dudley Murphy, and it seems not so long ago that this Mr. Murphy was a young-man-around-New York full of ardently expounded theories and passingly known for his excitement over picture rhythms exemplified by the "Ballet Mechanique." We see new daring and broadening technique in Warners' schedule of product, with such a departure from tradition as "Life Begins" and the insistent timeliness of "I Am a Fugitive from a Chain Gang," pictures with "bite" in them. Fox reflects an adventuresomeness in materials with "Six Hours to Live." We observe MGM a-thirst after new and remarkable material and technique as in "Strange Interlude" and industriously capitalizing the anciently established value of personalities and stardom by multiple star casts. In the movements of Jesse Lasky, too, is another manifestation of the vigor of the new order. Having made his contribution in a long continuous career with what we now call Paramount, he has turned his back on all that, like a pioneer of the "Covered Wagon" era he recorded, and now moves out into the new era with another concern and new associations to start all over. And in Paramount, busy with its many adjustments of men and methods, Adolph Zukor exemplifies afresh the undefeated spirit that made him a founder by adherence, through thick and thin, to a cause and purpose, denoting a tenacity and elasticity of which younger men may well be envious. What he has seen to do and what each day has offered to be done, Adolph Zukor has proceeded to do, without audible plaint about the effulgent yesterday when the world of the motion picture lay in his hand.

The first great shock of these sequel years was the revelation that there were in this super-industry no super-men. The assurance of today is that while there are not yet, and not to be, any supermen, there are some Men. The motion picture is a man's job, not more than that.

STUDIOS MAKE GOOD THE PROMISE OF BETTER PICTURES THIS SEASON

Production Trend Is Decidedly Toward Improved Quality on All Lots, Says Meehan; Cites Outstanding Films

by LEO MEEHAN

Hollywood Staff Correspondent

As your preview reporter out here in Hollywood, I repeatedly have stressed my belief during the past several months that the new season's product held great promise, that the production community had been pretty well deflated of considerable of its ego; that picture makers from top to bottom had come down to earth, were earnestly engaged in giving the best of their talents to the production of a line of pictures which would revive interest in the cinema.

Looking back briefly over some of the recent product, I believe my predictions have been borne out by the results. Some of the pictures already have demonstrated their box office power, and others, finished more recently, will do so unless all previous signs fail. I believe it is interesting also to note that no one organization, by a long shot, has a corner on the good product. The better picture fever is widespread from North Hollywood and Burbank way down to Culver City; the enthusiasm has pretty well infected every producing organization, major and independent.

Let's just run down the list more or less alphabetically to see what we see in recapitulation. Mind you, this is not intended to be a complete list by any means; rather it is intended to emphasize the point that good pictures are being made on all lots, that the production trend is decidedly toward improved quality. Needless to say, there has been effective economy everywhere, as well. This has not yet been completed, but certainly it is very definitely under way.

Columbia swings merrily along with such attractions as "American Madness," "War Correspondent," "Washington Merry-go-Round," "The Bitter Tea of General Yen" and others to come.

Fox has hit the bullseye with a series of good ones which include "The First Year," "Hat Check Girl," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Society Girl," "The Trial of Vivienne Ware," "Wild Girl," "Rackety Rax," "Six Hours to Live." "Cavalcade," "Call Her Savage" and other promising bets in the final stages now.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's high-powered production organization continues to click in 16-cylinder fashion with such shows as "As You Desire Me," "Grand Hotel," "Huddle," "Smilin' Through," "Speak Easily," "Strange Interlude," "Tarzan, the Ape Man," "Red Dust," "Prosperity." Like the others, it also has some fine product in the works right now to follow up a strong start.

Paramount enthusiasm has been at high pitch, following a general studio reorganization. Better quality has been demonstrated by "Devil and the Deep," "Guilty as Hell," "Horsefeathers," "Lady and Gent," "Love Me Tonight," "Movie Crazy," "20,000 Witnesses," "This Is the Night," "If I Had a Million."

At RKO Radio the big numbers of the year so far have included "What Price Hollywood," "Bill of Divorcement," "Bird of Paradise," "Little Orphan Annie," "Phantom Fame," "The Conquerors," "Age of Consent."

United Artists, while not embarked upon so large a program as some of the other large companies, contributes its share with "Cynara" and "The Kid From Spain," both Goldwyn pictures, and the Schenck-Al Jolson picture, "Happy Go Lucky."

Universal already has come through with substantial attractions such as "The All-American," "Back Street," "The Doomed Battalion," "Air Mail," "Once in a Lifetime." The Laemmles are busy preparing some more strong numbers, too.

The Warner-First National organization has been soaring steadily with a series of striking pictures which include "The Crooner," "Doctor X," "Life Begins," "Tiger Shark," "Two Seconds," "Silver Dollar," "20,000 Years in Sing Sing," "Blessed Event," "One Way Passage," "A Successful Calamity," "Winner Take All," a neat array of product for anybody's studio to turn out.

Among the independents, Tiffany has scored notably with "The Last Mile," "Strangers of the Evening," "False Faces," all splendidly produced by the Kelly-Bischoff-Saal organization for release through World Wide. This company also has had other good subjects from its producers, including "The Crooked Circle," "Breach of Promise" and—coming up—Mack Sennett's "Hypnotized."

M. H. Hoffman's Allied Pictures has had a busy season supplying the independent market with pictures such as "Unholy Love," "Parisian Romance," the Hoot Gibson series and other attractions.

Trem Carr and the Monogram producing organization have been whirling merrily along. Particularly impressive among its many well made pictures are "Klondike" and "The Thirteenth Guest," samples of what can be done when business sagacity is combined with intimate production knowledge.

As I said at the outset, this is not intended to be a complete record of the good pictures. It recalls a number of those with which your previewer is personally familiar, and which I regard as proof sufficient that Hollywood is in the midst of a season of good saleable production schedule.

The weeding out of incompetents, politicians and hail-fellow-well-met is under way. They don't last so long nowadays if they have nothing but social popularity to depend upon. As rapidly as contractual commitments will permit, the readjustment of salaries to figures more commensurate with the times is going on. There is a decided tendency to decentralize production authority, to place responsibility upon individuals. This is seen with independent units, releasing through major channels, such as those of Charles R. Rogers, Sam Rork, Jesse Lasky, Edward Small, Joseph I. Schnitzer, B. P. Schulberg, Kelly-Bischoff-Saal, Trem Carr, Arthur Beck, I. E. Chadwick, William Sistrom and others.

If you think today's Hollywood is anything like the Hollywood of one year ago, you are 'way behind on your Hollywood. For once in its hectic career, at least, the production community has discovered there is a close kinship between box office records and studio employment statistics. There's plenty of room yet for improvement, but everything is heading in the right direction. If you don't watch out, Hollywood is likely to be found making pictures to entertain America instead of to amuse itself and flatter its own vanity!

YEATS-BROWN TELLS "HOW TO KNOW SHAW"

Francis Yeats-Brown, English novelist, at the moment in Hollywood, has propounded a recipe which may best be described as "How to Know Shaw." Mr. Yeats-Brown, who dates his acquaintance with the G.B.S. to war days, puts it this way: "I know half a hundred writers who made his acquaintance as I did by going to him for a statement on some question, then coming back later for a personal visit. Often, in my newspaper work, I have written him a note about some public matter, and always he has replied by return mail—incidentally, using a postal card."

Mr. Yeats-Brown, in Hollywood to see the filming of his "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" by Paramount, drops the thought that Shaw may visit the United States, extending a trip to Japan to the Pacific Coast and, as Shaw himself put it, "avoid all the fuss by sneaking into America through the back door."

RCA Reports $812,128 Loss in Third Quarter

A net deficit of $812,128 for the third quarter of the year and a net deficit of $592,722 for the first nine months of the year have been reported by the Radio Corporation of America. The deficit stated for the first nine months compares with a net income of $3,957,489 available for preferred stock in the first nine months of 1931.

Deficit for the third quarter and nine months was before any dividends on the A and B preferred stock. No preferred dividends were paid out in the third quarter, but $343,019 was paid out in the first nine months on A preferred stocks.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

NEW OFFICERS. Of the Academy: (Standing) Max Ree, Oliver H. P. Garrett, John C. Cromwell, Sam Hardy, Lawrence Grant, Karl Struss, J. Theodore Reed, Lester Cowan; (seated) Al Cohn, B. P. Schulberg, Benjamin Glazer, Conrad Nagel (president), M. C. Levee (retiring president), Fred Niblo, Irving Thalberg and Frank Capra.

INDEPENDENT. (Right) Edmund Grainger, son of James R. Grainger, Fox sales chief, in New York to launch an independent production venture.

SIREN. A la Garbo. Being a new study of Juliette Compton as she appears (with certain brunette analogies to the blonde Swedish star) in First National's story of international finance and loves, "The Match King."

SCREEN STAR HONORED. At the luncheon which was one of the events in Boston's entertainment of Edward G. Robinson, Warner Brothers star, and Mrs. Robinson during their visit while on a vacation trip through New England. Shown are Mayor Curley, Miss Mary Curley, City Treasurer Dolan, George W. Giles, Mrs. Biggs Cambridge, the Robinsons, two members of the School Committee, and Joe Sachs.

ENDING VACATION. Rouben Mamoulian—Russian, lawyer, opera impresario, stage director, and since his direction of "Applause" for the screen, on Paramount's staff of directors—as he arrived the other day on the Leviathan from Europe, where he has been enjoying an extended vacation.

RECOGNITION. (Above) Duke Ellington demonstrates modern music for Percy Grainger at New York University while his manager, Irving Mills, looks on.

LIKE BROTHER. (Left) Kermit Maynard, who has joined his brother, Ken, in pictures, and also portrays Ken's brother in World Wide's "Drum Taps."

SISTERS. Ruby Keeler (Mrs. Al Jolson), shown (in center) with her sisters (whose names the photographer has denied us) who are with her in Warner Brothers' "42nd Street." The sisters serve as extras in what is called an effort to gain experience in acting before the camera for contemplated screen careers.

NATURE'S POLKA DOTS. Cloaking pretty Rochelle Hudson as well as her pets, and all very representative of her role in the Monarch production, "The Savage Girl," the cast of which includes Harry Myers, Walter Byron and Adolph Millar. Miss Hudson has the title role.

MARRIED. (Above) Cliff Edwards, famous ukelele addict and MGM comedian, and his bride, the former Nancy Dover, once of Ziegfeld's Follies.

STUDY. (Right) A new portrait of Ann Dvorak, to be seen prominently in First National's "Three On a Match," by the Viennese photographer, Ferenc.

BEGINNING VACATION. Minna Gombel, Fox featured player, as she arrived from her home town, Baltimore, to vacation in New York. She has completed 13 featured roles for Fox during the last year. Her vacation plans include the return trip to Hollywood, which will be via the Panama Canal.

FORTY WINKS. Those natural twins of comedy, Marie Dressler and Polly Moran, in a sober moment as Polly lays her weariness in her teammate's ample lap. The Misses Dressler and Moran are together again in MGM's timely comedy-drama, "Prosperity," directed by Sam Wood.

MILITARY TRIBUTE. To Constance Bennett, RKO Radio star, for her efforts in behalf of soldier welfare. She is shown being awarded a distinguished service medal by Commander Byk of Lexington Post, American Legion, at the post's annual military ball in New York. Looking on are General R. L. Bullard and other officers.

Frank Walker May Join Cabinet

Franklin Delano Roosevelt's victory at the polls on Tuesday may elevate a motion picture showman to the presidential cabinet. The Scripps-Howard newspapers on Wednesday noted Frank C. Walker as first possibility for the post of secretary of war. He had previously been mentioned as a possibility for attorney general.

Mr. Walker played an important part in the national Democratic campaign as treasurer of the national committee. He has been associated for many years with the M. E. Comerford theatre interests in Pennsylvania and acted as counsel of the MPTOA until an expansion of his current political duties necessitated resigning at the beginning of the presidential campaign.

Report Griffith To Produce Play

It is currently reported in New York theatrical circles that David Wark Griffith, famed motion picture figure, will produce a play, "Damn Deborah," written by Walter Charles Roberts, and once owned by George Miller. It is anticipated that Mr. Griffith is producing the play with an eye to future adaptation to the talking screen.

It is said Mr. Griffith selected the play after reading approximately 100 scripts during the past six months. Dorothy Gish and Haidee Wright have been mentioned as possible selections for the cast. The play concerns a young daughter of a Tory family during the Revolution who masqueraded as a man to fight with the Americans.

Gibbons Sues Van Beuren; Charges Contract Cancelled

Floyd Gibbons, lecturer and correspondent, has filed suit in New York federal court against the Van Beuren Corporation, short subject producers, in which he charges the company cancelled a contract by which he was to make 13 short subjects for it. Mr. Gibbons asks $60,500. The suit follows a previous action brought by Grantland Rice, sports writer and short subject producer, to compel Amedee J. Van Beuren to account for $21,345 alleged to have been transfered to the Van Beuren Company.

Mr. Van Beuren, the president of the defendant company, contends the contract contained a cancellation clause and that therefore the action was legal. He claimed also that the contract was not made with Mr. Gibbons, but with the National Broadcasting Company, to which Mr. Gibbons was under contract at the time. The action filed claims that two of the group of films had already been completed, based on the experiences of Mr. Gibbons in the World War, when the contract was cancelled.

Columbia Pays Dividend

The board of directors of the Columbia Pictures Corporation last week authorized payment of a regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the preference stock, payable December 1 to stockholders of record November 17.

"BLACK CROOK" STAR MAKES FINAL EXIT

The last curtain has rung down for Genevieve Lowell, who in the gay nineties shocked and pleased innumerable audiences as the star of that famous musical comedy, "The Black Crook," the progenitor of all musical comedies. Miss Lowell, in private life Mrs. C. C. Craig, deliberately set the stage for her final exit when warned of her dangerous condition a few days prior to her death in the Research Hospital, Kansas City, last week. "I'm ready. It will be my final role. All the plans are made, the stage is set," was her calm reply to attending doctors. She had selected the costume she would wear, had chosen pallbearers and honorary pallbearers. Miss Lowell had already erected a monument in Elmwood Cemetery, surmounted by a bronze Mercedes, the role she played in "Monte Cristo," at the height of her career at the age of 40. A tabloid version of "The Black Crook" was recorded for the screen by Pathe Audio Review some three years ago—that being the only screen use of the famed material.

O'Reilly Heads Relief Division

Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, New York, has accepted the chairmanship of the motion picture theatre group to help the Emergency Unemployment Relief Committee raise funds for unemployment relief this winter, according to an announcement by H. B. Lamy, Jr., executive chairman of the committee's commerce and industry division.

The division, which is organizing 100 major trade groups through which funds will be solicited from employers, employees and employees' associations, last year raised more than $10,000,000 of the more than $19,000,000 raised by the committee to finance "made" work and direct relief for the jobless.

Cohn Denies Reported Columbia Personnel Changes

Harry Cohn, president of Columbia Pictures, last week issued a statement denying reports attributed to trade papers that departmental changes are in the offing at the home office and that the Coast studio would be closed for a brief period.

The statement said:

"My attention has been called to articles appearing in the trade papers pertaining to executive and departmental changes in the Columbia home office and to the contemplated closing of our studios for a brief period. These announcements are without the slightest foundation. Nothing could be further from the actual facts. I trust that once and for all this statement will put a damper on such idle gossip."

Kenneth Collins Leaves Macy Post

Kenneth Collins, long considered the most able advertising executive in the retail field, has announced his resignation as executive vice-president and director of publicity for R. H. Macy & Company, Inc., New York department store. Mr. Collins indicated his intention of forming his own advertising agency, to be known as Kenneth Collins, Inc.

Mr. Collins, who is only 34 years old, had tendered his resignation once before, in March, 1931, but later withdrew it. He was named publicity director four years ago, following two years as advertising manager. Joining Macy's in 1925, he resigned while assistant advertising manager to join a Cleveland agency, but returned to the New York post a short time later.

Mr. Collins, generally recognized as one of the foremost exponents in his field of "humanized" copy in advertising, has said that sentiment, too, has its place in advertising, but the writer must know when not to "slop over." Details of his new organization have not as yet been announced. In January, 1932, Mr. Collins addressed a meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers in New York, and aroused sharp retorts from various advertising executives of major companies as a result of his unadulterated criticisms of motion picture theatre advertising methods.

MGM to Increase Production Costs

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer will spend $33,000,000 within the next year on picture productions, George A. Hickey, of Los Angeles, division chief, said in Salt Lake City this week. This amount is an increase of $2,000,000 over last year. The newer releases are "Rasputin," "Strange Interlude" and "Red Dust." Rights have been purchased and production will begin shortly on "The Good Earth."

Mr. Hickey was in Salt Lake City with Hal Elias, division exploitation manager, inspecting the office there.

Belle Bennett, Star of Screen And Stage, Dies in Hollywood

Belle Bennett, famous on the Broadway stage and on the screen for the portrayal of mother roles, died November 4 in the Cedars of Lebanon hospital in Hollywood at the age of 39. Her physician attributed her death to a form of cancer resulting from a nervous breakdown two years ago.

She began on the stage at the age of five weeks. Following appearances in several A. H. Woods stage productions, commencing in 1920, Miss Bennett returned to pictures, where she earlier had been in Westerns, and then, in 1925, reached the high point of her career with the creation of the title role of the mother in the Samuel Goldwyn pictures, "Stella Dallas." This part established her as a character actress and she frequently was loaned to other firms. During the past two years she had been prevented by ill health from doing much work in pictures or on the stage.

15 PER CENT CANCELLATION PROPOSED

current negotiations began August 23, when the board of Allied assembled in Chicago and voted to accept the "olive branch" extended by MPTOA leaders. A committee of six, headed by Mr. Steffes and Mr. Myers, was appointed to meet with six MPTOA representatives, led by Mr. Lightman. They got together in Chicago September 19 and 20 and decided on an aggressive campaign on behalf of the exhibitor. Resolutions were adopted calling for a federal bill unless distributors agreed to do something about unreasonable protection, unfair playing arrangements practiced by certain major distributors, compulsory block booking, exclusive runs, a new contract and other phases of exhibition.

After some postponements a second meeting was held in Chicago October 13. Additional steps were taken to proceed with the legislative campaign and later it was decided to call together exhibitors at mass meetings in Chicago and New York.

In the meantime, Sidney R. Kent, on October 22, established at informal conferences in New York the first contact between a distributor and the Allied-MPTOA joint committee regarding the problems. The reaction of distributors was beginning to bear fruit after much space had been given in the press to the threat of a federal legislative campaign, which several of the exhibitor group never expected would materialize.

"We merely discussed industry problems," Mr. Kent said of the initial meeting, "with a view to determining what definitely is at fault and what can be done in the way of correction." Previously, it had been admitted in the ranks of the joint committee that immediate action of the distributors in bringing about reforms would directly influence the future of the legislative program. A subsequent meeting between Mr. Kent and the representatives of theatre owners was held at Washington October 29, and the current conferences in New York followed.

On Wednesday morning, the exhibitors' subcommittee took up the program in the headquarters of the MPTOA, while Mr. Kent and the distributors probably were discussing the situation elsewhere. Both interests were scheduled to meet together later in the day but this meeting was postponed because exhibitors were still at work on the contract up to a late hour Wednesday night.

In the meantime Mr. Kent dispatched a special emissary to the editorial offices of Motion Picture Herald for a copy of the issue in which appeared a speech on industry problems which he delivered to the national convention of the MPTOA in Philadelphia about three years ago.

The industry had been surprised to learn that the affiliated circuit and independent theatre membership of the MPTOA, represented by committee, had substituted its previous highly conservative policies for Allied's platform of federal regulation. There was much speculation as to the reasons for merging the causes of the two associations in view of the previous directly opposite policies. It was learned confidentially this week that the merged structure may not be permanent. In this connection, Motion Picture Daily said on October 28:

"The MPTOA'S reversal of attitude on federal regulation was not really a reversal, it now develops, but was strategy deemed necessary to make a new uniform contract possible.

"If the new contract comes up to the expectations of its backers, they predict, federal regulation will not be necessary. Most of what are considered pressing industry problems will be covered in its provisions.

AMATEURS COMPETE FOR FILM AWARDS

The amateur motion picture makers of the world are in a high state of expectancy awaiting the annual award of the American Society of Cinematographers for the most outstanding picture made on 16-millimeter or 9½-millimeter film. Claims indicate more than 1,000,000 amateurs in this country, many grouped in clubs, of which there are estimated to be 300. Europe and the Orient have its devotees of the art. Entries have been received, it is said, from Japan, Korea, India, Australia, South Africa, as well as the major countries of the Continent. The judges will include, in addition to a group of outstanding executives and professional cameramen, three representatives of newspaper critics, producers, directors, feminine stars, masculine stars, film editors and writers.

"At the Chicago conference last month, it is learned, it became necessary for each organization to give way to the other in order to prevent failure of the negotiations. Allied relaxed its opposition to a standard contract and the MPTOA, it is understood, gave its approval for federal regulation, hoping that with this hanging as a threat over the industry, distributors would consent to a contract much more satisfactory from the exhibitor point of view than anything proposed in the past.

"As one MPTOA spokesman explains it, a uniform contract can be 'gotten over night,' and it is the MPTOA's stategy to have a uniform contract in effect before Allied's legislative program can be realized. In this event, it is said federal control would become unnecessary, as the contract itself would be regarded as sufficiently effective to cope with the 'evils' set out in Allied's bill.

"It is predicted that a standard exhibition contract eventually agreed upon by Allied and the MPTOA will be similar in some respects to the provisions incorporated in the proposed bill, although not as stringent. Thus, while the bill would abolish block booking in groups of five or more unless the exhibitor is allowed to cancel 20 per cent of the buy, the uniform contract, it is said, will provide for a large percentage of cancellations."

It appeared this week that there just had developed a difference of opinion in the exhibitors' subcommittee over the previous policy of not prematurely discussing its activities with the press. Mr. Lightman issued a statement Monday in which he outlined the obvious external facts of the meeting with Mr. Kent, but he would not discuss the actual happenings. He registered personal disapproval of the policy of secrecy and he would not say that Allied's committee members were insisting upon adherence to the order. Sidney Samuelson, president of New Jersey Allied and a committee member, indicated that the joint body had wasted a good part of a previous discussion trying to figure out how to prevent the trade press from learning and publishing what happened. "I have nothing to say about the meeting," said Mr. Samuelson. "I don't even remember who was there besides myself. There is somebody among us who is talking, and who shouldn't be. We spent most of our time trying to figure out a way of keeping the trade papers from spilling everything we say."

Mr. Kent's prominent participation in the negotiations marks the second time in which he has launched efforts to cement relations between dissatisfied exhibitors and distributors. While sales manager of Paramount, he took the lead about four years ago in bringing about the "5-5-5" conferences for a standard contract, which never was adopted by distributors.

The contract is the leading plank in the reform platform now being negotiated. The others, in the order of importance to the current conferees, are: voluntary arbitration; reestablishment of the Film Boards of Trade; an industry "Supreme Court"; revamping of zoning and protection; creation of a selling plan to adjust the exclusive run situation.

Already exhibitors are beginning to talk about "the new contract." Col. H. A. Cole, president of Texas Allied, dispatched a message to his members Wednesday urging all to attend the annual Texas convention at the Baker hotel in Dallas November 21, to take up protection and exclusive selling policies and terms of the new contract.

If the joint committee in New York approves the contract now being drafted with Mr. Kent, Fox will adopt it immediately and then exhibitor representatives will take it up individually with each distributor. Concerted action cannot be taken because of the Judge Thacher decision of 1929 which ruled out the standard form of contract.

Carl Laemmle said Universal would negotiate a new contract provided it is fair to everyone. "Peace among ourselves is the first step toward recovery. Let's take it!" he said. Most of the other corporations are understood to be ready to fall in line with Universal and Fox.

The contract, also because of the Thacher decision, must be offered to exhibitors as an alternative to the many individual agreements now in use. In reality, the new contract would not be standard in its entirety. Distributors undoubtedly will revise certain clauses in keeping with their operation, but legal objections to collective bargaining are avoided through individual adoption. Mr. Kent said the existence of a new form is "reasonable and logical" and that "it should have been adopted long ago."

For one thing, the new contract will provide for a better cancellation privilege. A new method of computation, being worked out, is understood to allow for cancellation of 15 per cent of the product purchased.

Current action on a contract is the climax of numerous discussions between Mr. Lightman and distributors earlier in the year. He could not get approval of the 5-5-5 form from distributors' attorneys.

It is pointed out that adoption of the new agreement could be brought about almost immediately regardless of existing mid-season contracts, that distributors could write out a new ticket for the unused pictures.

Voluntary arbitration will be provided for in the proposed contract. Judge Thacher's decision also ruled out compulsory arbitration. Mr. Kent said Tuesday that a system of voluntary arbitration was "essential," and an appeal for such a practice was voiced Monday night in a radio talk by Louis Nizer, general counsel of the New York Film Board of Trade, which is affiliated with the Hays

HONOLULU AND FILMS

Patrons of 12 Countries Brew Many Problems for Theatres of "Melting Pot" of the Hawaiis

by PERRY H. CRAFT

Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Honolulu, the "melting pot," brews many a strange problem for the theatre owner or operator. Japanese, Filipinos, Chinese and Portuguese constitute the majority of the show-going public. Intermingled are Samoans, Hawaiians, Porto Ricans, Koreans and Caucasians, Germans, French and English are a small minority.

Consolidated Amusement Company, of which E. I. Parker is general manager, controls two Honolulu deluxe houses, one second-rate house and four neighborhood houses, all exclusively sound, also one house sometimes the home of dramatic stock or musicals. Consolidated also has houses on the other islands, a principal one in Hilo. Admission prices have been reduced a few cents at the leading Honolulu theatres.

The two big houses in Honolulu and one neighborhood house use feature organists, and the same plan is pursued in the ace Hilo house. Alice Blue has been brought to the console of the Hawaii theatre from the Palace at Hilo.

Incidentally, a change of policy at the Honolulu Princess to permit smoking in any part of the house brought a flood of protests in the form of open letters to the newspapers. A few regulars threatened to withdraw their patronage. There are only two houses in which smoking is not permitted. One is the Hawaii, the second deluxe motion picture theatre, and the other the Liberty, home of stock and musicals.

Benshi Losing Jobs

In Honolulu, several "across the tracks" houses are open nightly. These seat from 200 to 300 and do a fair business. Trade is, of course, of the lowest class. Only recently have any of these houses been wired for sound. Managers report a consistently fair business. The volume of business must be large, since the picture rentals are higher than on the mainland.

There is one house, seating 1,300, Filipino-owned and managed, which when open does a very good business, regardless of the picture or attraction. Oriental acts use this house at times, when returning from mainland vaudeville tours.

In and around Honolulu are several Japanese owned houses. These are of course for Japanese trade but until recently they were chief tourist attractions because of the benshi. Interpreters standing on a platform, by the side of the screen with a long stick, would "emote" the same as characters shown on the screen—talking, laughing, crying and singing. This has been practically done away with, these houses now booking Japanese films exclusively and changing the programs three and four times a week. Japanese Hawaii born and educated on the mainland say these have far more beautiful exteriors than most of our own.

Recent reports from the other islands indicate that motion picture business is being maintained as well as could be expected. This from Kauai, Molokai, and Maui, which with Hawaii and Oahu (Honolulu) make up the principal islands of the group. The Island of Hawaii probably has held up best of all. Hilo, the principal city and second largest in the islands, has several industries running full blast, as well as several points of interest for visitors. All these islands must depend on Japanese, Chinese and Filipinos for their regular patronage.

Programs Sent to Army Posts

Consolidated buys seven or eight complete programs weekly. After showing in the deluxe houses or the second class theatres, pictures are sent to Schofield Barracks. In Uncle Sam's largest army post, housing a complete division, are three theatres. Designated as numbers one, two and three, programs are booked in that order. All are 100 per cent sound. Thence the pictures are sent to War Department theatres in town, to neighborhood houses and to the outside islands.

There seems to be a general preference on all the islands for romantic, gangster and Western features. Pictures must be full of action all the way.

Progress is being made slowly but steadily, in educating Honolulu audiences to appreciate only the highest class programs.

There are no labor difficulties, nor are there any unions. Honolulu operators and stagehands say that to their knowledge there has never been a strike or walkout on any one of the islands.

Cleveland Zoning Plan Is Favored

organization. Speaking over Station WMCA, New York, Mr. Nizer said:

"In one respect Government interference has destroyed the benefits of self-regulation. The motion picture industry had set up a system of arbitration under which $27,000,000 worth of claims between theatre owners and distributors were peacefully settled and only eight went to court. Now instead of eight law suits we have tens of thousands, with all the waste of money and time they entail. No wonder that there is a strong movement to revise the anti-trust laws. Those who aim more strait-jacket laws at the motion picture industry are like the medieval Comprachicos who confined infants in earthen jars and left them there to grow in the shape of the vessel, producing synthetic dwarfs."

In preparing the re-establishment of the Film Boards of Trade in their status of former years, Mr. Kent believes their reorganization is necessary in order that exhibitors and distributors out in the territories "could have a place in which to meet and discuss problems without turning sour for want of a convenient industry council." Charles C. Pettijohn is at the head of the national Film Board system, which is financed on a proportionate basis by distributor members of the MPPDA.

Regarding the establishment of a "Supreme Court," Mr. Kent said such a body is essential for adjusting major differences between exhibitors and distributors. Concerning a conciliation board Abram F. Myers said last month that 'the chief need of the industry is a trade organization through which the several branches can cooperate for the protection of their common interests and work for the reconciliation of their differences."

Adjustment of the zoning and protection situation as part of Mr. Kent's reforms would eliminate what probably represents one of the most important problems. A system of local boards of exhibitor and exchange members would work out equitable protection plans, with an appeal board in New York. Mr. Kent indicated he favored the zoning and protection plan adopted at Cleveland a few months ago, by which exhibitors draft their own requirements. The Cleveland zoning pact, which is supposed to become effective January 1, was published in full in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, September 3, page 32.

Next on the program is the proposal to establish a new selling plan which would eliminate the sore spot of exclusives and adjust the returns on a certain number of socalled "quality" pictures. While not officially or openly admitted, it is felt that "exclusive" showings will be short-lived.

Mr. Kent, vigorously denouncing "exclusives," said that identical objectives could be reached by adoption of flexible admission scales in keeping with the quality of better pictures. He said the plan would be for distributors to sell exclusively certain selected pictures to those theatres in a town which would agree to a 25-cent admission. This would leave plenty of average productions for theatres which chose to maintain lower admissions, and the lower priced houses no longer would make inroads on higher scaled competitors with the same programs. It is estimated that between 30 and 50 worthwhile features could thus be sold each year.

While no action may be taken currently on the flexible admission plan, participants in the negotiations believe its adoption is inevitable. The Kent plan is the same as one advocated by M. A. Lightman and which appeared in detail exclusively in the HERALD on May 21, page 21.

Mr. Kent has long been a firm believer in flexible admissions. In 1915, when the average neighborhood theatre was charging five cents, he persuaded Harry Koplar in St. Louis, and many others throughout the country, to raise the price to ten cents for a quality picture. As sales manager of Famous Players, he finally succeeded in selling the idea to theatre owners and they made money with it. In 1917 he advised raising from 10 cents to 15 cents and again receipts reacted favorably. When "The Covered Wagon" came along in 1923, he insisted that exhibitors establish a minimum of 50 cents and 25 cents for children. Again the idea was successful.

Circuit theatres would be included in the plan. They would represent the "key" houses at which the quality would be established. They, too, would be compelled to raise admissions to a 50 or 60 cent minimum.

Warner Bros. Cleared In Harry Koplar Suit

Harry C. Barker, referee in the receivership action filed by Harry Koplar against Skouras Brothers Enterprises, Inc., in the circuit court of St. Louis, last week recommended that the suit be dismissed and that plaintiffs be assessed costs. Mr. Barker found that the plaintiff was motivated by his desire to force Warner Brothers, owner of 93 per cent of the Skouras Enterprises stock, to purchase his stock above market value.

Charging that "insiders" persistently have sold the stock of their own company for profit, Max Goldberg, attorney, of Salem, Mass., has requested proxies in opening a fight to get control of the $200,000,000 Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.

SUPERB FOR RAPID-FIRE COMEDY

Says DeCasseres of "Mademoiselle"; Calls "The Good Earth" 100 Per Cent Screen Material

by BENJAMIN DE CASSERES

MADEMOISELLE

Alice Brady, Grace George, A. E. Matthews and Peggy Conklin hit the long mazuma at the box office with "Mademoiselle," a sparkling comedy, with a few bunky spots, from the French of Jacques Deval. Alice Brady and Grace George especially put on some contrasted acting that simply drives me back to the "I-don't-know-when" wheeze.

Here is a superb picture vehicle for rapid-fire comedy built around a tense romantic situation—both going on simultaneously as in "Broadway."

The Galvosier family of Paris is middle-class, well-to-do. Lucien (A. E. Matthews) is a lawyer, fussy, comical, bunky. Madame Galvosier (La Brady) is a high-rolling society butterfly. Christine, the daughter, has had an affair with an Egyptian necker on a beach somewhere and there is to be a child. The conventional and silly father and mother know nothing of this.

Christine is worried green. Disgrace will soon literally stare her in the face. So while the social piffle of the parents is going on Christine decides on suicide.

In comes the newly engaged chaperone-governess (played by one of the greatest actresses on our stage, Grace George) for Christine. The governess is an old maid, as plain-looking as a bone collar-button.

The governess worms the secret out of the girl (the gay life rattles on in the Galvosier household), introduces her brother, an engineer, as a doctor, who recommends five months in the country for the girl with the governess. She there has the baby, which the governess adopts (the dream of her old life comes true—a baby!

Christine returns to her society-crazy parents, forgets the baby and begins the wild life of society again.

There is a drunken blackmailing butler. The governess gets rid of him with her savings—20,000 francs, which is the price she pays for the baby!

The governess chucks her job to go back to her little one, the parents are no wiser, and the dialogue sparkles on. It's something almost really new on Broadway.

Picture value, 90 per cent if something can be done about the beach-necker.

THE GOOD EARTH

The Theatre Guild opened its season with a dramatization by Owen and Donald Davis of Pearl Buck's prize-winning novel of peasant China, "The Good Earth."

It's the most beautiful, the most profoundly moving and the most pathetically human—without ever being sloppy or sentimental—play that I have seen since "The Green Pastures."

Metro-Goldwyn has, I believe, bought this book and I now make the prophecy that if they do it as Pearl Buck, the Guild, Philip Moelier and Lee Simonson conceived and executed both the book and the play, it will register high-water mark in Hollywood production.

This story of the life of Wang Lung, the poor farmer, who rose to riches, cast off O'Lan, his faithful wife and the mother of his children, and put a concubine in his house; the death of the wife; the scenes of famine, poverty, riches and revolution—this story is a great gob of life, an epic of a whole people—the Chinese.

I hope Metro will get Nazimova to do O-Lan, the long suffering, dumb, earthy wife of Wang Lung. Here is the greatest performance on Broadway in years.

Claude Rains as Wang Lung was good, as was Henry Travers as his doddering old father (a high comedy part for, maybe, Warner Oland).

"The Good Earth" has action, pathos, tremendous scenic possibilities, and, above all, room for superb characterizations. Here is Metro's chance to make some history—if they are brave and will spend the money.

BLACK SHEEP

This is an Elmer Rice. And while there is a good, but not novel, idea in it, it is very far from being a "Counsellor-at-Law," a "The Left Bank," or even a "Street Scene." It sounds as if it were out of the old trunk in the garret.

The theme is Vagabond Genius versus Respectability. It has a keen edge of satire, but something went wrong in the cooking.

Father is a Babbitt de luxe, Mother a nitwit sentimentalist. Daughter of an aspiring society gal, Young son a bug-in-the-rug.

Bang! In blows the prodigal son-of-a-gun, Buddy, with a mentally free woman. Buddy has been pretty bad. He's a coal-black sheep. The family is completely stunned. If sparkling Burgundy had started to pop out of the kitchen tap they could not have been more so.

But it turns out that Buddy has been writing "great stuff" under another name. Mrs. Abercrombie, the social leader, recognizes him at once as the genius she had met at the Bohemian Club, in San Francisco. That gives the black sheep a whitewash. A genius in the family! Smiles, open arms—great old Buddy! The family has a Joe Conrad or a Victor Hugo in its bosom.

Buddy is being gradually drawn into the social racket—even to becoming engaged to the rich Mrs. Abercrombie. Springs of inspiration dry up. It's better to be a bum and a genius, thinks his mentally free pal, and as Buddy is tied to her mental apron strings, after a time he thinks so too.

So he chucks the rich and powerful Mrs. Abercrombie and with his judy on his arm they take once more to the Open Road, just like Jack London and Harry Kemp.

There's some sound comedy picture stuff here.

Picture value, 50 per cent.

MEN MUST FIGHT

This play by Reginald Lawrence and S. K. Lauren is a serious drama based on the question, "To fight or not to fight." It is a conflict in a family between the ideal and biological necessity (meaning that war is a fundamental principle of things as they are).

Time: 1940. Edwin Seward (Gilbert Emery) is Secretary of State. He is for war. Mrs. Seward is a pacifist.

The son, Robert Seward (Douglass Montgomery), is with his mother. So that when the U. S. A. goes to war with Uruguay (which means, eventually, all of South America) the family is split wide open.

There is a lot of soap-box argumentation each way. But the drama (which makes a play and a picture, and not gabby essays) perks up in the presence of young Seward's fiancee, Peggy Chase (Erin O'Brien-Moore), who is wildly patriotic. (How we scrap over peace!)

We reach more drama when the authors somewhat trickily unload on us the information that young Seward is really the son of a British airman who died in the World War.

Blood will tell, and so Seward goes off to kill some Firpos to the tears of the family and even the girl, who is going to lose her fellow.

It's pretty solemn stuff and might suit the Thinking Trade (if any).

Picture value, 20 per cent.

PEACOCK

It was rather good to see George Fawcett back on the speaking stage. Fawcett is one of our best character actors, an odd fellow in a way, and a perfect old son-of-a-gun of a Frenchman in Leonard Ide's comedy, "Peacock."

It is rather old-fashioned, but not without its amusing moments.

The "Peacock" is a boulevardier getting along in years. He has been flung in the discard as a diplomat. But he frets. He still has ambitions, both political and amorous.

Three ladies of his past put up a trick on him which nets him some cash. He goes to Paris for a final spree. He comes back home all spruced up with a doll on his arm.

His household thought the "ladies" had sent him to Paris for medical advice. But what better medicine than a pile of jack, Paris and a fluff on the arm, not to speak of a quart or two of burgundy inside.

Where does this get the old peacock? Why, his new delightful sins resurrect him. He steps out for his second plunge in life and he goes as minister to Syria—with all his appurtenances.

It is, however, somewhat camera-shy.

Picture value, 25 per cent.

A BUSY PREVIEW WEEK

Warner-First National Contributes Three, and Meehan Finds Several More Winners

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

A busy week in the preview sector produced a number of interesting peeks at new product to keep our minds off political speeches on the radio. Let's start off with the Warner-First National group, since they led with three new ones.

"You Said a Mouthful" is not only a swell title for a Joe E. Brown picture, but it presents Joe doing his most popular antics, including his inimitable scream every two or three hundred feet. It is wild, nonsensical farce, based upon a swimming contest over our famous Catalina channel similar to the one the late William Wrigley sponsored in 1929. Through mistaken identity, Joe is forced to pose as a world famous swimmer, when, as a matter of fact, he is mortally afraid of water and wears a life-preserver even in a shower bath. But he has invented a non-sinkable suit, and feels safe. When he gets way out in the deep, however, he discovers he has on the wrong suit. Then follows some hilarious submarine stuff, with Joe running on the bottom and doing various other outlandish stunts. This ranks well up with other recent Joe Brown pictures.

"Twenty Thousand Years in Sing Sing" is based upon the very widely read book written by Warden Lewis E. Lawes of New York's favorite detention home for the irresponsible. Warners and Director Michael Curtiz have given it a magnificent production, making it something more than a fictionized record of prison life. Spencer Tracy combines humor and melodrama in a splendid character study. Arthur Byron's work in the role of Warden Long is one of the most natural performances we have seen in many moons. It's a fine story of America's better efforts at prison conduct.

With the worldwide debacle caused through the collapse of the Ivar Krueger enterprises still hitting the front pages of the land, there is an element of timeliness in "The Match King." Warren William essays the role of "Paul Kroll," who seeks to obtain economic control of the world by his monopoly of the match business. His ruthless, reckless but ever spectacular rise to vast wealth and power affords many opportunities for intense drama. His love affairs are intertwined with his financial operations to show how he used women to accomplish his crooked objectives, then tossed them aside. Lili Damita, posed as a famous European film star of somewhat Garboesque reminiscence, is shown as the only sincere love of his life, and that ends in tragedy and failure. Although much of the picture belongs to Warren William, he is supported by an unusually high-powered cast, even to the minor roles,

Hollywood is buzzing about the sensational reception of Paramount's big novelty of the year, "If I Had a Million." Seven directors, 14 stellar personalities and a list of writers as long as your arm cooperated in the production, a series of episodes to show what different people might do if they suddenly found themselves possessed of a million dollars each. It has the flavor and the fascination of a book of O. Henry stories; it runs pretty nearly the entire range from comedy to melodrama and tragedy. It boasts of a cast which includes Richard Bennett, the only one to carry through the entire story, Charles Ruggles, Wynne Gibson, Charles Laughton, George Raft, Gary Cooper, Jack Oakie, Roscoe Karns, W. C. Fields, Lucien Littlefield, Gene Raymond, Alison Skipworth, May Robson and others. Each of the directors handled an episode, and the directors include Lubitsch, Norman Taurog, Stephen Roberts, Norman McLeod, James Cruze, William A. Seiter, H. Bruce Humberstone. So if you don't run out of electric lights, paint, rubber stamps and printers' ink dressing up the front of the house to announce this one it will be because you overlooked one or more of the picture's unlimited exploitation possibilities. The only similar film was Marshall Neilan's "Bits of Life," years ago; and this far outshines that memorable production. It belies the old adage that "too many cooks spoil the broth."

Now that the election is over, "Prosperity" is with us at least, and you doubtlessly will be interested to know it was made by Marie Dressler and Polly Moran rather than by either Hoover or Roosevelt.

Remember Will Rogers' famous "Jubilo?" He brings it back in the latest of his Fox productions, "Too Busy to Work," chockful of typical Rogerian wit and humor and almost entirely devoid of political comments and wisecracks such as have predominated in his last two or three pictures. Will confines himself pretty closely to the demands of a straight motion picture characterization this time, and this makes the picture more enjoyable, now that we are all pretty well fed up on the subject of politics. Revival of this beloved tramp role brings to the screen a genuine family attraction, the sort to which Winfield Sheehan seems wisely to be devoting most of his attention these days.

"Penguin Pool Murder" from Radio is distinguished from the mill run of murder mystery yarns by the riotous fun provoked by Edna May Oliver and James Gleason. True, there is plenty of intrigue over the mysterious death of a man by drowning in the penguin pool of a museum, but in the unraveling process the Gleason-Oliver humor adds heavily to the entertainment values.

Pete Smith, advertising impresario at MGM studios and producer of their excellent "sport shorts," entertained the reviewers this week with the presentation of three subjests revealing in characteric Smithsonian style the inside on big league football, illustrating the gruelling preparations for the titanic gridiron struggles.

Casey Testimonial Marked By Expressions of Esteem

There was little of the wit and general facetiousness which attends similar affairs at the testimonial dinner tendered John Michael Casey, retiring at the age of 70 as chief of the licensing division of the city of Boston, at the Copley Plaza Hotel last week. Leaders in the motion picture and stage divisions of the theatrical world of the city spoke in turn briefly, pointedly and obviously from the heart.

Former mayors of the city and the governor of Massachusetts, Joseph B. Ely, contributed their bit to the testimonial accorded Mr. Casey, who was visibly affected by the demonstration of undivided respect. Several hundred attended the dinner. The menu was imprinted with a laudatory inscription, while concretely Mr. Casey was presented with $1,000 in gold donated by the men to whom he had been friend and adviser over the period of 28 years during which he had adlministered the affairs of the office in which he has been succeeded by Stanton R. White, son of Augustus E. White, famous as a Boston theatrical photographer. A performance, for which numerous of the best known players on the stage of Boston contributed their services, followed the dinner.

Hess Assumes Mayer's Post During Illness of Executive

Jack Hess has taken over complete charge of advertising, publicity and exploitation at Paramount, in the absence of Arthur Mayer, department head, who is ill with bronchial pneumonia. Mr. Mayer is not expected to return to his duties for at least three weeks.

A reorganization of the duties within the department is understood contemplated. The department will be split three ways, with one man specifically in charge of advertising, a second in charge of publicity and a third responsible for exploitation activity.

ROBERT F. SISK, advertising impresario and publicity purveyor of RKO, academician and champion of the cause of white space in advertisements, currently begs, beseeches, implores and invites managers of the company's theatres to use more "air" in their newspaper copy, and plenty of it. Mr. Sisk dug deeply into Virgil's writings for material with which he might clinch his argument, bringing forth the line Forsitan et haec olim meminisse invabit. For the benefit of those managers who are a little backward in their Latin, Bob translated Virgil's observation to: "The smart fellow has lots of white space in his ads." Then, for fear that there might be some who would not be impressed by the teachings of Virgil, Sisk offered proof of his own, as follows:

The French like white wines.
You find white horses on the label of Scotch whisky. (And pink elephants in the bottle.)
Herschel Stuart (of RKO) is beginning to have white hair.
White-wings never grow weary.
The Taj Mahal is a nice white building.
The Washington Monument is a white shaft.
The Caucasian race consists of white people. (Sometimes.)
Restaurants of the Childs' chain use white tiling.
The best circus stallions are white.
Life-boats are painted white.
The Great White Way reveals a few open places (but Mr. Sisk neglected to give the addresses.)
White men bought Manhattan Island for $24.
White lies aren't as bad as black ones.

How can anyone persist, after perusing this mass of incontrovertible evidence, to which we added the italic after-thoughts, in failing to have "air" and white space in all ads everywhere? As Mr. Sisk says, "The boy is nothing if not inclusive."

THE play is the thing in Russia these days. The conversion of the world famous $12,000,000 cathedral of St. Isaac at Leningrad into an atheist theatre, as reported by Ralph Barnes to the New York Herald-Tribune, signalizes a further rapid decay of religion in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. The general decrease, under Soviet regime, of interest in religion and the accompanying falling off of church attendance, already has been marked by the transformation of a large number of churches into theatres and garages, libraries, hospitals, warehouses, schools and museums.

"Pravda" announced in Moscow that St. Isaac's, in former days the most luxurious and fashionable of all Russian edifices, will be transformed immediately into a playhouse for anti-religious propaganda, and that the first play to be produced there will be "The Cathedral of St. Isaac." The cathedral was designed by a Frenchman, Richard de Montferrand and was finished in 1858, after 39 years of construction. It is built in the shape of a huge cross and crowned by an enormous gilded dome 330 feet high. Finnish red granite and marble was used throughout.

'TRAILING KILLER' SWELL PIX

If ever there was a dog picture that deserved serious consideration, this is it. A director with a sound knowledge of dramatic values has put more suspense, romance, comedy and thrills into it than graces many a super-feature costing 100 times as much. It . . . will undoubtedly make a lot of dough. . . .

The hero is a police dog, the heroine is a bitch wolf, the heavy is a mountain lion, and the clowning is taken care of by a litter of pups assisted by a bullfrog and a crawfish. A rattle-snake contributes additional menace. . . .

The animals act out their little drama in such a way that the plausibility of it all is easy to reconcile with your intelligence, unless you insist on being super-critical and refuse to be entertained.

There probably aren't 500 words of dialogue in the entire piece. . . . The picture is all exteriors, the mountains, hills and valleys of a sheep country. Photography is excellent. . . .

Exhibitors of every kind of house looking for something different should take a look at this one.

The incidental combat between the rattler and Lobo is one of the most sensational things shown on the screen, fully on a par with the mongoose battle and the tiger-python struggle of recent memory for thrills and suspense. It's a feature of the picture that can be widely ballyhooed, and alone, properly exploited, it should sell plenty of tickets.

Not only is "Trailing The Killer" great children's entertainment, but there is plenty of drama of nature in the raw to intrigue the interest of adults. It's wide open for all sorts of effective showmanship. You've had your jungle animal pictures that whetted up great patron interest. Here's something with a real story, with animals occupying roles synonymous with those assigned men and women and with the dog Lobo taking direction with almost unbelievable intelligence, and the wild beasts acting with the fury of animals fighting for their lives. You have drama, romance, action, thrills and spectacle, plus a novelty that should mean certain box office dollars.

. . . crowded with action and suspense that make for startlingly novel entertainment.

Hollywood Filmograph

World Wide Pictures has the best animal picture in "Trailing The Killer" since Frank Buck's "Bring 'Em Back Alive." If you ask us, there is more heart and soul interest in the latest screen picture of jungle and mountain life, because the director, Herman C. Raymaker, was, to our way of thinking, best fitted to know his audience reaction and he caught his shots with more intimacy. . . . The kids will eat this picture up and the women folks will share with the men their interest and will hold their breath and permit their hearts to go out to the animals that are in danger.

Taking it all in all, it is the most finished animal picture that has been made in Hollywood.

WARNER–ELECTRICS SUIT UNDER WAY WITH PLEA FOR PRELIMINARY WRIT

Counsel for Plaintiffs Would Enjoin Defendants from Enforcing Contracts, Claiming They Have Created Monopoly

The long pending battle between Warners and the A. T. and T. interests got actively under way late last week when hearings were started in U. S. District Court at Wilmington in a suit charging monopoly in the sound field, which was filed some few months ago against American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric and Electrical Research Products, by Stanley Company, Duovac Radio and General Talking Pictures. The attention of the producing and exhibiting agencies of talkers was centered upon the court room as the defendants were charged with controlling more than 90 per cent of the sound motion picture industry.

The defendants are all related, while Stanley is a circuit subsidiary of Warner Brothers; Duovac manufactures parts used in reproducing equipment, and General is a sound apparatus manufacturer.

Judge John P. Nields reserved decision on the plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction enjoining A. T. and T., Western and Erpi from enforcing their cross licensing agreements and alleged monopolistic practices. Both were given until November 15 to file briefs. Epgraim Berliner, of counsel for the plaintiffs, brought the hearing to a close with the statement that General Talking Pictures faces disaster if the defendants continue their alleged monopolistic activities. Erpi said that agreements were gone into in order to protect the efficiency of its sound apparatus.

Cite Extra Service Charges

The hearing for a preliminary injunction opened with Samuel E. Darby, Jr., of counsel for the plaintiffs, making allegations of how exhibitors had to pay high prices for sound parts supplied by Electrical Research and extra service charges whenever Erpi engineers found competitors' parts and tube in the Western Electric reproducing machines. The plaintiffs are at the moment seeking to have the defendants enjoined from enforcing its contracts with exhibitors and producers, which contracts are said to have created a monopoly of the trade in favor of the defendants.

Under contracts and agreements, Mr. Darby said, exhibitors using defendants' machines were at first compelled to use replacement parts supplied by Western Electric. Weekly service fees were charged, he said, and an extra $35 was charged if the defendant engineers went to a theatre to fix a breakdown and found any Duovac or any other competitors' parts in the machine.

Mr. Darby further said that in some instances the defendants' engineers arbitrarily condemned the competitors' parts without even first investigating for the trouble. He cited a case where an Erpi engineer went to a theatre to investigate noise being made by a machine. He found Duovac vacuum tubes in the machine and allegedly forthwith condemned the tubes, replacing them with Western Electric vacuums. The condemned tubes were later tested, Mr. Darby said, by the Duovac laboratories, and found to be in good condition, and that the trouble with the machine was only machine noise.

Finally, in 1931, Mr. Darby said, the defendants informed exhibitors with whom they had contracts, that the latter could go out into the open market and buy parts, but these so-called parts they were allowed to buy were, allegedly, things like oil cans, oil, incandescent lamps, magnifying glasses and monkey wrenches. The parts supplied by the defendants, Mr. Darby explained, were higher in cost than such as could be bought on the open market, sometimes three times, four times and five times higher, it was said.

In his outline of the case, Mr. Darby told of the alleged evils of the monopoly in the early days of the talker industry, when Warner Brothers were under contract to supply films only to such theatres that used the defendants' apparatus. Exhibitors realized they had to have talkies or else be shoved out in the cold, he declared.

Government May Enter Case

Warner Brothers in those early days of talkers were the only ones who had such films ready for distribution, Mr. Darby said, and after Warners had asked Erpi to supply reproducing machines to exhibitors, Erpi is said to have replied the exhibitors would have to wait from six to nine months. The exhibitors, however, refused to wait, and looked about for talkie reproducing machines made by other companies and then Warner Bros. declared that by contract, it could not supply its films to exhibitors using machines other than the defendants'. The situation was later adjusted by the defendants, it was said, who allowed Warner Bros. to give film to exhibitors using machine equally as good as the defendants' machine if equally as good machines could be found.

The plaintiffs state that this suit will reach far into the deepest recesses of the talking motion picture industry and there was some talk last week at Wilmington that the United States government may eventually enter the scene.

Samuel E. Darby, Jr., counsel and colleague in the case with former Judge Hugh M. Morris, of Wilmington, gave the background of the suit. In his preliminary talk he went afield to discuss the historical development of the anti-trust and anti-monopoly acts. He also went into the story of sound and its development from the time Dr. Lee DeForest in 1918 left radio and turned his attention to the problems of synchronizing sound with film.

Among the problems DeForest met, Mr. Darby explained, was that producers looked askance at talkies because they had millions invested in silent picture equipment and in actors whose voices were not particularly adapted to sound.

"Many of the actors could not speak English," Judge Nields interpolated.

"Yes, many of them could not," Mr. Darby affirmed.

"I mean many of them could not speak English properly," Judge Nields added.

Mr. Darby forthwith told the story of Emil Jannings, who was driven out of the "movies" because he couldn't speak English.

"Now, I understand," Mr. Darby said, "there is an effort to recall Jannings and have a dub speak the parts."

"What DeForest did do," Mr. Darby said, "was to awaken interest of the public in talkies. And these defendants which had been interested only in the communication became interested in talkies." The attorney then continued along the tortuous way in and out of agreements and contracts and along the brilliant highway of the success of the talkers, leading up to the complaints of the plaintiffs.

Stanley Company charged that it has been compelled to use the defendants' reproducing apparatus; Duovac claims it has suffered in its motion picture apparatus parts business through the alleged monopolistic practices of the defendants; General Talking Picture's complaint refers to the manufacture of motion picture projection sound apparatus. The alleged damages go well into the millions.

Morris, Darby and George E. Quigley, of New Jersey, and Epgraim Berliner, made appearances for the plaintiffs.

Christopher L. Ward, Jr., and Arthur G. Logan were the Wilmington attorneys for the defendants.

About 10 days ago the three defendant companies filed individual answers to the suit, in which they denied the allegations of monopoly and that their agreements were not exclusive, were lawful, and asked that the bills of complaint be dismissed.

Answers of ERPI to Charges in Stanley Case Reviewed; Violation of Clayton or Sherman Acts Denied

ERPI Denies Violation

The answers of Electrical Research to the principal charges made by Stanley follow, in part:

1. ERPI denies that it violated Clayton or Sherman acts.

2. ERPI admits that it is a wholly owned subsidiary of Western Electric, which in turn is a subsidiary of American Telephone & Telegraph.

3. ERPI states that since May 18, 1927, and not December 31, 1926, as mentioned in the complaint, it has been engaged in the granting of various licenses in connection with talking motion picture production and distribution; leasing and occasionally selling apparatus; leasing and furnishing repair and replacement parts and rendering maintenance and operation service. ERPI denies that it was and now is the licensor of picture companies producing and distributing 90 per cent of the talking motion pictures in the United States.

4. ERPI denies that Western and American Telephone allocated or attempted to allocate to it certain fields exclusively, including recording and reproducing sound, which acts were considered pursuant to a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman act. It avers that its manufacturing in connection with motion pictures is a local and intrastate business, that leasing and selling apparatus is in some instances intrastate and in others interstate, and that in the case of certain producers and distributors of sound records, who are licensees of ERPI, their business is an intrastate business only.

ERPI ANSWERS STANLEY CHARGES

5. ERPI avers that all rights and licenses granted in connection with cross-licensing agreements between A. T. and T., Western, General Electric and RCA were non-exclusive; that so long as Western and Vitaphone were engaged in activities similar to ERPI's, RCA was an actual competitor of Western and Vitaphone, and since the early part of 1928, RCA has been an actual competitor of ERPI in such activities.

6. ERPI states that the license agreement of April 20, 1926, between Vitaphone (controlled by Warner Bros.) and Western was entered into by Vitaphone without duress of any kind and that on, or about, January 3, 1927, ERPI was assigned this agreement by Western. Defendant further avers that, following a termination agreement, a new licensing agreement was entered into between ERPI and Vitaphone whereby Vitaphone was granted a non-exclusive license relative to electrical recording of sound for motion picture purposes. These parties later—on May 18, 1927—entered into a further agreement, known as the contractual letter, which contained provisions related and supplemental to the terms of previous agreements. ERPI denies that Vitaphone was "intimidated, terrorized and coerced" by it in connection with the surrender by Vitaphone to the transfer of the Western agreement to ERPI.

7. ERPI denies that pursuant to April 20, 1926, in furtherance of an unlawful conspiracy between it and the Telephone Company, it further attempted to establish and maintain a monopoly by granting certain rights and licenses to other producers of motion pictures upon certain conditions, understandings and agreements. It admits having granted licenses with respect to electrical recording of sound to Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, United Artists, Fox Case, Fox Film, Fox Hearst, Firnatone, Hal Roach Studios, Christie Film (later assigned to Metropolitan Sound Studios, and terminated in 1931), Universal, Columbia, Sono Art, Audio-Cinema, Balsley & Phillips, Ltd., Educational and Cinelog.

8. In the bill of complaint, Stanley quotes a provision of these agreements, contained in the Paramount-ERPI agreement, which is claimed to be typical and substantially identical with corresponding covenants in all agreements and which states that the "Licensee agrees that it will use the recording equipment to be leased to it by Electrical Research Products, Inc." ERPI admits that the quoted clause was a part of all contracts between it and licensees except those of Fox Case and Fox Hearst, and avers that aforementioned provisions of said license agreements were and are in all respects reasonable and lawful.

9. ERPI admits that it further entered into agreements with ten companies whereby they agreed to "promote in every reasonable manner the installation of our (ERPI's) reproducing equipments in motion picture theatres."

10. ERPI denies knowledge of the degree of control of theatres exercised by these licensees which, as stated in the bill of complaint, constituted not less than 25 per cent of all motion picture theatres in the United States operating on a continuous policy and not less than 33 and 1/3 per cent of the seating capacity of all motion picture theatres in the United States. In denying other allegations in this part of the complaint, ERPI includes the statement made by the plaintiff that these agreements with respect to theatres substantially lessened competition.

11. ERPI admits that the "lessees of synchronous reproducing equipment" were owners or operators of theatres who should lease from Vitaphone the reproducing apparatus supplied to Vitaphone by Western Electric and that this provision was contained in the April 20, 1926, agreement between Western and Vitaphone. The bill of complaint refers to this arrangement as limiting Vitaphone in the distribution of talking pictures made by it and further states that the source of supply of pictures was substantially closed against those theatres which would not install reproducing equipment and apparatus manufactured by Western and supplied to them by Vitaphone as the licensee of Western. Other than the admission, stated in the foregoing, ERPI denies the other allegations.

12. ERPI admits that on September 5, 1927, it entered into an agreement with Edwin C. Mills under the terms of which Mr. Mills obtained a non-exclusive license with the right to grant sub-licenses with respect to the recording of copyrighted music controlled by persons represented by him, such licenses being limited to the motion picture field and, with respect to the reproduction of music recorded under the license, to apparatus supplied by ERPI.

13. ERPI admits that it has granted sublicenses under the Mills agreement to thirteen companies and further states that sound equipment, other than that manufactured by ERPI, did not come into the market and was not generally available to exhibitors until after May, 1928, at which time Paramount, MGM, United Artists and others took sound recording licenses. It was then, ERPI states, that Mr. Mills, with the knowledge and consent of ERPI, waived the provisions of the Mills agreement, which required reproductions to be made only upon reproducing equipment manufactured by the defendant.

14. ERPI admits that the principal represented by Mr. Mills on September 5, 1927, constituted and now constitute a majority of the most important music publishers and it avers that one or more of said principals are now and for some time have been owned or controlled by Warner and that Warner has participated in royalties paid by ERPI under the said agreement.

15. ERPI admits that on April 20, 1926, the art of producing and reproducing talking motion pictures commercially was new. Defendant also admits that between that date and the end of the same year, Vitaphone alone produced and exhibited talking motion pictures, in connection with which Western sound recording equipment was employed. On December 31, 1926, Vitaphone and Fox Case Corporation entered into a license agreement which was prepared by Western and which Western asked Vitaphone to execute. ERPI further avers that, notwithstanding the terms of the original agreement between Western and Vitaphone, whereby the latter was to undertake to interest producers of motion pictures in accepting licenses to use Western electrical sound recording apparatus, Vitaphone, at the direction of Warner, neglected and refused, during the period between April 20, 1926, and December 31, 1926, to do so. On the contrary, ERPI states, Vitaphone desired and attempted to retain a monopoly of such license and such business.

16. ERPI denies that the aforementionel agreement between Vitaphone and Fox Case substantially lessened and restrained competition as between the Telephone Company, Western and ERPI on the one hand, and competing manufacturers, on the other.

17. ERPI admits that subsequent to December 31, 1926, and until May 11, 1928, Vitaphone and Fox Case carried on the exploitation of talking pictures. Also that during that time no talking pictures had been successfully commercially produced by any other companies and that practically no reproducing equipments were in the market or were installed in theatres other than those furnished by Western. The defendant also denies that the interstate market was closed as a result of its licensing agreements or that the sources of supply of pictures were closed, by reason of the Mills agreement, to those theatres not installing equipment manufactured for or by ERPI. On the contrary, ERPI maintains that theatre operators have been free to choose whatever reproducing equipment they wished and states that a majority of the theatres in the United States, including a large number of theatres operated by the plaintiff, Stanley, have installed apparatus other than that manufactured for or by ERPI. Further, that all such theatres have been operated in the regular course of business without restraint or interference on the part of ERPI with respect to sources of supply of talking pictures or otherwise.

18. ERPI denies that due to the fact that Stanley was unable to negotiate terms and conditions under which it could continue to operate its theatres without suffering a severe financial loss, the company was obliged to accept the terms and conditions imposed by ERPI. Electrical also decided that such terms, although in the form of leases of equipment, were far more than sufficient to repay ERPI the cost of manufacture, distribution and installation of equipment, plus a substantial profit thereon; and, further, that, as alleged, the theatre equipment was of such nature that long prior to the expiration of the term of said pretended leases the same would be of no utility and would have to be replaced due to the wear and deterioration of parts.

19. ERPI admits that in the case of the lease made with one of the theatres operated by the plaintiff, the Forum Theatre, Philadelphia, the clause, quoted in the bill of complaint, was included. That clause was as follows: "The exhibitor agrees . . . that no recordings shall be used except those produced by licensees of the Company (ERPI)." Defendant also denies that the effect and force of this provision was intentionally to create a substantial monopoly in the business of supplying apparatus and equipment.

20. ERPI admits that the leases referred to contained a clause with respect to the right of the lessor to take immediate possession, after fourteen days' notice, of the lessee's equipment should any of the covenants of the lease relative to the use and maintenance of equipment have been broken by the lessee. ERPI avers, further,

SEES LIQUOR, FILMS SIMILAR IN EFFECT

Attendance at the motion picture theatre and recourse to the bottle are psychologically one and the same thing, in the opinion of Professor H. W. Bohlman of Drake University. The Columbus (Ohio) Journal Dispatch of recent date quotes a news dispatch from Des Moines, Ia., in which the professor said: "Getting drunk affords a temporary means of escape for a person who is tired, and the movies offer similar escape. Both throw the indulger into an unreal situation. I do not mean that movies are a substitute for getting drunk, but psychologically both effects of escape are the same." That might possibly offer the exhibitor a new catch-line for his marquee, pending the repeal of prohibition at any rate.

TRI-ERGON-PARAMOUNT SUIT HEARING NOV. 28

Company Controlled by William Fox Also Sues Altoona Publix and Wilmer - Vincent on Recording Patents

The suit which is being brought by the American Tri-Ergon Corporation against Paramount Publix Corporation, for alleged infringement of basic talking picture recording patents, will be heard in the Brooklyn federal court, commencing November 28, probably before Judge Campbell. Suits also have been filed by Tri-Ergon at Harrisburg, Pa., against Altoona Publix Theatres, Inc., and against Wilmer and Vincent Corporation and the Locust St. Real Estate Company.

About a year ago, William Fox, who controls the American Tri-Ergon concern, filed three suits in Wilmington, Del., in which Electrical Research Products, Inc., RCA Photophone and RKO Radio Pictures were named. ERPI and RCA were charged with infringement of the socalled flywheel patent in utilizing certain improvements in devices for phonographs with linear phonogram carriers. Radio Pictures was charged with the infringement of Tri-Ergon's double print patterns, which cover developments for producing combined sound and picture films. The suit against Paramount Publix, filed in New York, is identical with that against Radio Pictures which asked for an accounting of profits and a temporary injunction.

Involved in the litigations are patents covering the inventions of Hans Vogt, Joseph Masolle and Joseph Engl, all of Berlin, Germany. The Tri-Ergon complaints stated that these men applied for American patent rights in 1912 and again in 1922. In 1924 the inventors assigned their rights to Tri-Ergon, Ltd., of St. Gall, Switzerland, which in turn sold the American rights to William Fox in 1928.

At the time that the Tri-Ergon patents actions were brought last November, representatives of the plaintiff's attorneys pointed out that Patent No. 1,825,598, covering the double print developments, had been contested by Dr. Lee De Forest for more than a year. The U. S. Patents Appeals Office overruled Dr. De Forest's claim of interference with his patents.

Attempts to enforce the Tri-Ergon flywheel patents, however, had been made two years before that time. Various equipment manufacturers and producers were asked to procure Tri-Ergon licensing. These conferences and negotiations lasted more than a year. At the end of that time, it was said, notices of infringement were served on all parties concerned. Suit was not brought until after the decision of the patents appeals office against Dr. DeForest, who had also claimed interference in connection with the flywheel patent.

Under the terms of the licensing contracts existing between Erpi and Paramount, on the one hand, and RCA Photophone and Radio Pictures on the other, Erpi is obliged to defend its license, Paramount, to the full extent of its investment in Erpi equipment, and RCA Photophone is obliged to do the same on behalf of Radio Pictures.

Electrics' Boards Push Realignment Plans on Patents

Plans are being pushed by the directors of the several companies named in the Government's anti-trust and anti-monopoly suit, principally General Electric Company, Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company and Radio Corporation of America, looking toward a reconstruction of their relationships, chiefly those involving patents, and submission of the proposal to the Department of Justice some time prior to the date set for the hearing of the suit, which is November 15. RCA executives would not discuss the situation.

Other defendants to this action are RCA Photophone, Inc., RCA Victor Company, Inc., RCA Radiotron Company, Inc., American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Western Electric Company, Inc., General Motors Corporation and General Motors Radio Corporation.

Cross-licensing arrangements and the question of stock ownership of RCA by General Electric and Westinghouse are the two main problems involved in the present discussion. At the present time, RCA holds exclusive licenses of G. E. and Westinghouse for all radio patents involved in the manufacture and operation of radio receiving sets and tubes. Under the proposal being considered for readjustment of this set-up, the exclusive licenses would be canceled and all three companies would hold their own patents, licensing each of the other companies under non-exclusive arrangements so that any one of the companies could manufacture complete radio receiving sets. The same privilege would be available to all other radio manufacturers.

It is also believed that the boards of the two electrical companies are considering a plan for distribution to their stockholders of the common shares of the RCA. General Electric owns 5,188,755 shares of common stock and 27,080 shares of Class A preferred stock of the Radio Corporation, and Westinghouse owns 2,842,950 common and 50,000 Class A preferred shares of the same company. These combined stocks amount to 51.4 per cent of the voting strength in RCA.

Lottery Status Left in Air by St. Louis Ruling

Chief of Police Joseph A. Gork of St. Louis sought a ruling of City Counselor Muench as to whether automobile gifts as practiced by motion picture theatres and merchants constitute a lottery. The counselor's opinion indicated in effect that such a practice is a lottery if the police can prove it.

The police official sought the ruling after the Better Business Bureau had filed a complaint. The Bureau cited a Michigan supreme court ruling on give-aways.

ERPI Replies In Stanley Action; Monopoly Denied

that this provision is in the interest of the users of the equipment as well as the defendant.

21. ERPI admits that Stanley was leased and furnished repair parts by it but denies that same were paid for at the rate of $500,000 in excess of what they would cost in the open market.

22. ERPI denies that weekly inspection service fees, provided for in the terms of the leases, are extortionate or in pursuance of an unlawful conspiracy. It avers that such periodical inspection and service of equipments has been and is necessary.

23. ERPI denies that the parts condemned by it were in many instances useful and serviceable and were sold to other theatres and exhibitors.

24. In concluding its answer to the specific paragraphs of the plaintiff's bill of complaint, ERPI denies that the plaintiff, by reason of the acts complained of, has suffered an irreparable and immediate damage in excess of $1,500,000, which damage is continuing and constantly increasing in amount.

After concluding its answers to the plaintiff's complaint, ERPI set forth a separate and distinct defense in which it describes the incorporation of Warner Bros. Pictures in 1925 and the organization of Vitaphone, today wholly and solely owned by Warner. In August, 1928, ERPI states, Warner acquired and has since owned and held a controlling interest in the plaintiff, Stanley, and has directed the business affairs of that company and its associates.

ERPI included clauses of the so-called "Old License Agreement" between Western and Vitaphone, which exclusive license was granted by Western, at the request of Walter J. Rich, Warner and Vitaphone, and with the understanding, expressed by Western, that the apparatus, methods and systems should be made available to the entire motion picture industry. Vitaphone, ERPI avers, accepted this agreement in form but not in fact. More than 100 operators of motion picture theatres were so licensed, according to ERPI. The quoted provisions of said leases included such points as the exclusive use of Vitaphone equipment, ten year period clause, termination clause and a weekly service charge equal to ten cents for each seat of the theatre, payable each week for a minimum of forty out of fifty-two weeks.

ERPI further points out that the so-called Old License Agreement was terminated by consent of Vitaphone and ERPI on May 18, 1927, and a non-exclusive license granted to Vitaphone by ERPI.

By virtue and as a result of the operations under the Old License Agreement, ERPI claims that Warner and Vitaphone, during the last half of 1928 and the greater part of 1929, possessed greater advantages over other motion picture producers because of their more extended experience and greater prestige.

It further stated that, pursuant to the agreement between Vitaphone and ERPI, under which the Old License Agreement was terminated, Vitaphone has been paid 37½ per cent of all royalties paid to ERPI by the licensees under the agreements issued from April 2, 1927, to June 14, 1932.

ERPI therefore claims that Warner directly from the operation of its own theatres and indirectly through control of the plaintiff, Stanley, has obtained therefrom great revenues and profits which it continues to enjoy. All such leases, ERPI claims, were entered into by the plaintiff voluntarily and without duress of any kind.

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

This department deals with new product from the point of view of the exhibitor who is to purvey it to his own public

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

If I Had a Million

(Paramount)

Comedy Drama

Maybe the basic idea of "If I Had a Million" is nothing new under the sun of motion picture production, but the startling technique adapted by Paramount in bringing this unusual work to the screen is ample evidence that there is something radically new under the Kleig lights in the way of imagination-capturing novelty.

Seven directors had a hand in directing the picture, yet it is almost impossible to determine just where and when each one entered. Eighteen writers prepared it for the screen, still it is one coherent story. Fourteen noted stars and a host of minor players appear in it, but none of their appearances is dependent on those that precede or succeed them—save Richard Bennett. Contrary to the saying that too many cooks spoil the broth, it's a clever demonstration that the more brains and talent that work in a picture the better it is. Further, it does not even remotely resemble any of those experimental revues or parades of stars reminiscent of the musical comedy days. Rather it's a logical yarn, based on one idea and having nine or ten varying ramifications. It runs the range of entertainment from ribald, slap-stick comedy to stark, tear-jerking melodrama; with a number of interludes that present the different stars in roles best understood and appreciated by their "fans."

About the central plot of the activities of Richard Bennett, who prefers to give his fortune to strangers rather than have his relatives squabbling over it after he has gone, we first see Charles Ruggles, a bedeviled clerk at home and at his work, wreck a china shop and proclaim his financial and domestic independence. Wynne Gibson, a hardboiled sailor's sweetheart, uses her million to move from the squalor of a back alley hideaway to the class of a Park Avenue apartment. A million is the worst thing that the clever crook, George Raft, could have handed to him. He swaps his check for a "flop," and the "flop-house" keeper, sure that Raft is a nut, burns it up and then yells for the cops.

Charles Laughton's bit is one of the sensations of the picture. A down trodden clerk, he ascends long flights of stairs to give his boss a resounding raspberry, saying only two words. The three marines, Cooper, Oakie, Karns, crap-shooters for paper fortunes, sell their $1,000,000 for ten bucks because they think it's phoney, and make Lucien Littlefield rich. Alison Skipworth and W. C. Fields, a pair of oldtime ham actors, whose dialogue and action is provocative of gales of laughter, buy a fleet of second hand cars and go about wrecking roadhogs. There is drama as Gene Raymond's check will not save him from the electric chair, even though it makes his wife, Frances Dee, financially independent. There's a vivid touch of human interest as May Robson uses her windfall to turn a rigidly-ruled Old Ladies Home into a veritable heaven on earth for forgotten grandmothers.

Probably the one most effective way to get the complete idea of "If I Had a Million" over to your patrons is to proclaim it as truly the picture that has everything anyone would want to see on the screen. It is chiefly grand comedy, into which are woven drama, pathos, romance, novelty and thrills, and it's for all ages.

Exploitation should be confined only to the wildest stretches of your ingenuity and a consideration of how much your budget will stand in the way of ballyhoo. There are many extraordinary interest-creating angles, the seven directors, for instance, the eighteen writers, the fourteen glamorous personalities.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Ernest Lubitsch, Norman Taurog, Stephen Roberts, Norman McLeod, James Cruze, William A. Seiter, H. Bruce Humberstone. Based on a story by Robert D. Andrews and written for the screen by Claude Binyon, Whitney Bolton, Malcolm Stuart Boylan, John Bright, Sidney Buchman, Lester Cole, Isabel Dawn, Boyce DeGaw, Walter DeLeon, Oliver H. P. Garrett, Harvey Gates, Grover Jones, Ernst Lubitsch, Lawton Mackaill, Joseph L. Mankiewicz, William Slavens McNutt, Seton I. Miller, Tiffany Thayer. Fox release late in November. Prosperity

(MGM)

Comedy

In "Prosperity" Marie Dressler and Polly Moran pick up where they left off in "Reducing" and "Politics." There's a lot of fine comedy, a dash or two of romance, quite a bit of real human drama and a melodramatic anti-climax that turns into an avalanche of laughs.

Those are the entertainment highlights, but around them surges a brand of laugh provoking sequences and dialogue that places the stamp of audience approval on a picture that is topical and timely.

Judging solely from preview audience reaction, "Prosperity" is the type of picture for which theatre-goers are looking. There were frequent bursts of applause. Though they squirmed a bit during one or two of the slow spots, which undoubtedly will be eliminated, the applause at the finish was spontaneous.

The story is simple. Miss Dressler turns the presidency of her bank over to her son, Foster. Foster marries the daughter of Marie's dearest friend and severest critic, Polly. Polly draws her money out of the bank and starts a run which results in its closing. Miss Dressler takes over a big construction job that is backed by the bank bonds, but the two promoters skip with the bonds. Foster rescues them, but Marie, thinking all honor is lost, prepares to ease herself out of the picture. Polly becomes Marie's good friend again, but not until Marie has imbibed a bottle of what turns out to be "Prunola," and hilarity ensues as she makes her balcony announcement that the bank will open again.

Good acting and sparkling dialogue are made more effective by fine direction. The element of human interest is evident all the time.

"Prosperity" is for all types of audiences.—McCARTHY, Hollywood.

Men of America

(RKO Radio)

Comedy Drama

This is the kind of picture that starts the youngsters cheering and raises a patriotic surge in the breasts of the adults. It's a hectic amalgamation of gangsterism versus the good old pioneer spirit pointing the moral that when courts, legislatures and politicians get too tangled up in the webs of racketeering, about the only thing left for the average citizen to do is take the bull by the horns and go to it in the spirit of the men who made America.

Starkly melodramatic at times, making liberal use of the theatrics that thrilled the older generations in the ten-twenty-thirty cent days, it is always rather humorous and people who see it will know that they are being entertained with something a little different.

With Chic Sale in a role that is reminiscent of his part in "The Star Witness," but this time the reincarnation of the almost forgotten pioneer and absolutely unafraid of the machine gunning racketeers, you have a yarn that is sometimes emotional but in the main is a humorous treatment of a condition that almost everyone is talking about.

Making no pretentions to greatness, rather confining itself to being just entertainment, "Men of America" is quite a bit better than the average program feature. A strong campaign, with liberal use of the Sale name and clever hints of the story theme, may result in kicking up some unanticipated excitement.

Showmanship possibilities are rife and there is plenty in the way of smash exploitation that can be done around the title. It might be wise to get over the fact that this is not another historical picture, illustrating the various phases of our country's history. At the same time there is ample reason for plenty of tieups with schools and civic organizations based on the educational value of "Men of America" from the standpoint of its being one of the solutions to a very acute modern condition.

The picture should have an equal appeal to both men and women of the more mature ages and it should prove popular with the children. Your problem will be to whip up the interest of the young bloods of both sexes, and the name Dorothy Wilson, who is a sort of Cinderella girl in pictures jumping from a stenographer's desk to the lead role in "Age of Consent," may be helpful here. There is a romance about such an accomplishment that might pique the curiosity of the young folk.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Magic Night

(United Artists)

Comedy-Drama with Music

United Artists has drawn upon the production output of Great Britain, specifically the British and Dominions Company for a musically-flavored comedy-drama which falls into a Viennese setting, and features Jack Buchanan, lauded as a Chevalier from England.

Music as such plays a major part in the unfolding of the slight story, and the whole comes within the category of the musical comedy on the screen. Mr. Buchanan unquestionably has an engaging screen personality, and in this film he makes a brave effort, but it must be recorded that the material with which he has to work falls considerably short.

It was meant to be a sparkling, keen and diverting musical screen play, but the lack of those finished touches in situation and dialogue which must be part of such a picture have resulted in a rather dragging production. Too frequent repetition of a particular martial melody reaches almost the point of monotony before the film is brought to a close.

The exhibitor is in a measure impelled toward selling emphasis upon the person and personality of Jack Buchanan, making the fact that he is new and comparatively unknown in this country a definite attacking stroke of merchandising, rather than a fact which places the exhibitor unconsciously on the defensive. The supporting players are for the most part capable with a few exceptions, and Anna Neagle, the feminine lead, is attractively blonde and possessed of a reasonably effective singing voice.

The story is usual of its kind. Buchanan, Viennese officer, falls in love with Miss Neagle, flower shop attendant, about the time his father transmits a message from the emperor that Buchanan has been selected as the husband of a considerably unattractive countess. Buchanan's rebellion is cut short by the declaration of the World War, and the note he sends to the waiting flower girl is undelivered. After the war, with Miss Neagle risen to starring heights as a singer and Buchanan a shoe salesman, they meet, Buchanan is spurned and then re-wins his flower girl with the aid of song.

It would be well, in selling the picture, to avoid the "extravaganza" angle, for the film cannot be classed as such. Stress the new personality of Buchanan, the attractiveness of Miss Neagle as the most productive selling points. The story itself offers little opportunity for campaign splurging, but the title, tied with one of the major melodies of the film might be a box office aid if played with by the exhibitor who exercises a little ingenuity. The film is not devoid of entertaining qualities and has its moments, so to speak, but on the whole falls short of being the sparkling, light and brightly musical picture which was obviously intended.—Aaronson, New York.

Too Busy to Work

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

The one great difference between "Too Busy to Work" and the last two previous Will Rogers pictures is that it's a straight seriodramatic comedy, wherein Will does comparatively no topical political wisecracking and confines his work strictly to the role of "Jubilo."

From a showman's standpoint, at this particular time, when the public is pretty well fed up on political ballyhoo, this change should have a stimulating effect.

The picture sparkles with the typical Rogers brand of humor, which nobody can provide for him but himself. But more than that, his handling of the script dialogue will provoke plenty of laughs.

The story concerns Jubilo, a tramp, who is searching for the man who stole his wife's affections while he was away at war. He finds him and his own daughter. An incident that involves the innocent Dan with a gang of bank robbers alters his plans for revenge. Though Judge Hardy is willing to take his medicine, Will decides that his daughter is happy and with his identity never becoming known to Rose, he roams off again.

There is a neat combination of entertainment elements in "Too Busy to Work." Naturally, comedy is the most prominent, but there is also enough drama, romance, suspense and simple novelty to hold the interest of both the Rogers fans and other theatre-goers.

Make the most of the fact that "Too Busy to Work" presents Rogers in a straight seriocomedy role, using the glamor of his name for all it's worth and promising your audiences good, clean, wholesome entertainment. With this handling it should do just as much business as the other Rogers efforts.

The title suggests some interesting ballyhoo and exploitation that will be directly related with the tramp character and his aversion to any kind of labor. For teaser purposes, it is possible to work out any number of intriguing angles that will focus attention on the star, cast and story.

"Too Busy to Work" is suitable for any kind of audiences, grown-ups as well as youngsters. —McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Penguin Pool Murder

(RKO Radio)

Comedy and Mystery

Drama and mystery, though important in the development of the story, are secondary features in this comedy romance. Built around the premeditated drowning of Gerald Parker in a museum's penguin pool and the identity of the killer being early evident to the most amateurish crime sleuths, real suspense is lacking and undoubtedly, just as was intended, the comedy antics provided by Edna May Oliver and James Gleason, abetted by the others of the cast, are the highlights.

It is when Gleason as the sometimes dumb, sometimes smart, but always wisecracking, police inspector goes to work on the case and is aided and hindered by the quick talking Edna May Oliver, who was present in the museum at the time the crime was committed, that the real fun gets underway.

Where the title indicates mystery and thrills, the radically different way in which the story unfolds holds more than enough to intrigue the interest of the rank and file fans. From past performances, they know pretty much what to expect of both Gleason and Oliver and the more the predominance of fun is played up, the more interest should be created. Get over the idea that a killing will hardly be a mystery to them, any more than it was to the many "suspects" in the picture, was a terrific mystery to the man who had to solve the crime as well as it was to the only person who saw it committed.

Of course all the old and new gags applicable to mystery pictures can be used, but they should be used in a way that emphasizes its comedy. The penguin provokes numbers of laughs and if you can make a contact with a museum or collector to get one for exhibition purposes, the novelty of seeing such a strange creature that so fittingly ties in with the title should prove helpful.

While there is nothing particuarly impressive in "The Penguin Pool Murder," there still is some refreshing new entertainment in both action and dialogue that will catch the interest of both adults and children. The business it does will depend greatly upon the originality you inject into your advance campaign.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Scarlet Dawn

(Warner)

Drama

The exhibitor has names of unquestioned box office drawing power with which to work in attracting his public to this film. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Nancy Carroll are the best bets, with the addition of Lilyan Tashman, Sheila Terry and Guy Kibbee, able character performer, though the two last named players have minor, inconspicuous roles and will not warrant too heavy billing.

The showman may best rely upon the marquee calibre of his two chief star names. Fairbanks is his usual capable self, though the story material is not the best he has had. Miss Carroll is demure, restrained and attractive, though her role hardly permits the full exercise of her undoubted talents.

The title is a strong line, referring as it does to the dawn of a new era in Russia, at the moment of the Revolution, when the common people become the dominant and ruthless force, while the nobility, the officer clan, are forced to flee for their lives.

Fairbanks is a baron and an officer in the Imperial Russian Army of the Czar when the revolution begins with an uprising of the common soldiery. Miss Tashman had been his, and many another's sweetheart; Miss Carroll was his servant. To make good his escape, Fairbanks disguises himself as a peasant and leaves the country, Miss Carroll insisting on accompanying him. In Constantinople, Fairbanks marries her, then meets Miss Tashman and finally accedes to her plan to mulct tourists of money for a trip to Paris. At the last moment, he resists the temptation, returns to find Miss Carroll gone and is himself caught in a deportation order. Frantic, he searches for his wife, finally finds her in a struggling mass of people being forced aboard boats for the return to Russia. There the picture concludes.

The best results probably will be obtained as a result of concentration upon the star names and the angle of the dissipation of the age old Russian caste system, where noble is thrown to the same level as servant and finds with her a happiness which takes no note of position, where former wealth, now lost, is no longer an obstacle to the natural companionship of a man and woman. This is necessarily an adult picture.—Aronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Based on novel "Revolt" by Mary McCall, Jr. Adaptation and dialogue by Niven Busch, Edwin Gelsey, and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Directed by William Dieterle. Photographed by Ernest Haller. Art director, Anton Grot. Release date, November 12, 1932. Running time, 58 minutes.

Gloria

(Tobis Forenfilms)

Drama

A large amount of dramatic action and a modern story of the flying field combine to take this picture out of the class of the usual run of German language pictures which reach the American shores.

The absence of the rather customary superimposed subtitles in English at important moments in the development of the dialogue as an aid to the non-German speaking audience, makes the film more specifically adaptable to the German audience. This becomes here an unfortunate situation, since the picture is of that type which, with that assistance, might more readily appeal to any audience. It is not, however, difficult to follow the trend of the story, while the use of the English program synopsis will, of course, offset that obstacle in a measure.

For the theatre appealing specifically to the German population, or in the intimate type of metropolitan house, there is much to sell here. In the first instance the lead role is taken by Gustav Froelich, one of the most attractive as well as one of the most able masculine players on the German screen. His name is extremely well known wherever German pictures are shown in this country and in consequence is a definite and important selling point. The others of the cast, though less well known, are competent.

The second important selling angle is the subject, which concerns fliers and their craft and a trans-Atlantic flight from Berlin to New York which is extremely well simulated. When one of the two pilots crawls out upon a wing high above the sea at night to repair a broken oil line, the film reaches its high point of dramatic action. "Gloria" is the name of the Atlantic plane.

Froelich, an air mail pilot, refrains from returning to the stunt flying for which he was once famed, because of his wife's fear. A friend, also a stunt flier, arrives for an air meet, wins, and at a dinner in his honor takes charge of Froelich's wife while he flies the night mail. When Froelich returns to find that his wife has flown with his friend, they quarrel. He leaves the house, takes possession of a long distance flight plane, and sets off across the ocean with one companion. A reconciliation follows the successful completion of the flight.

There is a spot of comedy here and there in the course of the picture which serves well to set off the dramatic sequences. It is an ably handled film, entertaining, and should be turned to good account by the exhibitor who is in a position to sell a German picture.—Aaronson, New York.

Die Tanzerin von Sanssouci

The King's Dancer

(Capital)

Historical Drama

This German language picture centered about an incident of Prussian history, maintains its appearance of wholly authentic historical atmosphere as to background and the figures involved.

The story, which concerns Frederic the Second of Prussia and a dancer to whom he has become attracted, makes no concession whatever to the non-German seeing the production. The superimposed subtitle in English is here omitted, requiring that he rely upon the brief program synopsis or his own intuition to follow the sequency of the story, though that is not difficult.

The settings being what they are, the performances rather good and the atmosphere having a ring of authenticity, the film has a certain interest and general appeal for the English as well as the German-speaking audience.

Once again Otto Gebuehr, as the Emperor Frederic, presents a very natural, most human monarch. Doubtless Herr Gebuehr already has come to feel regal in his own right as a German citizen, so frequently has he played the Frederic role. His appearance is an asset to the film. The dancer is played by Lil Dagover, actress of not a little repute across the Continental screens, whose attempt at an American invasion, sponsored by one of the major companies not long since, was hardly successful. Still, she performs ably as the flighty toast of Europe, who is drawn to Berlin at the King's request to perform in the opera, who is attracted to him by his kindness, and falls in love with a young officer when the king is called to the important business of war.

Returning with another victory to his credit, the king discovers the lovers about to flee. As they wait for the expected punishment, he calmly pardons them, lets them go, then replies to the cheers of the multitude of adoring subjects and walks, a lonely man, through his castle.

The German audience will be entertained and amused by what is occasionally apparently clever dialogue. For best results sell it perhaps in the metropolitan intimate theatre or in the ordinary house in a German community, stressing the monarch of Gebuehr, the dancer of Lil Dagover.—Aaronson, New York.

Whoopee Party

(United Artists)

Amusing Nonsense

Mickey Mouse, Walt Disney's animated hero of the picture public, here indulges himself and his assorted hodge-podge of caricatured animal pals in a grand whoopee party, with the resulting antics contributing to a noisy and riotous animated time, making for a nonsensical, though amusing, cartoon number. The police come to quell the disturbance and stay to add to it.—Running time, 7 minutes.

For the Love of Ludwig

Fair Comedy

This comedy falls rather short of the type of film in which Andy Clyde generally appears, containing a portion of slapstick and providing Clyde with hardly a major spot in the cast. The girl marries the corpulent Ludwig, and Clyde appears on the honeymoon yacht without an invitation. There is good action when the two hook a large swordfish from a rowboat. Both land in the water in expected fashion. Only a fair comedy.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Venetian Holiday

(Fox)

Interesting

One of the excellent Fox group of shorts, "The Magic Carpet of Movietone," this subject takes the audience to Venice, city of gondolas and canals, the famed Rialto over the Grand Canal, the pigeons in the square. Interesting are the scenes of the daily life along the banks and on the canals, the market of produce on boats. Of dominant interest are the close-up shots in one of the Venice glass-blowing works, where skilled workmen turn out famed examples of their art.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Tee for Two

(Vitaphone)

Diverting

The use of Technicolor in this abbreviated musical comedy short subject enhances its entertainment qualities to a considerable extent. The golfer is knocked unconscious with a ball, and dreams the country club has been invaded by beautiful girls and diverting entertainment. The chorus numbers are effective, scenically the subject is lavishly handled and on the whole it is a rather entertaining short.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Films Nominated By Academy Seen In Coast 'Revival'

One of the most interesting and unusual "revival" showings ever staged was to begin Thursday, November 10, at the Fox-West Coast Criterion theatre in Los Angeles. For one solid week, afternoons and evenings, the house will show all the pictures, features and shorts, which have been nominated for awards this year by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

It is believed the showings will afford a series of unusually high class programs for the public, give those who missed one or more of the big pictures of the year an opportunity to see them, and afford the 800 members of the Academy who are now balloting to select the winners an opportunity of refreshing their memories so that they may vote more intelligently. The showings will be completed November 16, and the polls close November 17. Announcement of the awards will be made when the secret ballots are opened and tallied at the annual Academy dinner the following night at the Ambassador hotel.

Two feature candidates for honors and one short subject nominee film will be shown in the afternoon, and another program of the same length each evening during the run. For example, on the opening day the matinee program will consist of "The Guardsman" and "The Champ," together with a short novelty, "Screen Souvenirs." That evening the house will run "Bad Girl" and "One Hour With You" as the features and a comedy, "The Music Box," as the short.

Other pictures to be run as candidates include "Transatlantic," "Smiling Lieutenant," "Shanghai Express," "A Nous La Liberte," "Sin of Madelon Claudet," "Emma," "Star Witness," "Lady and Gent," "Five Star Final," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "What Price Hollywood" and "Arrowsmith."

Short subjects in addition to those mentioned will include "Wrestling Swordfish," "The Loud Mouth," "Stout Hearts and Willing Hands," "Swing High," "Flowers and Trees," "Mickey's Orphans," "It's Got Me Again."

The suggestion has been made by Academy executives that similar revival showings of these pictures might be popular at this time, while nation-wide publicity is being given the annual awards. National radio hookups over N. B. C. and Columbia networks have been arranged for the night of the banquet in Los Angeles, to publicize to the country the winners of the awards.

Brylawski Re-elected to Head Washington MPTO

A. Julian Brylawski was re-elected president of the MPTO of the District of Columbia at the annual meeting held last week. Other officers elected were: Sydney B. Lust, vice president; William B. Herbst, treasurer; N. B. Browne, secretary; John J. Payette, Hardie Meakin, W. W. Wilcox, N. Stiefel, C. H. Olive, members of the executive committee.

Universal's Fourth Annual Party Draws Nearly 900

Almost 900 persons attended the fourth annual dinner-dance given by the Universal Club at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel on Monday night. A message was read from Carl Laemmle, Universal president, who had expected to attend.

Among the officials of the company who were present were: R. H. Cochran, vice-president; P. D. Cochrane, head of exploitation, advertising and publicity; Charles B. Paine, newly elected president of the Universal Club and treasurer of Universal Pictures; L. J. Schlaiffer, general sales manager; Paul Gulick, publicity director; Frank McCarthy, eastern sales manager. Two exchange managers attended: Morris Joseph of New Haven and H. Sauber of Albany. Also present were: Herbert Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries; P. A. Powers, executive of Powers Pictures, Inc.; Sam B. Jacobson, editor of Universal's newsreel, and Frank Mastroly, Carl Laemmle's personal representative. Helen E. Hughes, secretary of Universal, was chairman of arrangements.

Nick Kenny, radio columnist of the New York Mirror, served as master of ceremonies, introducing, among others, Morton Downey and William O'Neill.

Motion Picture Club Party Addressed by Fannie Hurst

The election night party—the most pretentious ever staged by the Motion Picture Club—was still in full swing early Wednesday morning.

Fannie Hurst was the principal speaker at the Forum session, which followed the dinner and was the first that the club ever held at night. She was introduced by Louis Nizer, toastmaster, to the capacity audience of 250 members and guests.

An elaborate floor show was presented. Among those introduced by Jack Osterman, master of ceremonies, were Emil Boreo, Edward G. Robinson, Willie and Eugene Howard, also Dick Gilbert and his gang, including Tony Canzoneri, Vaughn De Leath, Carmen Cuyler, Verna Burke, Margurita Padula and Billy Gleason; also Don Hudson, Rosalie Royce, Irene Botts, Dorothy Rotay, Phil Baker, Fred Keating, Paul Muni, Nick Stuart, Sue Carol, Jack Pearl and Ken Murray.

Special "horse races" were held during the evening and complete election returns were received over a private wire.

W. R. Edrington, Who Backed Earl Carroll Shows, Is Dead

William Reynolds Edrington, Fort Worth, Tex., and New York banker, and at one time financial backer of Earl Carroll, theatrical producer, died last Sunday at a Fort Worth hospital. He had been ill since February, when he suffered a nervous breakdown. He was 65 years old.

Mr. Edrington came to New York in 1919 after banking affiliations with his father in Fort Worth. Having met Mr. Carroll on Broadway, Mr. Edrington financed the first "Vanities" and subsequently the construction of the Earl Carroll theatre, which cost $4,000,000 and was opened in August, 1931. The theatre did not pay, Mr. Carroll was forced to relinquish control, and in March, 1931, Mr. Edrington was adjudged a bankrupt in federal court.

Warner Will Not Decentralize; Plan Pleases Hammons

Joseph Bernhard, general manager of Warner theatres, flatly denied early this week that his organization was considering any plan to decentralize its theatres. It had been previously reported that Warner Bros. were considering such a plan, possibly through the formation of a number of operating partnerships.

In the meantime, E. W. Hammons, head of Educational-World Wide, said this week that "the decentralizing of theatre operation under way at present is the most hopeful sign for the future of the picture industry which has developed in years. "This decentralizing movement," said Mr. Hammons, "is simply getting back to the fundamentals on which this industry built its original great success. When the big circuits go a step further and decentralize their film buying as well as their theatre operation, they will have made another move which, in all sincerity, I believe to be necessary before our industry can be put back on the profitable basis which we all wish for.

"Mr. John Hertz is absolutely right in his statement that the interests of the theatres themselves can best be served by placing more authority in the hands of the local manager. No executive a thousand miles away can possibly hope to have the grasp of local conditions which the alert showman can have after long daily contact with the clientele of his theatre, or to know so well the needs and desires of that local patronage. In the proper handling of short subjects, this is especially obvious. Many a show has been saved by the judicious selection and presentation of the proper short subjects to meet local conditions, just as many another show has been handicapped by their improper use.

"The next logical step in this important forward movement back to fundamentals would seem to be the placing in the hands of the local showmen of the buying of their short features, so that they would have full authority to determine what short pictures they will play as well as when and how they will play them.

"The sooner this local buying policy is brought about, the better it will be for the industry at large. Regardless of the attitudes of the big companies controlling circuits toward the local buying of features, however, the local buying policy can, and should be, put in effect immediately as far as short subjects are concerned, restoring open competition in that field at least.

"The industry is taking an important step in the right direction. Let us hope it will carry out this movement to its logical conclusion."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended November 5, 1932, reached $1,457,636 from 113 houses in 19 key cities. This compares with a total of $1,582,107 for the previous calendar week, ended October 29, from 117 houses in 20 key cities. Four theatres listed in the compilation of the preceding week are not represented in that of the more recent period. A decrease of $124,471 is recorded. Three new low individual house records and no new high figures during the later week compare with four new "lows" and no new "highs" for the previous week.

the CONSOLIDATED Eagle Guards Your Investment

Our New York and Hollywood plants are especialy equipped to develop negatives—to render a COMPLETE film laboratory service.

YOUR negatives are safe at Consolidated . . . protected by the latest scientific devices against every possible hazard. The same unrelenting care protects the originality of your ideas. There is no possibility that they will be revealed to trade or public until release date.

"Certified Prints" are absolutely guaranteed. Quality is CONTROLLED. The results of every process are predetermined. There is no guesswork. We employ only the most skilled operators with years of experience. The finest raw stock and chemicals are used.

Yet we're constantly striving for improvement. Day in and day out in our own costly research laboratories, our chemical and technical engineers seek the means of improving the quality and prolonging the life of "Certified Prints."

Our entire organization realizes the importance of speed. They are trained to meet the instant demands characteristic of the industry. Our plants are equipped to operate twenty-four hours a day when overnight service is required. They have a yearly capacity of over a billion feet of film printing.

Working capital is ample to carry out the largest release printing contract, to provide loans to our customers and to finance independent production on a large scale.

Until you visit Consolidated Park, the world's greatest film laboratory, you can never appreciate how Consolidated has adanced the art and science of film printing. Let us know when you can conveniently call and we shall assign one of our staff to escort you through the plant and explain in detail the operation of this branch of the industry.

DEAR HERALD:

If you drive the western plains of Kansas at this season of the year you will see a wonderful sight—green wheat fields in every direction as far as the eye can penetrate. Recent rains have put this wheat in fine shape to go through the winter, and with seasonable moisture in the spring ought to insure an abundant harvest next season.

L. C. Snyder of the Mainstreet Theatre at Oakley also owns the Snyder at Ness City and the Crystal at Ellis. We met Mr. Snyder for the first time, and we met Mrs. Snyder at their dinner table and at about the best dinner we have sat down to in many a day. If you like peach preserves, and the best preserves you ever put down your neck, write Mrs. Snyder for her recipe.

L. C. told us that he thought he ought to have the HERALD for each one of his theatres and we agreed with him unanimously. The fact is, a lot more of 'em ought to see it that way. We know of nothing that goes with good pictures to build up business like the HERALD. Our next visit to Kansas will include Oakley as Our Sunday town because of these two delightful folks and Oakley's swell hotel.

Lawrence Gilbreath is undoubtedly the nerviest guy in Kansas. He built the New Isis Theatre in Lucas right in the midst of the depression and he is happy and contented. There are rainbows shining all around the New Isis but Lawrence doesn't chase 'em, they just gather around there every time he has a show. That's why they don't need street lights in Lucas. The New Isis is a swell theatre and would be good enough for Neligh, Nebraska, or Salmon, Idaho, and Lucas has only about 1,200 Jayhawkers within the corporate limits, but it has a large territory to draw from.

Our guess is that when the New Isis can't make the grade it will be time for the Indians to move back and take this state over. Lawrence is a strong believer in the HERALD, and that, coupled with his ability to pick the good ones, accounts for the success of the New Isis.

Lucas is where the famous "Garden of Eden" is located and thousands of tourists come here every year to view it. It is filled with trees, birds, fish, reptiles of all kinds, and all kinds of animals, all made out of cement by an old eccentric who has put in the most of his life working on these peculiar formations. When you go to Lucas visit the New Isis first and then see the "Garden of Eden." After that everything will look common to you.

George Werts of the Mainstreet Theatre at Beloit has pretty strong opposition in the Fox house, but George has tied up with MGM, Warner Bros. and First National, and we'll betcha that with this lineup George will give 'em a run for their money. We met the manager of the Fox house but his name has escaped us. We met him over in Missouri at one time and our opinion is that he is a live wire and knows what the show business is all about. Some don't.

This week we will be down among the Sooners and headed for Texas.

We drove over to Plainville to visit our old comrade in crime, George Moore, who runs the Moore Theatre, that is, George doesn't run it but Mrs. Moore does. George is on the road for some grocery house and Mrs. Moore says it's a good thing because he was always in the way around the theatre. She had a board out in front of the theatre on which was painted "Take a Chance Night," and no other billing. We judge the Plainville folks were willing to take a chance, for the house was comfortably filled.

Plainville people know they are never taking any chances at the Moore Theatre as long as Mrs. Moore is at the helm and George is out of town, although George is a pretty swell fellow himself.

H. C. Musgrave has succeeded Mr. Smith in the ownership and management of the Cozy Theatre at Minneapolis. Mr. Smith, we understand, is operating the theatre at Clyde, which he bought from Sam Blair of Belleville.

It was our first meeting with Mr. and Mrs. Musgrave, although they said they knew us from having followed this educational (?) Colyum for a number of years, which is further proof of the constant hunger of people for knowledge, and which, by the way, is the hope of the nation.

We found these folks just like all the other Jayhawkers, most delightful people, and we trust it will not be the last time we will be privileged to call on them.

A man who can't appreciate a good dinner certainly ought to change his politics. When we stuck our feet under Mrs. Musselman's table the other night and faced a banquet that would make a Democrat's mouth water, we rejoiced that we were one of the chosen people to inhabit this good old U. S. A. Ray was there and he uncorked something that "fizzed" just before dinner. Ray works for Uncle Sam and Mrs. operates the theatre, and that makes a pretty good combination. We asked their daughter, Dorine, if she remembered sitting on our lap some five years ago during the show and telling us how she liked Tom Mix until she fell asleep, but she couldn't remember it.

Lincoln is located in the heart of the wheat belt and this ought to make a pretty lively spot if the price of wheat ever reaches a point beyond the cost of production, which it is some several points below right now.

Mr. Kelley is not only the operator of the theatre, but he is the postmaster at Wakeeney (they didn't spell that town right) and he says that between the two jobs he has been able to gather enough wolf hides to make his wife several rugs. Wakeeney is a snappy little town surrounded by green wheat fields and a lot of cattle and some barbed wire fences. She has no street railways nor racketeers, and she don't need 'em, she's a happy, contented town and that's all that is necessary, so we'll let it go at that, but thanks to Mr. Kelley for a delightful visit.

Big London Drive On Buck Picture

A tie-in with a widely-known cigaret advertisement, jig-saw puzzle cuts in provincial newspapers, a Frank Buck Jungle Scout Club and serial stories in several magazines were some of the achievements prominent in the London exploitation of "Bring 'Em Back Alive," conducted in that city last September by Frank Tiley, general advertising and publicity director of Radio Pictures, Ltd.

Other features of the campaign included a political cartoon in the Daily Express by Strube, ace cartoonist of Great Britain; a ballyhoo van; a large and novel Neon sign; numerous interviews with Frank Buck and Mrs. Buck, a daily competition for children in jungle painting prizes (in the Daily Sketch); a Frank Buck "plug" article in the Lyons teashops menu, for one week, going to 10,000,000 customers.

SELECTIONS

Noted by RITA C. McGOLDRICK

"Selections" represents a fair cross-section of national opinion on the important pictures of the month. The estimate given to each of the following films is the average opinion expressed by those national organizations engaged in previewing motion pictures.

"Selections" is designed to spare the exhibitor the necessity of having to compare the lists issued by various organizations which so often are widely divergent in viewpoint. The following pictures were adjudged clean and high grade film entertainment with strong box office possibilities.

Family Suitability

AIR MAIL — VERY GOOD
Universal

This picture is tremendously exciting, showing the dangers of the air mail service and the daring chances with the elements taken by the pilots to keep to the mail schedule. The interest is entirely centered on the dramatic flying, frightful accidents and heroic rescues of brave pilots. Three crashes, death and maiming make the vivid picturization too strong meat for children. (Ralph Bellamy, Slim Summerville, Pat O'Brien, Russell Hopton, Lillian Bond.)

THE BIG BROADCAST — VERY GOOD
Paramount

A lively picture that will be a rare treat to radio fans, who will see and hear such favorites as Bing Crosby, Burns and Allen, Kate Smith, Donald Novis, and others. (Stuart Erwin, Lelia Hyams.)

THE BIG STAMPEDE — VERY GOOD
Warner

Duke, that clever horse, is an excellent aide to the deputy who makes the open range safe for New Mexico settlers. (John Wayne, Noah Beery.)

EMIL UND DIE DETEKTIVE — VERY GOOD
(Emil and the Detective)
Ufa

This is Germany's first contribution to juvenile audiences, and it will appeal equally to American children because of its plot and the fact that the action is clearly understandable in spite of the German dialogue. An imaginative boy, who loves to play detective, is entrusted with a sum of money for his grandmother. En route he is robbed, and he enlists the aid of a gang of Berlin children to track down the thief, who proves to be a long sought criminal. The clever photography, naturalness of the children, and unusually interesting background combine to make a very entertaining picture which children will enthusiastically approve. (Fritz Rasp, Kathe Haack. All German dialogue.)

THE GOLDEN WEST — VERY GOOD
Fox

This picture is above the average of this type. The early scenes are laid in Kentucky and carry the story of a feud which continues into the second generation when the families migrate West. Covered wagons, buffalo hunts, the fight to lay a new railroad in Indian infested country, all rather familiar on the screen but very well done. (George O'Brien, Janet Chandler, Bert Hanlon, Arthur Pierson.)

HIDDEN GOLD — GOOD
Universal

Tom Mix and his horse Tony manage to recover the gold stolen from the local bank, against great difficulties, including a realistic forest fire.

KLONDIKE — VERY GOOD
Monogram

A problem story concerning a doctor's ethics after he has been accused of performing an operation that his fellow surgeons thought was too delicate, and therefore too great a risk. He is accused in the death of the patient. Disgraced, he leaves his work behind him and flies with a friend to Alaska, where new problems and a romance await him. The picture has something of beauty, moments of fine dramatic tensity and a lesson in the behavior of a gentleman. For this reason it is a picture worth recommending to young people. (Thelma Todd, Lyle Talbot, H. B. Walthall, Tully Marshall, Frank Hawkes.)

LITTLE ORPHAN ANNIE — VERY GOOD
RKO Radio

A new comer, Buster Phelps, makes us live a realistic episode in the life of Annie, cleverly portrayed by Mitzi Green.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN
Paramount — VERY GOOD

Here is a drama of the ringside which tells the story of clean sportsmanship. The picture is full of interesting inside scenes in Madison Square Garden, showing some of the great events that take place there. There is a little love interest, but this is essentially a man and boy's picture. (William Collier, Jack Oakie, Warren Hymer, Thomas Meighan, William Boyd, Marian Nixon.)

United Artists

A sentimental little story telling of a romance between an Austrian officer in the World War and a pretty little flower girl in Vienna. It is musical and lightly entertaining. (Jack Buchanan, Anna Neogle.)

MUST WAR BE? — GOOD
Peace Films Foundation

Good review and historical study of events since the World War, showing what progress has been made in the cause of World Peace. Silent picture with accompanying lecture takes us all over the world, and Professor James F. Green makes a plea for disarmament.

PACK UP YOUR TROUBLES — GOOD
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

The whole family will enjoy the antics of Laurel and Hardy as reluctant World War recruits and then as anxious foster parents of their dead comrade's child. It is an entertaining farcical comedy, yet the unexpected bits of pathos give it depth and a charm that is altogether delightful. (Laurel and Hardy, Paulette Goddard, Donald Diloway.)

RENEGADES OF THE WEST — GOOD
RKO

The usual western routine of fast riding, stage coach holdups, incredibly brave hero, sweet heroine, bad men, etc. Of average interest to audiences who like this type of picture. (Tom Keene, Betty Furness, Roscoe Ates.)

THAT'S MY BOY — EXCELLENT
Columbia

This is a strong and gripping football story with more heart interest than the average and with some sensitive and superb acting by Richard Cromwell and Mae Marsh. The football sequences are thrilling. The picture has plenty of action and tenseness.

THEY CALL IT SPORT — GOOD
RKO

This is another football story with Dartmouth college as a background. Its theme is like a few others of the football pictures of the year, telling the story of a boy whose fame on the gridiron is his undoing. (Joel McCrea, Marion Marsh, Skeets Gallagher.)

TOO BUSY TO WORK — VERY GOOD
Fox

The best all-round picture that Will Rogers has made. The story, sentimental but pleasant, is a delight, and "Jubilo's" kindly, witty philosophy warms the heart. He is a drifting tramp, a returned war veteran who tries to locate a family which long since has passed out of his life. The sincere presentation of the character, the deliciously funny situations and natural and amusing dialogue combine to provide excellent entertainment. (Will Rogers, Marion Nixon, Frederic Burton, Dick Powell.)

WILD GIRL — VERY GOOD
Fox

An entertaining romance from Bret Harte's story "Salomy Jane's Kiss," has for its background the giant redwoods of California. (Joan Bennett, Charles Farrell, Ralph Bellamy.)

WILD HORSE STAMPEDE — VERY GOOD
Columbia

An extraordinarily fine picture of a wise and brave horse. A group of crooks pretend to be government agents and try to rob the Navaho tribe of Indians. A young brave and a wild horse play the heroic parts. (William Janney, Dorothy Appleby, Wallace McDonald, "Rex," the wild horse.)

Adult Suitability

AFRAID TO TALK — GOOD
Universal

A drama attempting to be timely, is made up of the intrigues, plots, deceptions, of dishonest politicians, at the expense of city government. The picture lacks rightness, being more like the racketeer pictures of last year. (Eric Linden, Sydney Fox.)

FALSE FACES — GOOD
Tiffany

Tragi-comedy based on the exploits of an engaging charlatan who undertakes plastic surgery with no knowledge of it. Lowell Sherman is very smooth and amusing in the part, the supporting cast is good and the direction and dialogue crisp. (Lowell Sherman, Peggy Shannon, Lila Lee.)

SELECTION OF SELECTIONS IN PICTURES

THE KING MURDER — VERY GOOD
Chesterfield Production

A murder mystery in which the plot is concerned with the mystery rather than the details of the killing. No scenes of violence are shown and yet the mystery loses none of its interest. The revelation of the murderer comes as a clever surprise and is not obvious at any time. To Conway Tearle goes the glory of the solution as well as the laurels for a good performance. Mr. Tearle is well supported and for those who enjoy this type of story the suspense will be sufficiently entertaining. (Conway Tearle, Natalie Moorhead, Marceline Day.)

LIEBE IST LIEBE
(Love Is Love)
UFA

This German dialogue operetta is very entertaining even to an English speaking audience, for the direction and pantomime make the action and humor perfectly clear. It is an amusing comedy, Continental in treatment and full of absurdities. It tells the story of an impecunious youth who, through methods acceptable only in farce, wins the wealthy lady of his choice. (Kalthe M. Nagy, Haus Albers. All German dialogue.)

THE MATCH KING — VERY GOOD
Warner-First National

A tale of modern finance, stranger than fiction, following the phenomenal rise of a man from the lowly job of street cleaner to control of the match industry of the world and juggler of international credit. Although Warren William plays the role in a deft, high-handed way which only suggests the real character, and Lily Damita lacks something of the great lure required of her past, the background of truth gives weight and interest to the production. Not subtle or imaginative, but straight-forward in direction and engrossing in plot material. (Warren William, Lily Damita, Hardie Albright.)

SECRETS OF THE FRENCH POLICE
RKO — GOOD

The French police solve a series of mystifying crimes by careful laboratory investigation and the assistance of an amusing thief. The system by which they work is interestingly disclosed; their card files, their secret underground workers and their keen intelligence building a fine network. Rather slow in development but well acted, against scenes of the murky cafes and streets of Paris and the magnificent castle of the half-demented arch criminal. Acceptable fare for those who enjoy crime solution in the Sherlock Holmes manner. (Gwili Andre, Gregory Ratoff, Frank Morgan, Rochelle Hudson, John Warburton.)

SILVER DOLLAR — VERY GOOD
Warner-First National

Early Colorado history, the beginning of Denver and the great silver discoveries at Leadville, following through to the deflation of silver and the ensuing panic. Edward Robinson gives another of his notable characterizations as the man responsible for this phenomenal growth. A story of courage, vision, optimism against all odds, a Napoleon creating his own laws, a schemer ludicrous in his success and pathetic in his defeat but in some way lovable throughout, making believable the lasting devotion of two women. The directing and acting are strong. The treatment is episodic, often rough and not always moral but of significant historical and character interest. (Edward G. Robinson, Aline McMahon, Bebe Daniels.)

SIX HOURS TO LIVE — GOOD
Fox

This is an adaptation of the story "Auf Wiedersehn." A rather morbid story of the mental experience of a man who is brought back from death by a scientist but who may live only six hours. The picture is notable, not so much for its theme, as for the splendid acting of Warner Baxter. (Warner Baxter, Marion Jordon, John Boles.)

TROUBLE IN PARADISE — GOOD
Paramount

An international thief loses his heart and his money to a charming and clever pickpocket. He becomes temporarily interested in a lovely lady, but she finally accepts her defeat gracefully. Without the arresting technique of its presentation the story would be nothing, but the unique use of light and shade, musics, photographic tricks, and pantomime embellish the production, and comedy overbalances the sophistication until we have a fresh, amusing and rather glamorous farce suitable for adult appreciation. (Herbert Marshall, Miriam Hopkins, Kay Francis, Charles Ruggles.)

TWENTY THOUSAND YEARS IN SING SING — VERY GOOD
Warner-First National

Although Warden Lawes' book is a strong plea against capital punishment as told through the lives of many prisoners, the picture carries one life story through to its tragic and yet triumphant ending, making use at the close of the radio broadcast, suggested by the warden, to give the world a vivid portrayal of an electrocution. Grim, yet lighted somewhat by the rugged, ironic humor of Spencer Tracy's insubordination; entertaining in its grip upon the feelings but not in the usually accepted meaning of the term. (Spencer Tracy, Arthur Byron, Bette Davis.)

WASHINGTON MASQUERADE
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer — VERY GOOD

Lionel Barrymore in a thrilling presentation of disintegration of character under the pressure of political lobbyists. Another characteristic attempt to present the present-day political and social problems. A vital picture.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB OF MOTION PICTURE HERALD

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

THE VALUE OF YOUR SCREEN!

IF IT COSTS YOU about twenty-five dollars every time you make up a change in your lobby displays, and someone comes along and offers to make that change for twenty dollars, you snap at the chance and feel that you've just saved your house five dollars for every change.

Then, looking over your program printing bill you find you are spending about five dollars a thousand for this item, and if you can get it done for fifty cents less you are again enthused over the stroke of business genius that resulted in another saving for your house.

But when it comes to your screen you take it too much as a matter-of-course and rarely weigh its possibilities for building business. Yet, who will deny that the screen is the greatest advertising medium of any theatre? It flashes before your paid audience your message; whether that message be an institutional thought or a plug for a coming attraction, it is read because your audience is looking right at it.

WITH THESE FEW rambling thoughts, will someone step up and tell me why the screens of every theatre in the land are not being used far more intelligently than they are now? Will someone explain why it is that this great medium of direct contact is treated like some sort of a stepchild? Why the foulest sort of material is permitted to be jammed down the throats of intelligent audiences because they are sitting there and can do nothing about it?

THERE ARE TWO OUTSTANDING advertising approaches, to our way of thinking, which can do more direct good than all the other slants put together. The first is newspaper advertising, and the other is screen advertising—meaning, of course, advertising the theatre's shows. Through these two mediums you can generally rely upon the effectiveness of any campaign designed to reach the greatest number of people. The newspaper will take care of the outside-the-theatre angle, while the screen should be figured on to get across your message to those who might be classed as your regular patrons.

SO, MAY WE SUGGEST that you start to show some appreciation for your screen and its immense value as a business getter. Project upon it only that type of trailer suitable to the kind of house you are running. Remember, the more impressive you make your screen-trailer appeal, the greater the chance for breaking some box office grosses. And, aside from selling your coming attractions, such institutional trailers as you may use from time to time should likewise be made up befitting the importance of the screen.

Avoid monotony. In these days of double features and three to four changes a week it is of the utmost importance that you break up your trailers into groups. If you try to sell them too much at one time you will end up by selling nothing at all. A good way to avoid over-trailering your customers is to run a special reading, "Our Next Attraction"; then give them just that and nothing more. This is generally best spotted in the middle of the newsreel and makes the next show stand out in the minds of the patrons.

OTHER COMING ATTRACTIONS can then be run after one of the lighter short subjects because it will hit the audience while their minds are in a more receptive mood. Institutional trailers ought to be tied to some definite thought that will smooth the way for the message you want to get over. In one house we visited we found that immediately after the main feature the institutional trailer followed somewhat along these lines: The opening conveyed the thought that you (the audience) had just enjoyed a fine program amid comfortable, clean surroundings. It then followed this thought up with a plug for the Fall Festival Week, in which was emphasized the many attractions to be offered and the special events to be staged.

In this manner they did not jolt the audience from their reactions on the feature picture just witnessed into a sales argument. They led up to it in a smooth way, tying the show they had just seen with the idea that something else was coming that should appeal to them. We considered it good showmanship and well thought out. And, although they ran this institutional trailer of some length, their next attraction and several other coming attractions, it hardly seemed that they were getting too much.

IF YOU CAN SELL yourself on the fact that your screen is a mighty valuable and important wedge in your show-selling activities, you will probably get to respect it more yourself.

CLIFF BOYD CASHED IN ON LOCAL FERVOR OF POLITICAL FRACAS

Cliff Boyd, manager of the RKO Albee Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, with the sponsorship of Nat Holt and Clem Pope, respectively division manager and city manager, recently put over a stunt that clicked in ace style.

With the city all "het-up" politically, a thirty minute period was given over every noon for any voter to enter the lobby and fill out a "Four Point" questionnaire as to his political faith, views on repeal, bonus, etc. The questions and answers were read through a "mike" placed in the lobby and connected with a radio station at Covington, Ky., just across the river. If desired, the voter was also given an opportunity to briefly voice his opinions over the ether. There was no obligation to attend the show.

Boy-oh-boy! What a chance for the hoi polloi to get in their two cents' worth on their favorite political set-up. A great gag for November, Round Tablers, and we're sorry it came along so late in the campaign. However, there will be more presidents, etc., and more campaigns, so put it away in the Club file.

Anent Jake Rosenthal!

You can't keep a showman like Jake Rosenthal, manager of the Iowa Theatre, out of the limelight, advises Virgil Lewis, his associate.

This time he crashed the "Line O' Type Or Two" column of the Chicago "Daily Tribune" with a paragraph headed "The Peak Is Reached: RHL—Jake Rosenthal says that out west things are getting so tough that the hermits are starting to live together.—Jazbo of Old Dubuque."

FRED REETHS TIED WITH CHAIN STORES FOR FREE PUBLICITY

A tie-up with a chain grocery concern was recently used by Fred Reeths, Jr., manager of Warner's Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis., to effect wide distribution of a cooperative herald advertising his theatre, current attraction and sale of selected groceries.

While not a chain concern in the true sense of the word, as the heralds reveal that names of several individual merchants are featured on the middle portion of the heralds, the deal appears to have been made with members of an association formed to feature the sale of certain goods from time to time under a trade name. Each of the heralds are identical, except for the name of the merchant and the sale was built around the slogan, "Trade With Your Neighborhood Store."

Harvest time reminded Fred that we issued an effective herald at the same time last season, which we well remember describing on account of its novel appearance. It plugged the November Harvest of Hits and the middle portion was folded so that an elongated, diamond-shaped part of the folder flipped right out before the reader's eyes when it was opened. It's a difficult thing to describe and maybe Fred will be kind enough to send a sample to those who are interested. To us it seems a novel and effective piece of work.

Just to let us know that jungle effects are used for fronts over his way, Reeth's sent along a snapshot of the display he used for "Bring 'Em Back Alive," but it's not sharp enough to bring out detail in reproduction. Suffice then to state that circus paper was cut out and mounted for the animals and that stills and a vine-dressed box office further lent to the atmospheric effect.

After several weeks' absence from these columns the name of Fred Reeths is good for the eyes again and we're glad to hear that everything is rolling along ship-shape out his way. He generally has some good gags up his sleeves to slip to his fellow Round Tablers and we'll be on the lookout for more, just as soon as he can find time to shoot them in.

Relative to the co-operative herald, it might pay some of our members to make inquiry concerning similar grocers' associations and try out the idea. In most cities these days there is a group out to battle the big chain store concerns and it would seem that they should be in a receptive mood for any idea to secure good publicity and advertising.

MURPHY ENGINEERED A SMASH FRONT FOR REOPENED CRITERION

Closed for six months, the Criterion Theatre, Los Angeles, was reopened with "Congorilla." A feature of the opening campaign was a smash front, engineered by Manager Melvin J. Murphy, now with Fox-West Coast, formerly with Balaban & Katz in Chicago, and a skipper of the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., when that house was taken over by Publix.

The accompanying photo will hardly do justice to this very striking front, but will convey a fair idea of its general scheme. For one thing, it was the largest front ever used in L. A. That big elephant in the center, the gorillas, hunters, etc., were all animated, and live steam was used for smoke effect on both sides where fires were built. All skins were real ones, and the set was painted by the E. E. Fisher Studios. For further atmosphere, jungle music was sent through a loud speaker placed at left of the box office.

Another shot shows the crowd that waited one hour and thirty minutes for the doors to open and you may take our word for it that a line extended the full block and well around the far corner. Receipts broke all previous house records.

A Cuckoo of a front, all right, and we are obliged to Murphy for shooting it in to the Club. Our records do not show that he is a member and he's herewith extended a cordial invitation to join. All his friends in Chicago and upstate New York will be interested to know that he engineered such a corking display and to hear further news about what he is doing at the Criterion. C'mon in Murph!

WATERS OBTAINED A NICE FOLLOW-UP IN PAPER FOR RANGERS

A short time ago we made mention that Manager Waters of the RKO 23d Street Theatre, New York City, had organized a Buck Jones Rangers Club and gotten off to a great start by holding a mammoth parade of Boy Scouts and other youngsters in the neighborhood.

Now we note that the "East Side News," a neighborhood paper with a circulation of 25,000, is running a column headed "Campfire Talks With Buck Jones Rangers," in which mention is made of Waters and his club. The writer, among other things, got in a good plug for the club, urging that the members cooperate and support the organization to the best of their ability. Meetings are held at the theatre every Saturday at 8.45 A. M.

SOLOMON OBTAINED FINE RETURNS FROM WORK ON MARX FILM

An interesting point concerning the campaign made on "Horsefeathers" by S. S. Solomon, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, lies in the fact that it was waged in the interests of a test for this new-fangled exclusive-run policy. According to results, the plan worked out exceptionally well in this case, with the theatre doing almost 40 per cent better on "Horsefeathers" than the last Marx Brothers picture.

One of the campaign features was the importation from Cleveland of a professional ballyhoo artist, who alternated in Groucho and Harpo make-ups and character bits. In addition to chasing autos and jumping on the tops of them with acrobatic stunts, he fished for goldfish in front of the theatre, made appearances at two professional baseball games and attended wrestling bouts at a local park. During the evenings he gave an excellent impersonation of Groucho, climbed the marquee and hung from the upright and climaxed his efforts with street stunt that brought a laugh from every one who witnessed it. Dressed in Harpo red wig and make-up, he drove two big truck horses hitched to a street cleaner's pick-up can up and down the main street. The sidewalks were lined five deep with people at the time he pulled the stunt.

Other stunts included a newspaper tie-up for a "gag writing contest," whereby readers contributed original jokes for use in future Marx Bros. pictures; and a "Big and Little Dog" contest, whereby the first one hundred youngsters who brought their pets to the theatre were rewarded with an enlarged pass for the show. A remarkable amount of free newspaper space was obtained both for gag writing, the big and little dog stunt and regular run of readers.

In addition to reporting another successful campaign put over by Solomon, it's a pleasure to state that he believes there is a definite trend toward better times out his way and that the coming season will be a profitable one. This Round Tabler just rounded out three year's residence in Youngstown, which is quite a record these days. We and his fellow Club members wish him continued success.

Lacrosse and Dresserware

J. Wilcox calls our attention to a sports column in a Toronto, Canada, newspaper, in which the writer, commenting on the slim attendance at a recent game, stated that the management's only chance to get a crowd was to put on a "Dresserware Night."

FUGE TURNING OUT GOOD ART WORK FOR MANAGER BLANCHARD

We received a couple of snap-shots a short time ago from J. M. Blanchard, manager of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., showing examples of the attractive art work turned out by his artist, Walter J. Fuge, but both lack sharpness necessary for reproduction.

Descriptions inform us that the shaded portion of the Dietrich face on the "Blonde Venus" poster was done in gray-green and natural flesh color, and the hat in light yellow, with dark purple flowers. The dress was in dark brown; scarf, dark blue, with orange, green and lavender stripes, and the background in various grays. The catch line was etched in in very light green; the star's name and play dates in very light yellow; title in orange, and other lettering in lavender.

We exceedingly regret it is impractical to reproduce the poster described above, but to do so would really offer no benefit to other Club members, for reason that they would not be able to follow detail. Next time maybe Artist Fuge will see that we receive larger and sharper prints, and if so, we'll guarantee to pass them along the line. In the meantime, we'll be on the watch for further word from Manager Blanchard and his crew.

DUES ADVERTISED AN ADMISSION CUT AND DISCUSSED PREMIUMS

When making an announcement via a newspaper ad a short time ago that a cut in admission prices was due at the Texas Grand Theatre, and, at the same time listing a number of outstanding coming attractions, C. C. Dues, manager of the Texas Amusement Company, also took occasion to discuss the policy of theatres giving away expensive articles of merchandise.

Flanked by two boxed-off portions devoted to current and coming pictures under the new policy he stated:

"There will be no premiums offered, such as automobiles, radios, eatables, ice boxes or lobby entertainment.

"I am not in politics, merchandising or restaurant business. I am in show-business and give the best picture entertainment available. Did you ever stop to think what you would be paying for pictures if Crawford and Texas Grand had not come into the field? Your patronage solicited and appreciated. Sincerely, C. C. Dues."

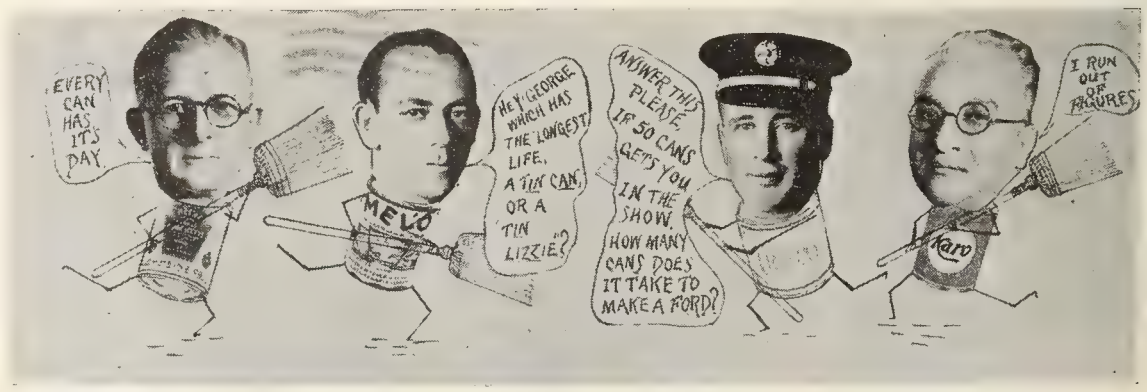
Coming at a time when there appears to be growing opposition to the practice of giving premiums, Dues' contention that he is giving his patrons full value when they buy admission is apt to meet with a lot of approbation on the part of many managers and owners of theatres. At any rate, there's food for thought. His ad, so it seems to us, was an excellent way of announcing a new policy by jamming home a few facts about his business. Were it possible to reproduce the ad satisfactorily we would do so.

BURNS-MORRISEY ARE BOTH WORKING HARD OVER IN ROSLINDALE

Through the good offices of Tom Morrisey, acting assistant manager of the Rialto Theatre, Roslindale, Mass., we are not only enabled to keep up with the activities of Manager Will Burns but can report that Tom has also been rendering a good account of himself as an exploiter of no mean calibre.

When selling "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," fifteen of fifty personal letters written for throw-away in the busiest section of the town were worded so that the holders could use them as passes to see the picture. Announcement to this effect was made three days in advance of showing and the stunt resulted in considerable word-of-mouth advertising.

A tie-up made with a chain store concern, which also tied-in suburban Boston's largest creamery company, also produced excellent results. This was ingeniously worked out by Tom from the first word of the title of the picture. Printed on a 22x28 card and surrounded by several stills from the picture was the following copy: "Roslindale Endorses Butter, Eggs, Cream, Certified, at Sunnybrook Farm—See Sunnybrook Farm, Featuring, etc., etc." It will be noted that the words up to and including "At" spell Rebecca, and those were set in vertical order on the card.



These novelty gags are generally most effective when worked only occasionally. Try this sort of stunt too often and it loses its pull. Perhaps that is why Burns and Morrisey found it good. They did not work it too often. Smart showmanship, too.

Owing to the usual stack of correspondence always with us we're a bit late in getting the above into type and hope both Burns and Morrisey will overlook the matter and continue to send along reports on what they are doing to boost box office trade over their way. Thanks for the information, Tom, and give our best regards to Boss Bill. Let's hear from you some more.

BRUNSON'S GAG FOR TIN CAN DAY!

Above is a reproduction of a post card mailed out by "Carolina" Brunson, manager of the Yuma Theatre, Yuma, Ariz., in connection with his Third Annual Tin Can Day, sponsored by the Yuma Theatre and the Yuma Fire Department. Nine hundred girls and boys gathered between 80,000 and 100,000 cans at the rate of 50 cans per pass. Merchants cooperated by donating prizes for the largest number of cans gathered. Left to right in this novel photo are: Mayor Kelley; "Carolina" Brunson himself; Fire Chief Robinson, and Chief of Police Levy.

JACK LYKES INVENTS NOVEL IDEA TO HANG BANNER ACROSS ROAD

The enterprising Jack Lykes, manager of Loew's Park Theatre, Cleveland, to whom this Club is indebted for many showmanlike suggestions, still has his idea factory running full tilt.

Although not permitted to hang any banners across the street in front of his house, he had a line rigged up from the upright sign of the theatre to a building on the opposite side. To this he attaches a miniature airplane, zeppelin or something else along the same lines, to which a sign can be hung. This sign, which is large enough to be read from the street, yet small enough to arouse curiosity, is run back and forth on the almost invisible line and has proven a corking good stopper. It is not advisable to overdo the gag, states Jack, as it has a tendency to tie up traffic. Just a short time each day and then yank it back above the marquee until ready to use again. No complaint from the authorities so far and it's been in operation for several weeks.

Lykes also made a corking tie-up a short time ago with a confectioner who furnished 1,000 bags of "Horsefeathers" candy, wrapped in special "Horsefeathers" paper wrappers. Uniformed girls from the candy store were on hand at the theatre on opening day of picture to distribute the confection to all children attending the show.

The accompanying photo shows the elaborate window display that went into effect for ten days as the result of the candy store tie-up. The proprietor also displayed a 4 x 12 foot sign inside over the music counter with appropriate copy on picture and local newspaper carried stories about the free candy matinee. The store profited by a large sale of sheet music and kiddie patronage at the theatre was about five times above normal.

That was a smart little gag of Jack's he used to get around the city ordinance forbidding the stringing of signs across the street in front of his house and it's quite possible some other Club member may be able to use the idea to good advantage. His tie-up with the candy dealer apparently produced satisfactory results to all concerned. Now that this Round Tabler is busy with new season offerings we'll undoubtedly have some more interesting news to pass along.

CAN YOU USE FIFTY DOLLARS?

Can a fish swim? Same answer. Well, what are you doing to win one or more of the prizes being offered by RKO-Van Beuren Corporation for merchandising the Chaplin reissues?

There are many ways to grab off some of the prize dough and we're suggesting something along the lines of a novel marquee and lobby display featuring cut-outs of the famous comedian. These can also be set up on an endless belt and the entire marquee top will become an animated display.

Or a newspaper ad in which proper prominence is given the Chaplin reels by treating them as they should be treated in an ad; fifty per cent of your regular space. See if that won't suggest an original ad idea that may be worth one of the prizes.

A swell street ballyhoo consisting of a group of boys dressed as Chaplin and imitating his unique walk right down at the busy thoroughfare of the town.

Get busy boys. Write, wire or phone to your nearest RKO Exchange for the Chaplin press book and you'll get several dozen different ideas to go to work on for the prize money.

Get busy and shoot your material in as fast as it's ready. We're predicting that the competition is going to be keen and, like most other contests, the showman who is generally certain that his entry is poor will walk off with the major prize. So don't try to be the whole judge and jury. You send in the material you are putting over and leave the selection to those who are anxious to uncover the best of the lot.

LEE LEVY MADE TIE-UP WITH RAILROAD TO SELL A PICTURE

An atmospheric lobby display helped Lee Levy, manager of Wilmer and Vincent's Colonial Theatre, Richmond, Va., sell "Phantom Express."

Through a tie-up with a railroad company, he secured a miniature engine and coal car, mounted on tracks, about which he centered the display in front of his theatre. Other railroad material, borrowed from the railroad company, provided additional atmosphere.

The equipment included a railroad bell and a whistle, mounted on the marquee, but screened from view. The bell, operated by an electric motor, and the whistle, operated by an oxygen tank, stopped the crowds and his attractive front put on the finishing touches to the stunt.

STARSMORE ERECTED ELABORATE FRONT AT COLORADO SPRINGS

One of the most elaborate fronts ever built in Colorado Springs, Colo., was used by L. A. Starsmore, manager of the America Theatre, for the run of "Doctor X" in his house. Large electrically lit letters spelling the picture's title were used above the marquee. Posters and cut-outs also played up the title very big with scenes from the picture in the background. Photo shows the impressiveness of the lobby, which made all pedestrians passing the theatre "Doctor X"-conscious.

In addition to the above, Starsmore rented an airplane to carry a huge neon "X" over the town for an hour each night. This was the first time a plane ever carried illumination over Colorado Springs, and the stunt created a great deal of favorable comment.

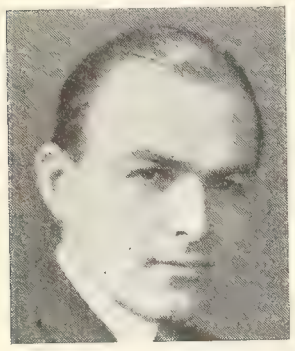
GATHERING GOOD-WILL!

Besides rolling up an avalanche of good-will from every human being in your community, you and your theatre can be responsible for promoting something that will help the needy families who must have some sort of aid at this time.



Special "old clothes" performances, ditto for groceries, vegetables and other necessities for those who are finding the going rather hard while waiting for a break.

Distribution can be handled by local welfare workers, while the newspaper publicizes your efforts and attracts attention to the worthiness of these special performances. Tie them all into the idea for best results. The editor of the paper, the mayor, heads of welfare organizations, etc., are the ones that should be parties to this fine work. Naturally, you, as the theatre manager, should be right in the middle of all activity regarding this idea.

It's getting into the cold weather now and without aid from some source or other these poor folk are going to be in a bad spot. Help them along and you may be saving a patron and his family for the future.

RECORD ENLARGEMENT MADE FOR LLOYD FILM BY MANAGER ARMSTRONG

To the best of our knowledge a record for giant enlargements was recently established when the painting of the Harold Lloyd head pictured here was strung across the front of the Carleton Theatre during the run of "Movie Crazy" in London, England. The stunt was engineered by a real, honest-to-goodness Count, who for business purposes works under the nom-de-plume of John Armstrong, director of advertising for the Paramount theatre department there.

F. A. Swain, Ltd., Photo

John Armstrong

The head was painted from a photo six inches high and enlarged 5,184 times. The hat band measured 26 feet across; inside diameter of glasses 6 feet, 3 inches; front of spectacles 18 feet, 6 inches; eyes, 4 feet, 6 inches; mouth, 9 feet; ear, 9 feet; each front tooth 15 inches square; nose, 9 feet, and the overall size was 30 feet by 40 feet. The letters underneath the head spelling the title of the picture were mechanically operated, each having a movement all its own.

Another feature of the campaign illustrates to what extent English conservatism, as related to exploitation of pictures, was set aside and is also a glowing tribute to the popularity of Lloyd in London. The other photo on this page shows the comedian leaving Victoria Station on the "Golden Arrow," a popular train which runs between London and Dover. Note the huge replica of the famous Lloyd eye-glasses attached to the engine front, rims of which contain blown-up scene stills from the picture.

Several local newspapers came through with corking publicity stories on the stunt described above, one of them carrying a large copy of the same photo we are reproducing. Attractive four-color bills of Lloyd were posted through the underground railway system of London.

We have quite a number of well known film men to thank for this contribution, including Albert Deane, manager of advertising and service in the Paramount foreign division, London; William B. Fraser, of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, New York City, and Les' Whalen, of the same organization. Between them all we couldn't miss, as one set of photos came direct from Deane of the foreign office and the other from headquarters in New York City.

Last but not least let us credit Armstrong for engineering a neat and clever hunt. We hope he and Deane will become regular contributors to this department and keep us informed on what London managers for Paramount are doing to exploit and advertise pictures.

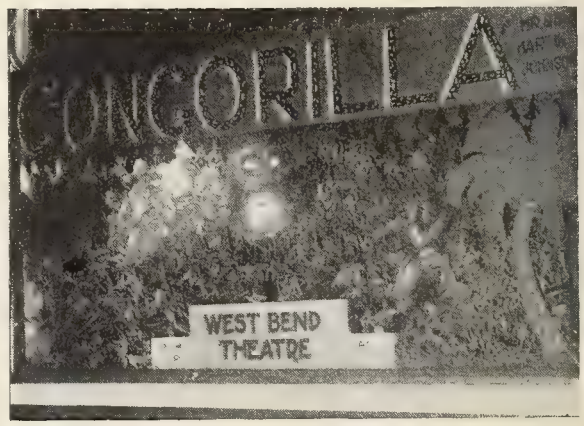
Detroit Changes

The following changes were recently made at various theatres in Detroit, Mich.: Frank Cislaw has succeeded Ben Wachnansky as manager of the Blackstone Theatre; Thomas Lancaster recently purchased an interest in the Grande Theatre from his brother, J. Lancaster; Roy Miller is the new manager of the Riviera Theatre, second run house, and Roy Kalver is at the helm of the Paramount.

FRED DONEY VARIED STYLE OF CO-OP AD WITH CUTS–STORIES

Something different in the way of co-operative ad sections was put over a short time ago by Fred Doney, manager of the Palace Theatre, East London, Ontario, Canada.

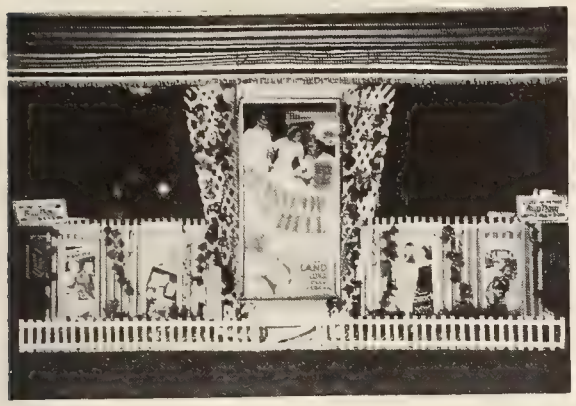
It was different, as we see it, in that the general scheme of make-up varied from the cut and dried co-op page by featuring photos of several of the participating merchants, photos of their windows and small personal items. The theatre and attractions for both nights of the event and forthcoming were given a fine break throughout the section. A give-away of merchandise, presided over by the Mayor, featured the night and was handled in the usual fashion.



Congratulations to Doney for putting over such a fine piece of work. The section was whole-heartedly supported by the newspaper and merchants and all were well satisfied with results. By this time Fred must have some other stunt up his sleeve to pass along to his fellow Club members and we'll be on the watch for it.

BERKHOLTZ SECURED EMPTY STORE WINDOW FOR UNIQUE DISPLAY

An empty store window provided space for most novel and effective display on "Congorilla" when that picture was campaigned by A. C. Berkholtz, owner and manager of the West Bend Theatre, West Bend, Wis., and several other houses in the territory. We are indebted to H. H. Berkholtz, assistant manager of the West Bend, and advertising manager, E. Albright, for sending in the accompanying photo.



The photo will not at all do justice to this fine display because of lack of sharpness and neutral reproduction of some of the material used in its construction. A large cutout head of a gorilla with one eye blinking, was set in the centre while on one side a cutout of the fighting gorillas was set up. Another cutout of Martin Johnson and Mrs. Johnson was placed at the left, to create the effect of an attempt to photograph the animals from a concealed position. Branches and leaves were placed in the window for additional jungle atmosphere.

As Berkholtz observes in so many words, it's an ill wind that doesn't blow some good for someone. Hard times drove the tenant from the store and released the fine window for theatre display purposes. We note that a number of our members have been active in rounding up vacant store windows and understand these have been secured at extremely low rate. We'll be looking for further word from West Bend and other points along the Berkholtz circuit.

PERRY SPENCER MADE ATTRACTIVE DISPLAY FOR LINDY THEATRE

While it's not the season of the year to dwell upon the importance of lattice-work and other summery looking lobby displays, a couple of these made by Perry Spencer, manager of the Lindy Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa., are certainly good enough to reproduce at any time and can be put on file as a reminder next year.

These displays were especially made by Spencer to sell shows during the summer and the color scheme was light green, with lattice work entwined with vines and flowers. Note the larger of the two, which sold a whole week's bookings at a glance. The other, though fashioned on a smaller scale, is proportionately attractive.

Thanks to Perry for sending the photos in and we're sure his fellow Round Tablers will all agree that he turned out an attractive piece of work—and when we state "he" we mean it, for Spencer did all the work himself. We'll broadcast some more news concerning the Lindy just as soon as it arrives at Club headquarters.

In the meantime, Perry, what are all those other Sound Tablers down in Philly doing these days. If you can run across any of the boys, shake them up a bit. Okay, Perry?

SIX-MONTHS CLUB INDEX!

In this issue we present another of the semi-annual indexes making your previous issues of MOTION PICTURE HERALD a veritable encyclopedia of showmanship.

With the aid of the six-months index you are able to select any form of show merchandising, advertising, or special campaign and put your finger on it instantly. Listings run into the hundreds, with dozens of entirely different campaigns on each classification from which to make the selection of the one best suited to your requirements.

In addition to the regular listings of all material which has appeared in the Round Table Club section since last May, a special box carries the list of outstanding articles which have been features during this time. These outstanding articles include the entire Ken Long, Eddie Hitchcock and Floyd Fitzsimmons series, as well as many others.

The contributions of the three showmen mentioned above are alone worth many times the cost of your yearly subscription. No doubt you have had many occasions to follow their suggestions and found them to be valuable and helpful in your daily grind.

Contrary to previous practice, the six-months index will NOT be available in reprints. The index as it appears in this week's issue should prove quite sufficient as the key to the past six-months pages.

We trust that the time and effort required in preparing the index for publication will be warranted by the wide use every member and reader makes of it during the months to come. Again we caution you always to file your weekly copy of the HERALD in the order of publication, so that it will be the work of but a moment to find any one copy. Copies so filed, plus the six-months index, represent the perfect combination for any showman's office.

C. CARROLL DID SOME HOT ELECTIONEERING FOR POLITICAL FILM

Located near Union Square, a section of New York City which for years has seethed with burning speeches from representatives of all sorts of political factions, Charlie Carroll, managing director of the Academy of Music, took quick advantage of this choice spot to put over a stunt that helped sell "Phantom President," showing currently with this country's political campaigns.

The accompanying photo, showing the orator on a platform rigged in regulation political style, tells the story, except for the several hundred people who milled around the stand every time the speaker appeared. Some roving reporters picked up the gag and it appeared in several newspapers. The campaign also included an elaborate false front and distribution of 50,000 ballot heralds and the usual run of posters, etc.

Before we sign off on Carroll's activities and thank B. J. Ostrow, assistant manager, for sending this information in let us say a word or two concerning the type of herald which, we are informed, is "eaten-up" down around polyglot 14th street.

One, a small folder of good stock, was made to represent a health certificate and used to exploit "Bill of Divorcement." While more or less in keeping with the picture's theme, as Ostrow observes, "Park Avenue" might not like to be asked whether its residents were fit to marry by checking off "symptoms of insanity, social diseases, whether or not a sexual erotic or habitual criminal." However, he tells us it goes over in a big way down in his section.

Enough super-charged words were spilled in another folder issued in connection with "Night of June 13th" to give the heart-strings of 14th street girls and women a mighty pull. For instance: "Then we have sinned—BUT . . . she was a perfect woman, nobly planned, moving like a goddess and looking like a Queen. Her beauty, like hot-beating music seared my blood, entered my soul, took sweet possession of my body.

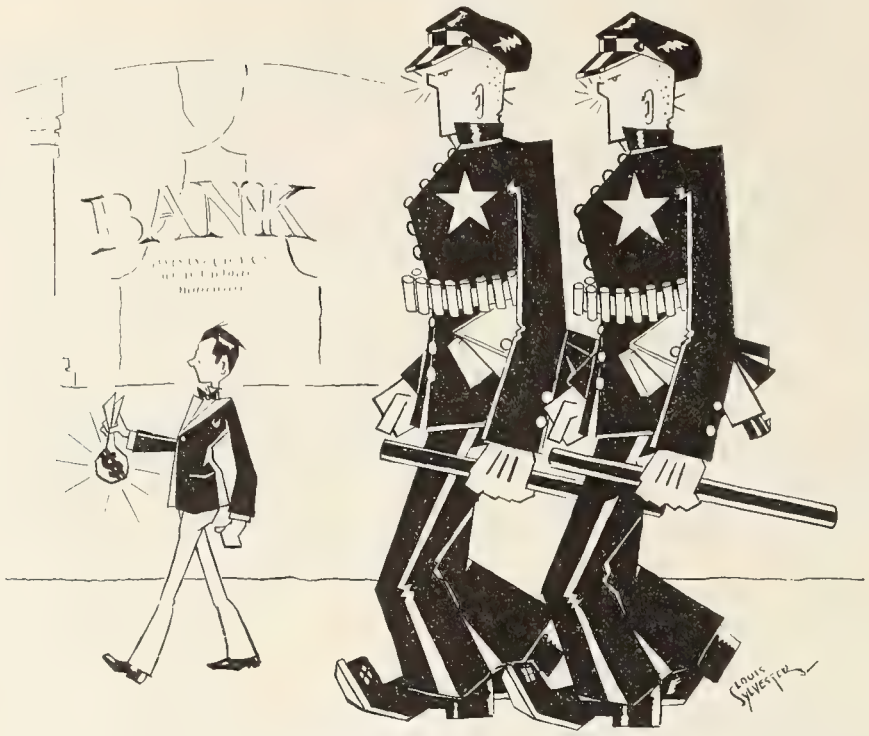
. . . IS IT SIN to love outside of conventions? Is it wrong to take love when it calls? Should we be condemned, spurned, or judged with compassion." And so on and so on, far into the night.

Regardless of what Park Avenue may think or do there are plenty of other sections just like 14th street and Union Square, hence we are passing along a sample of the kind of copy Carroll uses to appeal to his patronage. He's a seasoned showman and knows what kind of food to feed 'em.

This is the first time we've had the pleasure of hearing from him since he held forth at the Audubon, another Skouras house in uptown New York City, and, while his time is well taken up between managing the Academy and acting as a publicity and exploitation adviser for other Skouras houses in the city, we hope he will find time to keep in touch more reguarly with his Club. If he can't find the time, maybe he'll deputize Ostrow to act as official Round Table informer. Okay, Charlie?

FEATURE TIME-TABLE!

Try to arrange with your local newspaper for them to carry a small box, preferably on the front page, showing the feature starting time for all the theatres in your town.



In checking over many papers from all over the country we find that this idea is rapidly gaining in favor, and for good reasons, too. It will call the attention of the theatre public to just how much time they have to reach the theatre and still see the main attraction.

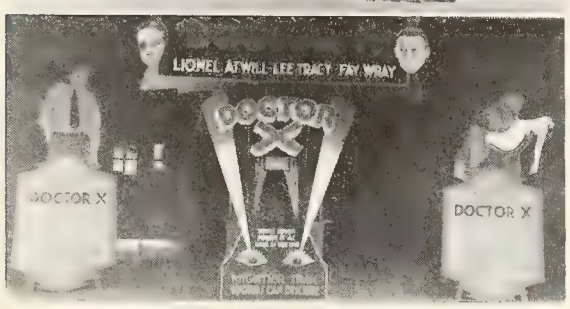
Do not assume that your patrons will waste 'phone calls all the time to find out when the feature goes on. For every one who does call, perhaps a hundred will not—figuring that they do not have sufficient time.

The easier you make it for them, the easier it will be to get them to the box office for that late showing. This is especially true on those Saturday nights when so many theatres run a midnight showing of the feature.

The newspaper ought not to find fault with the suggestion, since it should be one of the services offered to their readers.

WE OFTEN WONDER! By LOU SYLVESTER

Here we behold the armed forces of the city guarding our faithful manager while he takes the whole $87.35 to the bank for safe keeping, according to Louis Sylvester's version.



WHAT BRAVE MEN THESE MORTALS BE

MORROW WAGED GOOD CAMPAIGN BEFORE HE TOOK VIRGINIA POST

Before Floyd D. Morrow left the Kenosha Theatre, Kenosha, Wis., to take the city managership of the Fairmount and Virginia Theatres, Warner houses in Fairmont, West Va., he put over a well rounded-out campaign on "Doctor X."

Advance work included teaser one card trailers two weeks ahead and spotted between various units on the program; use of a talking trailer one week in advance; reverse slugs across bottom of all newspaper ads 12 days in advance; painting of 150 store windows two weeks in advance with big white letters spelling "Doctor X"; painting of ten prominent store windows, with luminous paint, which gave out a weird, green glow at night; use of two-sided cards in every other pane of entrance doors, with copy "Who? What? Doctor X Arrives Soon"; distribution of heralds in 2,000 packages sent out from chain store; full window display in chain stores; tie-up with big drug store for serving of "Doctor X Sundaes"; two radio announcements every day one week in advance; large nine-foot cutout display in lobby; two additional lobby cutouts and one 3x10 art banner in lobby.

The accompanying photo will convey a good idea of the lobby displays and also serve as evidence that Floyd tied-up with an 18-piece Kiltie Band for a no-cost bally in front of the theatre. In addition to ten per cent more newspaper space, extensive window tie-ups, etc., two leading restaurants were also induced to imprint menus with title of picture, theatre and playdates. Four 1,000 watt flood lights with green gelatine illuminated the theatre for a midnight preview.

Next time you hear about Floyd Morrow's work the scene of action will have shifted from Wisconsin to West Virginia, where we know he will continue to give a good account of himself. We and all of his fellow Club members wish him good luck with the new job and will hope for more news in the near future.

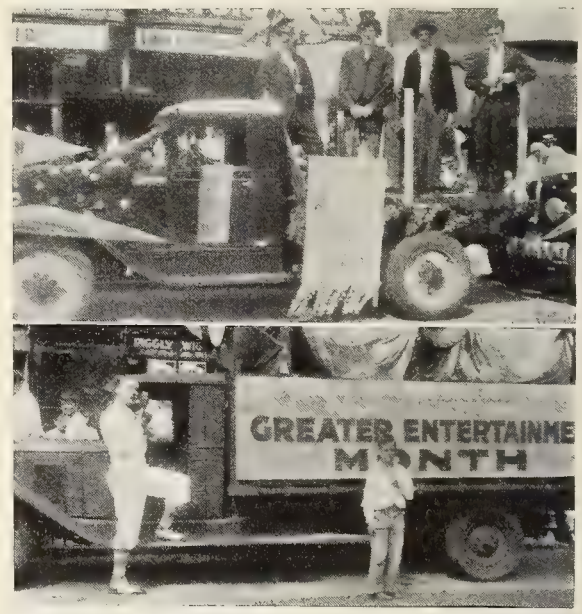
"I AM A FUGITIVE" CAMPAIGN BOOK

Backing up their own great faith in the box office possibilities of "I Am a Fugitive," Warner Bros.' publicity department just released one of the most complete press books ever compiled to help merchandise any one picture.

In addition to a 28-page section devoted to the usual functions of a press book, they have added a 16-page supplement advertising section. It is the supplement which attracted our attention particularly because it contains some of the finest ad material ever turned out for a picture.

We can only urge every theatre that will run this picture to get the complete press book immediately after your dates are set and go to work planning the sort of campaign that will show definite returns at the box office. You can be reasonably certain that your campaign will go over successfully aided and abetted by so fine a merchandising book as Stanley Shuford of Warners' home office has prepared for you.

NORTH SIDE MANAGERS OF ST. LOUIS CHAIN HELD A BIG PARADE



Managers in the district supervised by A. J. Poos, in charge of the North Side for the St. Louis Amusement Company, St. Louis, Mo., each entered an automobile float in a parade held to inaugurate "Greater Entertainment Month," according to advice from S. Setron, manager of the Washington Theatre, Granite City, a house in this group.

As readers may see from the accompanying photo, these floats were used to exploit certain pictures. The platform body of the truck used for "Horsefeathers" carried four made-up characters representing the Marx Brothers. F. Wagner, manager of the Maffitt, put this one over. The other portion of the photo shows Announcer Hoppe and a truck, equipped with "mike," which was used to plug in the "Month."

Other snap-shots at hand, while not lending to clear reproduction, convey an idea what the other boys in the district did on this occasion. We see that Setron was plugging "Congorilla" at the time and his float featured Martin Johnson, a gun bearer, camera-man and animals.

C. Groetke, manager of the Florissant, chose "Devil and the Deep" for his float feature and trimmed an amplified show-boat float with two fellows in Naval costume and another dressed as a devil.

R. Muehlman, manager of the Lindell, also secured a big platform truck and got in a plug of "War Correspondent" by mounting on the truck a Chinese ricksha, attended by a coolie and another man dressed as a war correspondent.

District Manager Poos, representing Northside Theatres, had a big float with seven radio entertainers to advertise the company, and an attractive roadster, trimmed with flowers and driven by a pretty girl, led the parade.

We're sorry all the snap-shots could not be used to illustrate the entire parade, but lack of sharpness in several prevented this. Next time maybe Setron will send us some better ones. St. Louis Amusement operates 17 houses out its way and we'll hope to hear a whole lot more about what the fellows on this circuit are doing. If all of them are not yet members of this Club, they're cordially invited to join—right now! Maybe we'll have to count upon Setron to stir them up, or, perhaps, act as correspondent for the entire northside contingent. What say, Setron?

REVIVING A DEAD INVESTMENT!

In nine out of every ten theatres you will find a perfectly fine and expensive organ going to ruin—instruments which originally cost you, or someone before you, anywhere from three to thirty thousand dollars and maybe more.

Some houses, we find, try to keep the organ in condition through an inexpensive maintenance service, but whether this is possible without using the organ occasionally, we doubt. The wind blowing through the various chests and pipes when being used is the best way to keep those chests and pipes from getting clogged up. What a maintenance man can do to overcome this slant when he don't play the organ for some period of time, we won't venture a guess at, unless he's earning some easy dough from a theatre manager who likes to be a sucker.

One good way to put that expensive investment back into use is to engage a combination assistant manager and organist who can be featured in your advertising and can deliver the type of organ specialties that will please your particular class of patronage. Why not try this idea out and see if it won't go over? We know of four exhibitors who started the gag and are still at it, and enthusiastic too.

No one can say what the future holds for the organs of thousands of theatres; but one thing is sure: if you let your organ go to the dogs, you will never forgive yourself for having thrown the value of that instrument into discard.

LOUIS LAMM ON HIS TOES WITH NEW JOB OVER IN ELYRIA, O.

Since Louis Lamm took over the helm of the Capitol Theatre, Elyria, Ohio, he not only instigated a movement to decide who was the best looking red-head in Lorain County, but has ingratiated himself with every mother-patron of his theatre.

A full page co-op ad here before our eyes shows that he went out among his newfound merchant and newspaper friends and promoted a nice lot of free space for himself by putting over a "Red Headed Woman Contest." Most all of you know the gag—all red-heads 16-23 years of age admitted free of charge and required to register and appear on stage to be judged. The cooperating merchants contributed awards for the occasion. Louis received a dandy break right in the top center portion of the page for his ad on the picture. We'd also like to mention that he added a little p. s. at the bottom of the ad to this effect: "We extend thanks to the merchants who so kindly co-operated with us during this contest. Warner Bros.' Capitol Theatre."

He made his hit with the Elyrian mothers by promoting from a local florist a bouquet of flowers for each who attended "Blessed Event," which was, of course, a most graceful and appropriate gesture on the part of showman Louis. He made another plug for this picture by announcing births of local babies over the house "mike" a week prior to opening of the picture.

Louis has only been out in Elyria about four weeks, at this writing, but it looks as though he already has a good, strong toehold in his newly adopted town. He'll soon be offering tough competition to his brother, Julius, who skippers the ace Uptown in Cleveland, and we'll pass along further word of his activities just as soon as we get the sign.

ROCKY MT. MANAGERS HELP CARVE JUICY WEST COAST MELON

Seventeen managers of the Rocky Mountain division of Fox-West Coast Theatres, over which "Rick" Ricketson presides, recently participated at Denver in the slicing of the big, juicy $10,000 melon provided by the company for honors in the 100% Drive inaugurated several weeks ago. Over $1,000 was divided at the meeting.

Those winning $100 each were: Ray Davis, Rialto theatre, Sterling, Colo.; Walter Smith, Oriental, Denver; A. J. Hamilton, Strand, Rawlins, Wyo.; J. G. Haney, Grand, Rocky Ford, Colo.; Harry N. Stone, Rialto, Butte, Mont., and E. C. O'Keefe, Fox theatre, Billings, Mont. The following received checks for $50 each: Chet Miller, Paramount theatre, Cheyenne, Wyo.; Ewart Boyd, Fox, Sidney, Neb.; C. A. Mulock, Rialto, Loveland, Colo.; Millard Gettier, Longmont, Longmont, Colo.; Charles Ernst, Kiva, Durango, Colo.; M. E. Berkheimer, Coronado, Las Vegas, N. M.; L. M. Harris, Egyptian, Delta, Colo., and F. P. Larsen, Paramount, Idaho Falls, Idaho.

Winners in two special weeks put on for managers in this division were won by Walter Smith of Denver, and Joe Nancy, Rocky Ford, Colo.

Charles P. Skouras was present, spoke to the managers and met each one personally and went over his problem with him.

BAMBERGER DID NICE WORK IN LEXINGTON; IS NOW IN HAMILTON

Before leaving the Kentucky Theatre, Lexington, Ky., to switch jobs with Henry "Bud" Somers, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, Herman C. Bamberger engineered some nice work in connection with a couple of recent attractions.

We are reproducing two set-ups of the display he made for "Blonde Captive" for reason that it served a dual purpose. One view shows how it was arranged for an advance display in the large outer lobby, particularly appropriate where a great deal of emptiness has to be filled, and the other will give readers a good slant on its adaptability as a frontal display during run of picture. Only a few changes were necessary to make the transfer. Grass matting, used last year as a covering for the orchestra pit, was stretched over a beaverboard frame to make a background. This front attracted a lot of attention and the picture opened to brisk trade.

Herman does not claim credit for any ingenuity concerning the Marx Brothers display shown in the other photo. He advises us that it was taken right out of a press book. You can see for yourselves that it was made for "Horsefeathers" and consisted of cutout figures of the four Marx's and a crazy looking cutout horse with a keg for its body. One of the figures astride the horse holds a sign reading, "We're On Our Way—Will Arrive Saturday." It is rated as a corking good display, that actually accounted for a lot of laughs and giggles from patrons.

If Miss Anna Bell Ward, well known showwoman of Lexington and assistant general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, should read the above she will probably be surprised to learn that she was more or less concerned with the fact that Herman got busy and sent this information along. It seems he firmly resolved that Miss Anna wasn't going to be the only live Round Table representative down their way and his competitive instinct immediately asserted itself when reading about some of her exploits.

He's on the new job now over in Hamilton, Ohio, and just as soon as things get straightened out for him we'll be looking for word of what's going on out there. Likewise, we hope "Bud" Somers will keep the Club informed about Publix activities down in Lexington. Although our records do not show that Somers is a Round Tabler, here's a cordial invitation to him to become one. Fill out the blank, "Bud," and send it in so that we can let your old Ohio friends know what you're doing with the new job.

WANTED: 1,000 DOLLARS!

Yes, Alvin Hammel Needed Thousand Iron Men Offered by Film Company, and Won 'Em

"I NEED a Thousand Dollars ($1,000)," announced Alvin Hammel, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Frankfort, Ky., upon reading that the United Artists Corp. would give this serious money to the theatre manager who made the biggest percentage increase over daily box office average during the showing of "Around the World in Eighty Minutes," and his campaign won out.

Basing his forthright statement on the theory that best results in exploitation and other stunts relating to the box office can be obtained through the medium of newspaper advertising, Hammel streamed his frank confession across the top of a page in the local daily. Underneath this unique head he explained what it was all about, adding that he had reduced admission rates and, at the same time, raised the standard of pictures while in charge and asked that patrons reciprocate by turning out en masse for the two-day run of the picture. Reprints were made of this ad and sent out on the theatre mailing list.

Flanking a centre display ad on the picture were boxed testimonials from the president of the Chamber of Commerce; the Superintendent of Schools; the Mayor of Frankfort; the Pastor of a local church, and a well known pro of the Frankfort golf club.

The Governor, Too

On the night prior to opening he prevailed upon the governor of Kentucky (Frankfort is his residence) to make a short talk from the stage. Other prominent city and state officials, including the Mayor, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and a well known local physician, were present and each lauded Hammel and told the audience it should, even if not for the sake of the manager, attend the theatre as a matter of local pride. Hearty applause greeted the conclusion of each speech.

Another stunt that materially helped swell attendance during the run was the holding of a preview for all teachers, all ministers and two members of the Younger Women's Club. Consequently schools and churches were contacted and the Women's Club attended the show as a body.

Reciprocity!!!

It will be seen that Hammel's campaign for increased attendance was based largely upon past efforts and a promise of shows of high standard for the future. His contacts with those prominent in civic life can also be credited with a goodly share in his successful campaign for the substantial award. So, Round Tablers, if any of you "Need a Thousand Dollars" and some generously inclined film company comes forward with an offer, it may be well to recall Hammel's efforts and act accordingly.

Just a few notes about this Thousand Dollar Round Tabler before closing: He was born in Buffalo, N. Y.; attended grammar school in Lexington, Ky.; enrolled later in the Augusta Military Academy, Ft. Defiance, Va.; is a graduate of U. of Ky., and Washington and Lee; took a fling at the men's clothing business with his father before turning showman; after acting as assistant manager for three months was promoted to manager of Class "B" house in Frankfort; after six months was promoted to manage Class "A", and, after a year, promoted to manage both houses in same city.

He considers his outstanding exploitation stunt the promotion of $1,000 in cash (he thinks in terms of $1,000, apparently) from the merchants of Frankfort for a give-away over a period of twenty weeks, giving in return some screen, window card and one-sheet advertising. For the past two months he has been working with Sid Grauman in California, whom he considers the greatest showman he ever met.

FRONT MADE BY TOM CLEARY FOR ZOMBIE WAS A REAL STOPPER

Even if we don't hear regularly from C. E. Duffey, of Consolidated Theatres, Limited, Montreal, Canada, concerning Tom Cleary's work at the Princess Theatre, Montreal, we'll have to liken these contributions to the Wow Bird (if you are familiar with the characteristics of this bird), for when we do hear from them the subject is generally a Wow!

Take a good look at the grand front Thomas engineered for "White Zombie," and if you all don't agree it's a cuckoo then our eyes have gone back on us. Cost a bit, to be sure, but when results are taken into consideration, it's nothing to get cold feet about. Lest the photo does not reproduce to full advantage, a false, turret-like top portion of a castle was built about the marquee, flooded at night time with a bank of blue lights that produced a weird effect. The seven "Zombie" characters standing at different points on the marquee were "live" and caused a lot of comment from passers-by below on the street. Note the compo-board, or whatever was used to fashion the house effect, was blocked off to resemble masonry, and the cutout letters reading "The House of the Living Dead."

A nice piece of work and once again we congratulate Tom Cleary for his showman-like ideas. We have a promise from C. E. Duffey that some articles on theatre management will be forthcoming at a later date and we will await these with much interest. In the meantime, good luck to both.

CAMPBELL AND DAVIS SEND IN EXCELLENT STUNT FOR A SERIAL

Here's a stunt to start off a serial, originated some time ago by H. E. Campbell, manager of the Nomar Theatre, Wichita, Kas., and recently revised and executed by his assistant manager, Claude Davis, in connection with "Airmail Mystery." "It's good for man, woman or child," says Claude.

The first step was to plug the serial with scene cuts in the newspaper and the next was to have some four hundred 11x14 cards printed with the following copy: "I'm On My Way to the Nomar Theatre to See the Greatest Air Thriller Ever Made—Air Mail Mystery." On one end of the card was printed, "Free Ticket to the Nomar, Saturday (date)." The cards were then taken to all parts of the city and given to youngsters, with express instructions that they carry them high in the air on their way to the theatre in return for the courtesy extended them by the theatre management.

Other kids that fell in line and the various gangs that converged from all neighborhoods were admitted for five cents, with the result that about 800 kids stormed the doors to see the first chapter. Out of 400 cards 386 were returned, and with the 200 adults who came to this matinee, attendance reached a total of 1,000.

At the time Davis sent in the above contribution to our Club the serial was in its fifth chapter and both juvenile and adult attendance was on the increase. He thinks this is a great gag to get a serial on its feet and wants to pass the word along to others, which we are most happy to do. Thanks to him for sending it in and we'll be on the lookout for other interesting show-selling tips from this team.

Silence from the North!

Despite all sorts of rumors, Morris Rosenthal maintains a most complete silence from the upper New York regions. In Morris' place this can be attributed to one of two reasons. He is either too darned busy to write or the bosses must be hounding him all over the lot.

We are not particularly concerned over the reason. But a wee little peep out of him would start the sun shining again around Central Park.

MORE CLUB CANDIDATES ELECTED!!!

ROBERT DUNNUCK

recently replaced George Bannan as manager of the Majestic Theatre, Grand Island, Neb., and at this writing he, also, is enrolled as a brand new member of our organization. George has gone over to Omaha, where he's skippering the State Theatre, another Publix house, and now it's up to Bob Dunnuck to let the Club know what's going on in showbusiness on Grand Island. We have a good, strong hunch he will do just that and will await with interest his next communication. He tells us he likes this department and we feel that the Club can count upon his full support.

is another assistant manager to climb aboard the band wagon. He helps Jack L. Johnson manage the Grand Theatre out in Mankato, Minn., and we've got Jack's O. K. right on Kenneth's application for membership that he's an energetic assistant. There's many an assistant who has found this department an aid toward climbing up the ladder of success and we hope Rebstock will also find it beneficial Give our best regards to Boss Johnson, Kenneth, and ask him to send us word of what's going on at the Grand. If he's too busy, get permission to help him out.

manages the Fox-Capitol Theatre out in Yakima, Wash., and a cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our Club. Unless we're very much mistaken we'll soon be getting a line on what Louis is doing to boost business for his theatre. He has the Mercy outfit to compete with out his way and we know he's not letting Inland get all the business. What it takes to accomplish this we'll be telling you just as soon as Louis finds enough time to shoot along a few words.

hails from out in Idaho Falls, Idaho, where he manages the Fox Theatre and we want him to know that his application is in and that he's now a full-fledged member of this outfit. He, also, has promised to lend his wholehearted support to this department and we'll be looking forward with much interest to future communications. Let the boys know what you are doing to boost trade, Bill, and the way to do that is to shoot your ideas in to Club headquarters.

is in charge of the Fox-Egyptian Theatre in Delta, Colo., and we're glad to record that he, too, is now a member of the Round Table Club. This department has received many a live showselling idea from Colorado showmen and we hope Lew will continue the high standard. Let us know what's taking place in advertising and exploitation at your house, Harris, so we can pass the information along to all your old and new-found friends, and, consequently, help everyone concerned.

is the skipper of the Fox-Strand Theatre 'way out in San Pedro, Calif., and we're also in receipt of his application for membership in the Round Table Club. He has found this department profitable and interesting in the past and now wishes to do his share to keep up the good work. The way to do that, Earl, is to regularly send in news of what you and the fellows at your house are doing to boost the good old box office. We'll do the rest from this end of the Table. Let's go!

JAMES LUNSFORD

has the job of helping C. A. Luke with the management of the Palace Theatre, Phenix City, Alabama, and this is the time to record that Lunsford has joined the ranks of the many assistant managers in this organization. He's on the way up the showbusiness ladder and it probably won't be long before he'll be catching hold of the next run and putting in a demand for his framed certificate. Step on it, Jim, for we'll be right on your heels until you get the job you're after. Please ask Manager Luke to send us word of what's going on in showbusiness down in his section of Alabam.

is the manager of the Cozy and Norton Theatres out in Norton, Kas., and we're sure that this new Round Tabler's name will be familiar to a great many of his fellow members. He sent along a neat little calendar with his application and we'll tell more about it in a future issue. The Club is mighty glad to have you as a member, Re Qua, and we hope you'll do your level best to help us keep up the good work. We know you keep on your toes in the game of selling shows, so let's hear about what you are doing these days. .

is the showman who helps Charlie Carroll put over all those live-wire stunts down at the Academy of Music, Skouras house on 14th street, New York City. He's another new member of this ever-increasing outfit and we're mighty glad to have the opportunity of acknowledging his application. An assistant manager's job at a house like the Academy ranks with the job of manager of many houses and we'll be looking for many a good show-selling tip from this newly elected Round Tabler. Let's hear from you, Beejay.

EUGENE GANTZ

is another assistant manager to join the ranks of the many assistants already enrolled in this organization. He is located down at the Strand Theatre in Philadelphia, where he helps our good friend Andy Anderson with the job of show-selling. Prior to taking his post at the Strand, where he has been for the past year, Eugene held down the assistant's job at the Uptown, another Philadelphia house. He's only 23 years of age and well on his way in showbusiness. We're going to ask him to convey our very best regards to his boss and find out just why this Club is not getting hot shownews from the Strand.

sends us word that he, also, wishes to line up with this large army of go-getting managers and we're taking this opportunity to let him know that his wish has been granted. Bob manages the Bellevue Theatre in Upper Montclair, New Jersey, a Ronheimer, Rapf and Ruden house, and we're mighty glad to have him with us. We sincerely hope he'll get the Club spirit pronto and do his bit toward contributing some show-selling tips for us to pass along the line. Thanks for the information on former manager Cooper, Bob, and we'll attempt to locate him down in Philly. Let's hear from you again.

is manager of the Fox-Judith Theatre in Lewiston, Mont., and we know his name will be familiar to many members of this organization. We also have his application at hand and have a decided hunch that John will do his best to keep this department the livest of its kind in showbusiness. Right off the bat he encloses a few samples of his work, of which we'll tell you more in a future issue. We can see at a glance that he stands in well with the newspaper boys out his way and that's a sign he's a knowing showman. His next communications will be awaited with interest.

manages the Bainville Theatre out in Bainville, Mont., and we're taking this opportunity to acknowledge his recent application for membership in this great army of showmen. Welcome to the Round Table, Lockrem, and now let's hear what you are doing for the cause of showbusiness. Your friends and fellow members in the ranks will be interested to learn what methods you are using to boost box office receipts, so shoot along some of your ideas.

is in charge of the Spanish Garden Theatre, Osceola, Wis., and he's another recruit for the ever-increasing ranks of this showman's army. We're glad to record your name on the Club roster, M.J., and hope you will do your share to help the good work along. What was that last stunt you used to make the cash register sing a merry melody? Send along some information so we can pass the good word along to your fellow Round Tablers.

is another owner-manager to join the ranks of the Round Table Club and we're happy to add his name to the ever-lengthening roster. He operates the New Patterson Theatre, 'way out in Patterson, Calif., where showmen are showmen, and unless we're much mistaken this department will soon be receiving some hot box office tips from this new member. Jot down a few gags you have been using, Dick, and we'll see that word is passed along.

FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL

Waring's Pennsylvanians
Detroit Michigan

This is a sparkling, bubbling round of merriment that should excite any audience. There is a college glee club impression of "It Was So Beautiful," which brings out, with lagging tempo, splendid group vocal quality. A comedy presentation of "How'm I Doin'" introduces the droll drummer with his hoarse basso voice. His nonsense shines in several spots. Ravel's "Bolero," arranged to feature solo bits, is brilliant. A game of dominoes, with illuminated pieces on a dark stage, is a clever novelty. A violin solo of a Rumanian gypsy air brings out the nimble fingers and deft bow of Johnny Richardson. A revival of "Where Ya' Workin', John" is very funny, with the drummer taking most of the honors again. "The Voice in the Old Village Choir" is presented in the manner of a cathedral ceremony, with a vocal interpolation of "Ave Maria" by Stewart Churchill.

Ted Lewis & Band
New York Paramount

A typical "Is Everybody Happy" opening by Ted and the band ushers in two solo dancers, Mildred Gaye and Doris Deane, followed by Lewis singing "Me and My Shadow," his shadow being no less than "Snowball" Whittier, this bit is a clever piece of business which clicks. Ted then pays a tribute to his timeworn high hat. Impersonating Simon Legree, he makes the Dixie Four sing and dance "Walkin' All Over God's Heb'n," the vocal especially effective. "Snowball" as the Peanut Vendor carts his wares across the stage as Lewis fills the hats of the audience with peanuts but not before showering the entire orchestra section with the shelled fruit, a highly amusing bit. Ted Lewis can bolster any box office.—H. P.

Jack Denny and His Waldorf-Astoria Orchestra
Baltimore Century

A good routine of numbers is presented, somewhat reminiscent of an old minstrel tempo, but with a modern touch which goes over well. It starts with a railroad melody which they did on their first railroad broadcast for the radio. "What Is This Thing Called Love," sung from the wings by Paul Small, who adds "Shanty in Old Shanty Town," wins big applause, encoring with "Say It Isn't So" and "Let's Turn Out the Lights and Go to Sleep." Next came Babe Mills in toe dancing followed by Jean Long singing in her own manner "We Just Couldn't Say Goodbye." A good rendition of "St. Louis Blues" closed this entertaining offering.

Ned LaRocca
San Francisco Golden Gate

This artist is master of the harp and offers a program of classical selections which pleases immensely, with a popular tune or two thrown in for good measure.

Many Changes in Coast Stage Acts

A flurry of major news stories affecting vaudeville in the San Francisco vicinity has occurred within the past week.

Joe Leo and Hank Goldenberg, emissaries of William Fox, are reported to have succeeded finally in obtaining the large Fox theatre, the 4,600-seat house which closed two weeks ago. The two plan to establish a policy of five acts of vaudeville in conjunction with second-runs at popular prices.

The El Capitan, the largest of the second-runs and practically a major Fox theatre because of its size and income, abandoned vaudeville last week and has become a grind house, changing programs twice a week. This is the first time that the house, which seats 3,100, has been without stage entertainment since its opening in June, 1929.

Sam Goldberg of Los Angeles is reported preparing to establish a circuit of burlesque houses on the Coast with units in Portland, Seattle, Sacramento, Oakland, San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego. The San Francisco house is slated to be the Tivoli, now dark. The Oakland house is said to be the Hippodrome which closed October 29 in preparation for the new policy.

Report is wildly current, but as yet unconfirmed, that stage entertainment is going out of both the Fox Warfield and RKO Golden Gate. The Capitol theatre with its policy of burlesque plus vaudeville and two feature pictures at a 30-cent top is reported doing satisfactory business.

Dramatic Teacher of Stars Dead

Georgia Brown, widely known dramatic teacher, is dead in Kansas City. Students she instructed who achieved fame on the stage and screen included Jeanne Eagels, Mabel Hite, Hale Hamilton, Tom Barry, Florence Oakley, Stasia Ledova, Eva Lang and many more. Mrs. Brown came from a professional family and made a name for herself in drama and vaudeville. In 1900 she came to Kansas City and formed a dramatic school.

RKO Coast Stage Unit Closes

The RKO Western Vaudeville Exchange, handling RKO private entertainment in the San Francisco district, has closed. The office booked RKO acts to clubs and outlying theatres, occasionally filling in acts for the two local RKO houses. It is understood that the Los Angeles office has received similar instructions.

DANCERS

Chilton and Thomas
New York Capitol

The boy and girl who appeared in Al Jolson's "Wonderbar" offer a short but snappy routine of dancing, the boy doing his famous soft-shoe dance on graduated stools followed by the latter in a kicking tap dance. They both finale with a tap charleston to a nice hand. —H. P.

Andrew and Louise Carr
Detroit Fisher

This is a clever dance team whose best number is a rhythmical attack on an imaginary bug on the stage. They creep up on the bug, slap at it with one foot and then go into a fast tap over his remains, and, as a final precaution, apply a Flit gun. They exit with a train imitation.

Dolinoff & Raya Sisters
New York Palace

This quartet of European dancers opens with a clever luminous novelty turn, followed by several hoop creations which please. An adagio bit is followed by a novel old-fashioned minuet for a well-rounded opener.—H. P.

Ryan and Ryan
Detroit Hollywood

This pair gets rhythm from tap dancing, hand clapping and banjo playing. The man does a clever dance on the rungs and seat of a kitchen chair. The girl's specialty is a Scotch impression tap dance.

ACROBATICS

The Willeys (3)
New York Astoria Triboro

The three Willeys, two men and a girl, offer acrobatics in a novel and interesting form. The act is a foreign importation, new to American audiences, with the performers doing their work in a capable manner. Contortion work by the girl and strong arm stuff by the men are their forte and the good applause at finish proved the audience's appreciation.—E. D.

Cab Calloway and Orchestra Feature in Broadway Church

To revive what he terms "the oldtime thrill of religion," Dr. Christian F. Reisner transplanted that sepia syncopator, Cab Calloway, and his Cotton Club orchestra from their accustomed Harlem hot-spot to the Broadway Temple Methodist Church last Sunday night. Cab directed his group in a number of negro spirituals and though he omitted "Minnie the Moocher," his program consisted of the wellknown low-down jazz as only Cab can do it.

K. K. Hanson press representative of Mill-Rochwell, Inc., is responsible for making the tieup.

ATTENTION EXHIBITORS BOOKING TALENT! This department aims to serve you in booking acts. We have on file the information on how to get in touch with any act reviewed. Write to Stage Attractions Department, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

NOVELTY

Sue Carol and Nick Stuart
New York Palace

Stuart tells a few gags which get over nicely and is joined by Sue, who gets a nice hand. The audience liked their informal chatter in the "hubby and wife" manner, after which Miss Carol sings "Breakaway," which she introduced in the "Movietone Follies" some time ago.—H. P.

Arthur and Morton Havel
Buffalo Hippodrome

Assisted by Helen Lockhart, Denise Dooley and Bud Williamson, this skit, "Hot Water," introduces knockabout comedy, singing and dancing in an act that has stronger continuity than is usual and is aided by a realistic shipboard background. The applause was generous.

Stetson
New York Roxy

The noted comic juggler who has just returned from Europe puts over his juggling in fine style. Stetson dresses in the height of fashion and does his work with high-hats, cane, a ball, and three cigar boxes. There is nothing of the low comedian about Stetson, though his work is done on the comic lines. Audience reaction is quite favorable.—E. D.

Jack and Jerry Ballard
Detroit Hollywood

This is a hodge-podge of nonsense, tumbling, dancing, skating and gagging. The introduction of a skunk in the middle of the act was sufficiently out of the ordinary to bring half the juvenile members of the audience to their feet. The girl offers very clever toe tapping on steps, and in a novel routine. The boy has a good line of acrobatics.

Lina Basquette
New York Palace

Miss Basquette, brimful of personality, leads an all-male band, dancing and clowning all over the stage. Lina's take-off on Garbo and her rhumba dance are sure-fire laughs while the football sequence proves the versatility of her boys. John Fiore ably sings "How Deep Is the Ocean," after which the act closes hot with "St. Louis Blues." Entertaining.—H. P.

Hill and Hoffman
Buffalo Hippodrome

Charlie and Llora offer an unusual musical and comedy skit in "Baby Grand Larceny." Hill, in nut costume, gets off some telling drolleries and has his audience all the way as he traces popular and other tunes to their sources and reveals much duplication. Miss Hoffman, after acting as foil, sings "Trees" in a voice of surprising volume and rich tone for great applause.

Arthur and Florence Lake
New York Palace

Several amusing bits flashed on the screen serve to introduce Arthur, who proceeds to clown with the pit orchestra. Florence then makes her appearance and her chatterbox bit is well received. A radio broadcast imitation, with Florence the announcer and Arthur as the crooner, closes a well-liked act.—H. P.

Mickey Feeley and Melvin Sisters
Brooklyn Gates

These three personable young girls in the second spot on the bill, offer plenty of novelty and entertainment. They open with a special harmony arrangement of "Robert E. Lee," followed by "If You Were Only Mine," the second chorus of which they do a good soft-shoe routine. The Scotch Melvin sisters next sing a special lyric chorus of "You're the One," which serves to introduce Miss Feeley, who appears in a change of costume and sings "If I Were Only Sure of You," with interpolations. The Melvin sisters, in eye-appealing Scottish regalia, follow with the specialty, a modernized version of "Annie Laurie," which they sing in syncopated style. For the grand finale, Miss Feeley, in identical costume as the sisters, enters beating a big bass drum as the Melvins do a dance routine and act as drum majors. The applause at the finish was tremendous and they encored with a novel dance routine, in which they wore a paper-mache head of "Betty Boop." Though this act hasn't a big name, it should be an entertaining feature of any bill.—E. D.

Edgar Bergen
New York Astoria Triboro

Bergen, assisted by the beauteous Vilma Wayne, is a ventriloquist who offers more to his act than is found in the average turn of this kind. Bergen, as a doctor, opens the act by finding a newsboy (a dummy) who is ill. He and his assistant take him to their operating room (full stage scene) and go through the motions of operating upon him. A lot of wise-cracking by the dummy draw laughs and the act as a whole proves to be highly entertaining.—E. D.

Yates and Lawley
New York Astoria Triboro

These two young men offer a turn of instrumental and singing numbers that met with favor. They open, Hal Yates at the piano, with a singing duet of a currently popular air, go into a few gags and then Yates offers a first-class piano rendition of a group of Fritz Kreisler's compositions which met with instant approval. Lawley does just as well with his vocal rendition of "Play Gypsy," which is used as the closing number. Applause was won by the encore number, a take-off of radio stars. with an accordion accompaniment by Yates and a vocal rendition, by both, of "Clouds Will Soon Roll By."—E. D.

Mme. Schumann-Heink at Roxy

Mme. Schumann-Heink, famed elderly opera singer, is appearing at the New York Roxy theatre for the week of November 11, Armistice Day. The singer returned from a trans-continental tour to be present. She recently celebrated the completion of 50 years on the stage.

Lupe Velez on Tour

Lupe Velez, who has completed a role in "Phantom Fame," for RKO Radio, is engaged in a personal appearance tour, appearing on the stage in Publix houses in Boston, Buffalo, New York and other cities. The tour will occupy three weeks.

SINGERS

Sophie Tucker
New York Paramount

Miss Tucker opens with her usual "Something to be Thankful For," a double-entendre number which clicks with an expectant audience. There's another type song about a wife who wishes to step out, and then Miss Tucker, in a depression skit, offers a role of good samaritan. For a finale "the last of the red-hot mammas" gets torrid with "Some of These Days."—H. P.

Tony Pagliacci
Detroit Fox

This youngster, scarcely into his teens, has the voice of an opera star. There is little to criticize in his renditions of "Vesti La Guibba," "A Sole Mio" and "Funiculi Funicula." He is billed as the coming Street Singer, and hasn't far to come.

Four Golden Blondes
Buffalo Hippodrome

One of the quartet tips the mitt on the whole act by remarking she was a brunette last week. They open with merciless razzing of standard radio acts and advertising blurbs; then they attempt melodramatic sob stuff in "Number Please" with less telling effect. The close harmony finish drew an exit salvo of clapping.

Ethel Waters
Brooklyn Paramount

The audience gave this dusky musical comedy star an ovation on her appearance and enthusiastically received her rendition of "Porgy." Accompanied by the Cecil Mack choir of 30 voices, with a most effective silhouette-making back-drop, Miss Waters scores with "St. Louis Blues."—H. P.

Four Albee Sisters
Detroit Fox

Here is the counterpart of the Boswell Sisters, with one extra for good measure. They sing, play piano, viol, violin and clarinet, and dance. Their vocal arrangement of "Voice in the Old Village Choir" is excellent. Their tap routine is not exceptional, but not bad, either.

Sally Darling
San Francisco President

The little miss makes a hit as soon as she appears on the stage, presenting a picture of loveliness, and the first impression is heightened when she sings. She has a beautiful voice and uses it well. One of her most delightful numbers is "The Night That Love Was Born."

Kay Fayre
Detroit Fox

Kay Fayre is Kate Smith's echo, but lacks many pounds of being her shadow. Although handicapped here by a severe cold, she wins hearty applause with the familiar "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain" and "The Song Is Ended."

Les Everson
Detroit Fisher

Everson is a typical musical comedy leading man. He adopts a very noble pose for the singing of "My Buddy" in the "Rookies" number.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

ORGAN SOLOS

Mr. and Mrs. Herbie Koch (Buffalo Buffalo) join in a warmly received organ interlude called "In China." Numbers popularly associated with China are played by the pair at the twin consoles. Both wear Chinese robes and the organs were cleverly decorated with Chinese script characters. A vocal obligato by an unseen soprano adds to the effectiveness of the offering.

BANKS KENNEDY (Stamford Palace) is again on hand with another entertaining organ novelty. This week the popular Banks offers "Samples of 1932" as the title to his presentation. As usual, the organ is beautifully decorated, with the title of the solo prominently displayed in silver flitter on top of the console. The opening number is a classical selection and is followed by a good rendition of "Music, Everywhere."

Kennedy then orally announces his "samples" and the audience joins lustily in singing them. They are: "Smile, Darn Ye, Smile" (a sample of sunshine), "Show Me the Way to Go Home" (a sample of what is in the celler) and "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here." For closing he offered a beautiful sample, "Moonlight and Roses." Lighting effects and the artistry of the organ console enhanced the program, which drew good applause.

BOB MACHAT (Brooklyn Madison) opened his solo with "Voice of RKO," and followed with a short and well spoken announcement through the "mike" about the fine spirit of the audience and about the solo. The solo itself was purely comedy, and was sold mainly through the use of oldtime comic cartoons, for which Bob chose appropriate songs fitting into the story, which he told as each scene was shown. The solo was cleverly "sold" and proved highly entertaining. After the story was told for a closing number, Bob had the entire audience singing "Just Couldn't Say Goodby."

EGON DOUGHERTY (New York Astoria Triboro) recently presented one of the shortest and snappiest organ solos since he has been here. He offered but four numbers, each of them well played, and all were sung lustily by the audience, who applauded his efforts after each number. The songs were: "Palm of Your Hand," "Love Me Tonight," "Mardi Gras" and "Couldn't Say Goodby." Dougherty went right through the solo without a stop, except for one clever gag and an acknowledgment of applause at the beginning and at the close.

DON BAKER (Staten Island Paramount) is continuing a new series of presentation organ solos, using the stage for the offerings of guest artists. This week's solo is built in the manner of a tabloid vaudeville bill opening with acrobats and closing with an ensemble flash act. Starting with three choruses, popular music of the day with the words projected on a scrim, the audience singing, the show goes into the vaudeville idea. Two acrobats are followed by a tenor singing "My Silent Love." Third is a tap dancer of unusual speed, followed by a silhouette shadowgraph of a golf lesson, in turn followed by a sister team singing over twin microphones. Next to closing is a fine toe dancer whose second chorus is done in ultra-violet effect in darkened house. Her dress is covered with radium paint. Finally comes an ensemble number, enhanced by a whirling black and white effect from the projection booth. The entire presentation makes use of black and white contrasts without use of other color.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Mme. Schumann-Heink, who has been touring the country for Fanchon and Marco, is featured this week at the Roxy. Her appearance at the "Cathedral" commemorates her fiftieth year on the stage and Frank Cambria has made special arrangements to present her in an appropriate setting for her Golden Jubilee. . . . Recently she told me: "I will go on singing until death comes, and I am ready for it any second." . . . No wonder they call her "The Grand Old Lady of American Opera."

In the last issue of BETTER THEATRES (October 22) in the story, "The Organ Solo as an Interlude," by the well-known Ted Crawford, it was stated erroneously that he was in Albuquerque, New Mexico. . . . Ted for the past year has been at the Publix-Orpheum theatre, Phoenix, Arizona, and he's still there. Furthermore, and according to word from out that-a-way, his popularity is increasing and he'll be there for a long time. . . .

Bob Hamilton and Rosa Rio, over the river at the Brooklyn Fox, have split up their shifts at the organ. Rosa is playing the morning concerts and accompanying Sam Jack Kaufman in the overtures, while Bob is doing three or four solos a day. . . . Johnny Gart, music director at Loew's Gates, Brooklyn, has just composed a darned good instrumental number called "Chewin' the Rag." . . . Mills Music has accepted it and is pushing publication. . . . Saw Harriet Lee (without her leaders) gadding around Central Park the other day in a keen little car. . . . Warren Yates, organist at the Fabian, Paterson, is still broadcasting over WODA, Thursdays. . . . Bob Ross, former organist and formerly arranger for Rudy Vallee, is now doing arranging for many acts, and has an office in the Radio Recording Studio, Brill Bldg. . . .

OVERTURES

DAVID ROSS (New York Roxy) capably directs this huge orchestra in an overture of outstanding quality. This week Mr. Ross has compiled "A Tribute to Chopin," with the overture composed of excerpts from the most exquisite compositions of this immortal composer. A balanced overture, different instruments were perfectly blended to make a perfect presentation. David Ross' fine showmanship at the close of the overture always gains the orchestra extra applause.

FRED SCHMITT (Buffalo Buffalo), marking his second week in this house, took the Shea's Buffalo symphony through an arrangement made by himself of the favorite compositions of Rudolf Friml, of whom he spoke as Victor Herbert's popular successor. "The Three Musketeers," "Indian Love Call" and "Rose Marie" from the operetta of that name and the "Song of the Vagabonds" from "The Vagabond King" were introduced to good applause. Well blended in transition, the playing was enhanced by greater attention to the strings than previous conductors at this house have used, and a welcome muting of the brasses.

CHARLEY PAUL (New York Jamaica Valencia) and his orchestra offered a high-class compilation of works of the famous composer, Tschaikowsky. The overture was entitled "Tschaikowsky's Memories." It was beautifully rendered, but the audience didn't seem able to appreciate it. Fortunately, the finale of the "1812" overture (which everyone has heard) was used for closing and this, together with Paul's pleasing personality, saved it and gained them a good reception.

JACK SPRIGG (Cincinnati Albee) and his boys demonstrated what they can do when they are figuratively "in a spot." Due to a last-minute change, they present an unrehearsed overture consisting of a medley of oldtime favorites such as "Kiss Me Again," "Blue Danube" and similar selections hastily recruited under the circumstances. Despite the fact that most of the numbers had been used before, they appear to have lost none of their appeal through repetition, especially when done the Sprigg way. Billy Leonard—and she's now a permanent fixture with the organization—sang "Let's Put Out the Lights and Go to Sleep." Both the orchestra and Miss Leonard received vociferous applause, and this now has become the rule.

HENRY FRANKEL (New York Astoria Triboro) directed the orchestra in a snappily played overture of Irish compositions. This is the third of a series of musical novelties of foreign countries and is offered just before the stage presentation. The overture was composed of special arrangements and was compiled in a well-balanced manner. The house for the past two months has not had overtures, and now, under the capable leadership of Henry Frankel, the orchestra is enjoying a renewed popularity.

LOU SCHRADER (Baltimore Hippodrome) offered a novelty overture called "Faust in Rhythmic Mood," which was done with climactic effect brought up at the finale by two trumpets and trombones riding and playing in spot. It won good applause.

LOU FORBES (Detroit Michigan) presents a pleasing arrangement of "Say It Isn't So," "Please" and "Let's Put Out the Light and Go to Sleep."

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

A lady whose fair attitude toward the industry and willingness to help worthwhile pictures get the break they deserve was singularly honored this week when Mrs. R. M. McClure was named chairman of the motion picture committee of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, succeeding Frances Diehl of New York. Mrs. McClure is the organizer and president of the Better Films Council of Chicago and Cook county and was formerly motion picture chairman of the Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs and a past director of that organization.

George Taif, formerly with Vitaphone, has joined the United Artists sales staff, succeeding Morris Hellman, who resigned. Incidentally, it should be explained, a switch in Mr. Hellman's plans finds him ensconsed behind a desk in the office of B. N. Judell instead of Capitol Film Corporation.

Frank McConnell, who produces serials for RKO, and Jack DeWaal of the company's home office, were visitors at the local exchange.

Nat Wolf, Warner district manager, and Sid Dannenberg found many acquaintances on their visit to town.

Charles Reagan, who succeeded Neil Agnew as Chicago District manager for Publix, has taken up his new duties. Mr. Agnew spent a week in the city before taking up his larger work as western divisional manager for Publix.

Henry Herbel announced that Universal's "Okay America," which the censors had frowned upon, has been given an okay.

Ludwig Sussman of the Adelphi theatre was guest of honor at a testimonial dinner given by the Rogers Park-Clark Street Business Men's Association in recognition of his efforts in relieving the distress of needy families in his community.

HOLQUIST

Wide Field for Cambria at Roxy

Frank Cambria, who was recently designated as managing director of the Roxy theatre in New York, has seen in his new post a more fertile field for that particular type of artistic conception which drew him to the motion picture theatre, following early training in scenic design under Ernest Gros.

After work with a Rochester stock company, where he also played minor roles, Mr. Cambria retired to devote himself to mural painting and portraiture. Later he became affiliated with the B. S. Moss-Famous Players-Lasky organization. In 1918 he superintended the decoration and stage attractions at the Riviera in Chicago, important unit in the Balaban and Katz circuit. His success there led to his appointment in charge of art and stage productions for the entire circuit. He is credited with being the first to decorate a motion picture theatre with paintings and sculpture.

A similar post with the Publix Theatres followed for Mr. Cambria, and the subsequent appointment to his present position, where he supervises the stage presentations, tableaux, dances, choral productions and the like with an acknowledged impressive effectiveness.

Academy Group Honors Army Officer on Coast for Study

Captain M. E. Gillette of the United States Army Signal Corps was honor guest at a luncheon last week given by the members of the Academy of the Motion Picture Arts and Sciences on the Coast who are also members of the Reserve Officers. Captain Gillette is beginning an eight months' course in the production of sound motion pictures. Fred Niblo, secretary of the Academy, presided at the luncheon.

An arrangement between the Academy and the War Department provides for the training of a selected group of officers of the Signal Corps in the production of films particularly for training purposes. At the luncheon were Jesse Lasky, Cecil B. de Mille, Nathan Levinson, Lester Cowan, Academy executive secretary, and others.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Answer to Question No. 142

Bluebook School Question No. 142 was: "(A) How many poles has an electric generator? How many poles has the power source of a three-wire system? (B) When work is performed by electric current something must of course be consumed. What is it? (C) Can electricity be either seen or felt? Has it weight? (D) You have told us what is consumed when electricity performs work. Give us illustration, using something other than electricity, illustrating the fact that volume (amperage) is not consumed."

This one brought some excellent and some rather weird answers. Here are those who have come through acceptably:

S. Evans and C. Rau, Lester Borst, "Bill" Doe, S. G. Williams, G. E. Doe, J. Wentworth, B. Diglah, and O. Garling, D. Buckstein and T. Howard, T. Van Vaulkenburg, H. B. Coates, W. A. Andres, H. Edwards, T. McGurder, S. Kay, S. G. Goss and P. Lambert, H. D. Schofield, B. R. Compton and L. Peterson, Dan Holler and B. Eilers, M. McGuire, J. L. Major and D. B. Bates, G. Farmann and T. H. Heins, B. M. May, D. Little and J. Rathburn, F. B. Gamble, N. Granby, H. D. Cylor and H. L. Davis, M. H. Penderly, L. M. and R. Dwight, H. M. Evans, L. Andrews, M. S. O'Brien, D. L. Simmons, A. Breston and G. Lombard, C. L. Lilly and T. G. Sawyer, F. D. Prinde and T. Gaitsley, H. M. Gerger, G. Deckson and L. Cranlo, M. L. Tomlinson, R. Singleton, P. T. Garling, A. Bailey, H. L. Harvey, T. Torr and P. L. Davis, L. D. Solomon, P. J. Cermak, L. T. Foley and A. Jones, J. R. Carter, P. O'Brien, N. T. Potter and K. H. Steele, B. E. Danning, L. S. Marksley, A. Ilks, B. T. Sampson, D. Golding, S. Chestney and T. Lavery, F. Franks, J. Ahernson, K. L. Knight, D. Donahue and L. Peterson, J. Daniels, F. Ferguson, D. M. Sykes, L. C. Cummings, J. L. Richards and T. B. Cudmore.

I think we will listen to S. G. Williamson on Section A. He says:

"An electric generator, regardless of kind, has two poles; namely, a negative and a positive. The power source of a three-wire system is primarily two generators connected in series. Two wires are attached to the two outer poles of the combination, one negative and one positive, of course. A third wire attaches to the connection between the other poles, the polarity of this center wire, called the 'neutral,' being positive to one and negative to the other outside pole. The power source of the three-wire system therefore really has four poles, since either generator or any part of the output of either generator may be used separately, insofar as concerns the other generator."

NEW ADDRESS OF F. H. RICHARDSON

All correspondence concerning the Bluebook School should be addressed, until further notice as follows:

F. H. Richardson,
No. 3 Tudor Lane,
Scarsdale, N. Y.

N. Granby also has made a good, correct and brief answer. He says:

"A three-wire power source has only two poles when considered as supplying a perfectly balanced three-wire distributing system. However, if the system be not perfectly balanced, as is practically always the case, it has four poles. However, balanced or not, the four poles are of course always there, and instantly ready for use at will."

Brother Williams answered Section B very well, indeed, as follows:

"Pressure or voltage, not current (amperage) is consumed in the performance of work. Proof of this may be obtained by the application of Ohm's law. For instance, consider a circuit containing two resistances connected in series. One of them is a five-ohm and the other a 15-ohm resistance. Pass a current at 100 volts initial pressure through them and measure with a reliable voltmeter. It will be found that the voltage across the five-ohm reads only 25, whereas, across the 15-ohm it is 75. The volume or amperage will be found the same as in other parts of the circuit; namely, five amperes. This proves that it is voltage and not amperage that is consumed in the production of work by electricity."

You chaps all take a slant at this answer to Section C, made by W. A. Andrus, an Oklahoman, who I sincerely trust will come into the "School" and stick.

"Can electricity be either seen or felt?

"First, we cannot cut away part of an electric wire and see the current (electricity) flowing therein, as we might do in the case of water by cutting the upper portion of the pipe to see the water flow in the lower portion, or, if under pressure, squirt out of the opening.

"When we look at an electric arc we see the burning gases, which are a result of electricity. Our present chemical theory of matter claims that all substances are composed of atoms, which in turn are composed of minute particles of electricity, protons and electrons—positive and negative charges, respectively. If this theory be correct, we are constantly looking at electricity; that rewind bench, that chair or those two projectors are in reality just big piles of electricity, for they, too, are composed of atoms which contain many positive and negative charges. In this new light the oldtimer is right when he looks at the electricity flowing across the arc, for that hot gas is just chockful of electricity.

"Whether or not electricity can be felt depends upon the frequency of the current. There are devices which produce a current of such frequency that our sense of feeling is unable to detect it. A form of the Tesla coil is an example of this high frequency. However, I prefer the old contention that, generally speaking, electricity can be felt. Do we not get shocked occasionally while we are a bit careless? And then again, when we take hold of anything we are feeling electricity, for is it not, in the final analysis, composed of positive and negative charges of electricity?

"Yes, electricity has weight. We say electric current is the flow of electrons. Very true it is that the weight of an electron is dependent upon its speed. However, 8.9 by 10-28 grams is the value usually given for the weight of an electron."

Concerning Section D, G. E. Doe says:

"Steam or water afford the best means for visible analogous action by means of which the eye may see that volume is not consumed. Of the two, water is perhaps the best. If it be confined in a glass tank and pipes, under pressure with a glass motor and the water mixed with some visible particles of matter, and were pressure gauges fixed at proper points, we would be able to watch the water actually pass through the pipes and motor in undiminished quantity or volume, and at the same time be able to, by consulting the pressure gauges, observe the pressure dissipated in the work of operating the motor. Really, however, only the pressure gauges are necessary, since we could exhaust the water from the motor into the open air. However, such illustrations only have value in teaching the novice the rudiments of electrical action."

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

THE OLD ERA WENT OUT WHEN THIS FILM CAME IN!

HERE are some of the contributions which Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative has made to the motion picture industry: greater artistic opportunities for the cameraman... adaptability to any kind of light... lowered lighting costs on the lot and in the studio... lessened strain for director and actor... greater latitude for the laboratory... better prints for the exhibitor... All along the line there have been changes in procedure and improvement in results. In fact, the old motion picture era definitely went out when this film came in. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. IF I HAD A MILLION

"ONE OF THE BEST PICTURES OF THIS OR ANY YEAR!"

'IF I HAD A MILLION' TRIUMPH FOR EVERYONE CONCERNED

Brilliantly Acted, Written, Directed

"IF I HAD A MILLION"
Paramount

Directors: Ernst Lubitsch, Norman Taurog, Stepnen Roberts, Norman McLeod, James Cruze, William A. Seiter, H. Bruce Humberstone.

Story by.....Robert D. Andrews

Cast: Gary Cooper, Wynne Gibson, George Raft, Charles Laughton, Richard Bennett, Jack Oakie, Francis Dee, Charlie Ruggles, Alison Skipworth, W. C. Fields, Mary Boland, Roscoe Karns, May Robson, Gene Raymond, Lucien Littlefield.

Paramount's "If I Had a Million" ranks, in our opinion, as one of the best pictures of this or any year. The picture has everything—EVERYTHING that spells entertainment. Brilliantly directed in its every episode, brilliantly acted by its imposing list of players, perfectly balanced with comedy, drama and stark tragedy, the film is a thrill and a treat for any audience—high or low-brow variety.

Mr. Exhibitor, if you want to give your paying customers something new in film fare—give them "If I Had A Million." You're not taking any chances with a novelty such as this, because it's not that kind of a novelty. It's brand-new in idea, in treatment, and unique in its consistent perfection, but the human, ironical, pitiful and hilariously funny stories it tells always have and always will bring the kind of response at your box-office that even in these times should reap a golden harvest.

We cannot go into details on the picture's story content,—the entire thing is episodic. Some episodes are very brief—others long—and each shows the effect that a sudden million-dollar bequest has upon its entirely unexpectant recipients. Among those who do or do not benefit by the whim of a dying Croesus are a middle-class china salesman, a streetwalker, a forger, a marine, a lad on his way to the electric chair, a bookkeeper and the inhabitant of an old ladies' home—but any attempt to divulge the excellence, the penetrating and amusing psychology with which all this is accomplished, would be inadequate.

Never, that we can remember, has such a list of directorial, writing and acting talent been assembled for one picture—and each has done great work. The names are too numerous to mention. We make a critical bow to all.

The cast is something for any theatre owner to scream with joy about; just take a look and haul out the banners. Every actor in the cast is so excellent in his role, that it is impossible to distribute credits. Outstanding were May Robson, Richard Bennett, George Raft, Gene Raymond and Alison Skipworth—but all were swell.

The camera work and technical work throughout are worth mentioning, as is the fact that never does the picture resort to any "cheap tricks" for the sake of emotional reaction. Each episode is gripping, startling or funny in turn, but they have been patched together smoothly and with no attempt to jump suddenly from laughs to tears.

Producers, writers, directors and cast of "If I Had A Million" are to be congratulated for a million-dollar piece of entertainment.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 109, No. 8 November 19, 1932

IN BEHALF OF FAILURE

THE passing notion comes this glum November afternoon atop a windswept cliff on Broadway, that it might be wholesome if the occasional motion picture were granted the right to fail without regrets and recriminations, without hysteria of sales effort at resuscitation, without condemnations. Every seedling in the forest cannot become a tree, and we know perfectly well that every picture cannot be a box office champion. Ineffective pictures are violently cursed and violently sold. They are not that important.

Every now and then a highly successful picture appears to "happen," rather than to have been preconceived. The trade has a word for them, "sleepers." "Bring 'Em Back Alive" was a sleeper. No one knew it was loaded. Universal's "Air Mail" appears to be another. It would seem that this is really the way that healthy success ought to come to the screen most of the time. Self-proclaimed design to proceed to fabricate and deliver a product of genius and overwhelming box office appeal, while a common commercial proceeding, is none the less subject to the same laws of consequence as other windy bragging. As every showman knows, no picture is really great until after it is made and played.

The motion picture industry should be empowered to produce many more failures, which is an inverted way of suggesting that if production could be made more available to creative persons and organizations at costs related to the gross intake of the industry, real, natural, profitable successes could be much more frequent.

No one man, no one corporation, and no single conscious endeavor in that direction can avail. But there is a trend, automatic, natural and inevitable. The only thing that can be done about it is to delay progress by being too stubbornly the attorney for the status quo.

NOCTURNE SVENSK

THE United Press cables have it that The Garbo is off to seek solitude atop a mountain in remote Majorca, far from tourists, reporters and plumbing. It's just her luck to again make a story by electing to move in practically next door to that romantically historic Valldemosa where Madame Sand went a-cooing with Frederic Chopin!

The esteemed Mr. M. A. Lightman, according to Film Daily, foresees that "in less than three years" sixty per cent of all film rentals will come from "between 50 and 60 outstanding pictures each year." About the year of 1895 Thomas A. Edison's West Orange studio declined to make any more pictures because everybody had not yet seen the ten already produced.

WHY ANY?

CHIPPER little Motion Picture Daily dashes in with the news that "a major clause in the new deal . . . provides that no distributor may compel any exhibitor to take more than three reels of short subjects, including newsreels, with any one feature, and not more than a reel and a half with each feature where the exhibitor operates on a dual bill policy." That, gentlemen, explains most of what is the matter with the newsreel and short business. In the United States we have a law against the forced feeding of poultry to produce Strassburg livers for paté de fois gras.

WHOSE JOB IS IT?

WRITING in the Knickerbocker Press up at Albany, Mr. William H. Haskell appears to feel editorially that the motion picture producers are "conducting a drive to sell the public dismal, gloomy stories at the wrong time." He cites how Elsie Janis and others went overseas in a great emergency to cheer up the boys in the trenches. Somebody is always thinking of a job for the motion picture to do. Suppose Mr. Haskell and his contemporaries of the daily press take on the job of filling the world with sunshine for a while.

CALLING NAMES

THE autumn meeting of the National Academy of Sciences at Ann Arbor has just been thrilled by seeing motion pictures of the remote astronomic elsewhere made by a new motion picture telescopic device for following the stars called the Spectroheliokinematograph. Hollywood has had such a device for following the stars for a couple of years, but we call it a "zoom lens." It's simpler that way and works just as well. Speaking of nomenclature reminds us that one of the ancestors of the modern camera was named the Zoopraxinographoscope, meaning by that a device to picture animals in motion. It still is.

Tidings come from Toronto that the government up there has ruled that the British national anthem must be played at all performances. And we used to say things about Prussia and the goosestep!

"We are combing the field for new writers," says a production executive under the pressure of an interview. The field has been combed long enough. What it needs now is a shampoo.

Militant little Cuba has decreed that hereafter drugstores shall deal exclusively in drugs. This is as radical as the present trend of the motion picture theatre away from lotteries and hardware toward entertainment.

a note on
THE FUTURE OF THE MOTION PICTURE

By DUDLEY MURPHY

Economy an aid to art? So Mr. Murphy thinks, and out of the retrenchments of Hollywood he envisions a movement toward a finer photoplay at lower production costs

HOLLYWOOD, like any other industry, is beset by the depressing state of business, but I view this situation with more hope than sorrow. Although this may sound paradoxical, it is none the less true that the sudden stoppage of inexhaustible sums may well prove to be the final salvation of the motion picture.

No intelligent observer of things cinematic will truly grieve over the passing of the "golden day" of Hollywood. The endless streams of money did more harm than good. The director is now beginning to realize that without the ceaseless outpouring of money to grease the way, effects will have to be secured by careful study, hard work and deliberate thought.

The director further realizes that the proper use of the imagination with which to make a small budget look like a wealth of production, is making him the man very much in demand. It is thus inevitable that the lessening of the direct influences of money and the corresponding increase in the effort of taste, imagination and technical study will produce the better picture.

I personally learned my lesson as early as 1920, when in Paris I directed an abstract cinematic study called "Ballet Mechanique." It depended heavily upon the effects of montage and other technical innovations. It still remains the least expensive picture I ever made. Yet it is used by Eisenstein in his Sorbonne lectures, and was chosen by the International Congress of Theatre Arts in Vienna to demonstrate production value. I merely cite this picture as an instance of what can be done when a director, because of a limited sum of money, is forced to depend upon his technical knowledge and intelligent planning.

Because of this trend, then, the ingenuity and resourcefulness of the director is bound to grow. If there is no money with which to obtain a result, that result will have to be fashioned out of the materials on hand. It will also lead to a closer study of the tools within his command. A picture will come to depend upon the proper use of the camera, which counts not upon lavish sets, beautiful ladies or boundless millions, but upon plumbing the possibilities of that instrument.

I therefore predict that the time is not far off when a picture made for $100,000, or less, will be exhibited in a limited number of theatres that will possess a clientele of taste and discrimination. Actors and writers and directors will work on a co-operative basis—there is already a marked feeling for that in Hollywood—drawing their pay from the earnings of the picture and thus keeping costs at a minimum.

When all this comes to pass, then the critics and the public at large will see the emergence of "the movies" as an independent medium of expression. I doubt whether the motion picture will free itself all at once from its thralldom to the novel and the stage—two art forms, incidentally, that have nothing in common with the cinema—but it will lean more and more upon its own resources as directors come to a better understanding of those tools that are exclusively of the cinema.

DUDLEY MURPHY
Director
RKO Radio

Mr. Murphy became interested in the cinema while assistant dramatic editor of the Los Angeles Evening Express in 1920. He studied cinematography and made a series of one-reel pictures. Following similar activities in New York, he went to Paris, where he produced "Ballet Mechanique." Returning to Hollywood, he was engaged by MGM to return immediately to Europe to assist Rex Ingram in the production of "Mare Nostrum." On his return to America, he wrote his first original—perhaps inspired by the effects of his absence, since the title was "Skyscraper"—directing it for Pathe. Prior to becoming allied with RKO Radio, Mr. Murphy was on the directorial staff of Paramount. He was educated at Milton Academy and Massachusetts Tech.

KENT PLAN LAID BEFORE INDUSTRY; CONFEREES ADOPT FINAL PROGRAM

Distributors Given Until November 19 to Approve or Reject Plan; Exhibitors Act at Chicago Nov. 28 and New York Dec. 1

[Text of optional contract on page 23]

Sidney R. Kent's proposals for reforming trade practices to restore harmony in the industry emerged last Saturday out of conferences with exhibitors as a definite plan, ready for approval by distributors and theatre owners. The managements of all distributing companies were immediately apprised of details and were given until November 19 to approve or reject the program, which has four major parts:

National appeal board for adjustment of important disputes.

Uniform exhibition contracts.

Elimination of the practice of forcing sale of short subjects with features.

Committee on arrangements for carrying the proposals into effect.

Final acceptance rests with exhibitors who are preparing to take action at mass meetings in Chicago November 28 and in New York December 1.

The agreement would bind all parties for three years, effective January 1, although it would not become operative generally until the beginning of the 1933-34 sales season in May. However, existing contracts may be rewritten on the new form after January 1. The national appeal board may be in operation before that time.

The agreement, of which the optional uniform contract is a part, is offered in the following form:

National Appeal Board

All disputes between exhibitors and distributors, and between exhibitors, involving or arising out of any claim that protection is unreasonable in length or area, that pictures have been overbought, or claims relating thereto, other than disputes or controversies arising out of any license agreement between a distributor and an exhibitor, shall be considered and resolved, if possible, by the claimant and those against whom such claim is asserted, or their representatives, in the territory wherein such claim arises, under such procedure as may be hereafter agreed upon.

Representatives of the independent exhibitors and the circuit theatres in each exchange territory shall meet as soon as possible, and not later than January 1, 1933, to devise methods and means for giving effect to the foregoing declaration of industry policy.

All such disputes which cannot be settled in any such territory to the satisfaction of all parties concerned, may be carried to the National Appeal Board which shall sit in New York at least once a year or oftener if required and which shall be constituted as follows:

(a) Two representatives of the distributor.

(b) Two representatives of the circuit theatres.

(c) Four representatives of the independent exhibitors.

In case the dispute arises in what is known as Allied territory, the representatives of the independent exhibitors shall be designated by the Allied States Association.

In case the dispute arises in what is known as MPTOA territory, the representatives of the independent exhibitors shall be designated by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

In case the dispute arises in socalled neutral territory, or in territory in which there is both an Allied and an MPTOA unit, the independent exhibitor or exhibitors parties to the dispute shall have the right to choose the independent representatives from the panels designated by Allied and MPTOA respectively.

In the submission of such disputes to such National Appeal Board every effort shall be made to constitute such submission a legal and binding arbitration, so far as the law will permit; and the agreement of the parties to accept the decision of the board as a binding award shall be a condition precedent to the right of any disputant to invoke its jurisdiction.

Each to Designate Four

Allied and MPTOA shall each designate a panel of four representatives, with a suitable number of alternates, who will be willing and able to serve on said board whenever their services may be required. The distributor and circuit representatives shall be designated in whatever manner their principals may determine.

A member of such board, before taking his seat, shall subscribe to an obligation, in a form to be agreed upon, to do full justice in every case on the facts presented, regardless of former associations, friendships or declarations.

The board in every case shall have and consider all relevant facts relating to the dispute. For example, in disputes growing out of protection, the size and location of the theatres involved, their admission prices and operating policy, the feature of the program emphasized (whether pictures or vaudeville), the film rentals paid, the receipts, advertising, type of neighborhood and patrons, and all other circumstances bearing on the competitive situation and the extent to which they can or do draw patronage one from another. The board, however, shall have the right to exclude all incompetent and irrelevant evidence having no bearing on the issues and tending to delay.

Any distributor and/or circuit theatre, party to a dispute coming before the board, shall have the right, for reasons stated, to challenge not more than two of the representatives of the independent exhibitors, whereupon one distributor and one circuit representative will be automatically dropped, thus reducing the membership of the board from eight to four.

In like manner, any independent exhibitor, party to a dispute, may have the right to challenge, for reasons stated, not more than one distributor and/or circuit representative, whereupon two independent representatives, whereautomatically dropped, reducing the membership of the board from eight to four.

A distributor disputant may in like manner challenge a circuit representative, or a circuit disputant may challenge a distributor representative, for reasons stated, with the consequent dropping of two independent representatives and the reduction of the board to four.

The parties to any dispute may agree in advance of the hearing of their case that the board shall consist of four instead of eight members.

In all cases where the board is reduced from eight to four, as herein provided, the representatives to be dropped shall be determined by lot.

In case the board is evenly divided in any case, it will be necessary to call in a ninth or fifth member, as the case may be, and such odd member shall be the unanimous choice of the representatives sitting in the particular case. Failing unanimous agreement on such odd member, the same shall, upon the request of the board, be designated by the Governor of the State of New York, or other official or agency unanimously agreed upon.

The proceedings of the board shall be as direct and informal as is compatible with the thorough discharge of its duties, and every effort shall be made to expedite business and avoid delay.

Uniform Exhibition Contract

That your company will use, if and when requested by any exhibitor, the form of license agreement marked "Standard License Agreement" (published in full in this issue, starting on page 23.—Ed) to license the exhibition of motion pictures and that one or more of the clauses designated as "optional" in said form of license agreement may be printed or written in the schedule as may be necessary to conform with your individual business policies and no others.

To provide against the forcing of short subjects with features in excess of the amounts required by the exhibitors in the operation of their theatres, the distributors will not offer to the exhibitors more than three reels of short subjects (including news reels) with each feature picture delivered; and no exhibitor shall he required directly or indirectly to buy, lease or accept short subjects (including news reels) in a higher ratio than that provided herein in order to obtain feature pictures.

In all cases in which the exhibitor has a double feature policy (that is, shows two or more feature pictures on a single program) he shall not be offered or required to take more than one and one-half reels of short subjects (including news reels) with each feature picture. It is expressly provided, however, that one series of twelve two-reelers may be counted as twelve single reels.

The subcommittee of the Joint Committee of Allied and MPTOA, with a like number of representatives of distributors and circuits subscribing to these proposals, shall act as a Committee of Arrangements for carrying these proposals into effect and to provide for the necessary expenses of the Board.

The new uniform contract, which will be offered as an alternative form, provides for a method of voluntary arbitration and increased cancellation privileges. The contract as a whole is basically the same as existing agreements, except that it standardizes various terms offered by the different distributors. The agreement includes several clauses which are optional with the distributor, to be used according to individual corporate sales policies.

The plan does not, as had been anticipated, provide for a substitute for exclusive runs in the form of flexible admission policies on certain pictures. Nor does it mention the proposed reorganization of the Film Boards of Trade, or a plan for alleviating the protection and zoning situation, all of which were discussed with Mr. Kent at the exhibitor conferences in New York last week.

Representatives of the exhibitors' subcommittee visited heads of the distributing companies this week with copies of the standard form and the proposals for reforms. Fox was the first to sign and Paramount and United Artists voiced approval at a luncheon Tuesday at the Union League Club, where members of the MPPDA, headed by Will H. Hays, gathered to hear Mr. Kent say he is ready to proceed with the terms of the program. Other companies are expected momentarily to become signatories.

Give Immediate Consideration

Recognizing the necessity for righting conditions, and realizing that they have a better opportunity than ever before to solidify the industry, executives of the large corporations personally took the situation in hand for immediate consideration, enlisting the aid of sales heads and counsel. It is believed by Mr. Kent and others in distribution and by members of the exhibitor group, including M. A. Lightman, president of MPTOA, that the program is the most liberal ever offered exhibitors and that its successful operation would settle practically all major differences.

Adolph Zukor discussed the proposals with the exhibitors on behalf of Paramount, and Harry M. Warner talked for Warner Bros. Others contacted included Al Lichtman, vice president of United Artists; E. W. Hammons, of Educational-World Wide; L. J. Schlaifer, sales manager for Universal; Ned Depinet, vice-president of Radio; Nicholas M. Schenck, president of MGM; Harry Thomas, president of First Division; Harry Cohn, president of Columbia; W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram, and executives of Majestic Pictures.

Acceptance by all companies is not necessary, exhibitor leaders believing that approval by three or four will suffice to make the plan workable and that eventually others will fall in line.

During the negotiations, Mr. Kent announced that he was acting individually for Fox and had no authority to commit other distributors, although he later said he had informed MPPDA members of the progress of negotiations. Mr. Kent's prominent participation in the discussions, which he engineered and guided, marked the second time in which he had acted as mediator between exhibitors and distributors. In 1930, he brought both parties together and they worked out the 5-5-5 standard contract, which never was adopted. Allied was represented in the recent conferences by Sidney Samuelson, New Jersey, and Nathan Yamins, Massachusetts. MPTOA's committee included Jay Emanuel, Pennsylvania, and Ed Levy, Connecticut. Abram F. Myers, chairman and general manager of Allied, and Mr. Lightman, of MPTOA, were observers.

At the exhibitor mass meetings in Chicago and New York, the proposals will be ratified or rejected. "The decision reached by exhibitors at these meetings will definitely prove whether they really want the constructive program which they have been demanding, or will continue a campaign for destructive legislation," said a member of the subcommittee. "Approval of distributors will place responsibility for adoption or rejection of the plan directly at the doors of the theatre owners."

The intended purpose of the mass meetings appears to have changed from one of protestation as a means of effecting federal legislation of the industry, to the more constructive business of voting approval of the reforms suggested as a preventive against legislation. However, certain Allied interests are believed to be preparing to vote against adoption of the proposals and for a continuance of the legislative campaign decided upon at a joint Allied-MPTOA meeting in Chicago September 19. This opinion is held in conservative Allied ranks, from which word came this week, confidentially, that if the liberal wing of the organization revolts against the suggested reforms, certain state Allied units may bolt and vote approval. It was freely admitted that it will be difficult to "sell" all Allied interests, although some important members have already secretly pledged themselves to support the "new deal." Mr. Richey withdrew his Michigan unit before the deliberations began with Mr. Kent because, according to Jay Emanuel, an MPTOA committee member, "he feels the Brookhart bill is the only solution," and because S. R. Kent "refused to bind all companies." Evidently no consideration was given to the fact that distributors will not participate in a body because of possible Government complications due to the Judge Thacher decree.

The proposals will not be wrecked, however, if a split in the Allied ranks prevails at Chicago. It is a foregone conclusion that Mr. Lightman will carry his entire MPTOA membership, and Mr. Kent is said to have indicated he will go along under these conditions. Other distributors probably would follow.

It is understood that Mr. Kent is considering attending both Chicago and New York meetings to appeal personally to all exhibitor groups to seriously consider approval and to vote against any counter-proposals which might be submitted by the "die-hard" federal legislation advocates.

Mr. Myers on Tuesday dispatched the following "keynote" statement to the press:

"At the mass meeting in Chicago on November 28-29-30 the independent theatre owners in the territory west of the Alleghanies will be afforded the opportunity to accept or reject proposals for reform in the motion picture business that will vitally affect their interests for years to come.

Positive Duty

"The great choice which they will be called upon to make is between what the producers, as a result of the recent negotiations, are willing to yield, and what the exhibitors can hope to gain by pursuing the legislative program mapped out in Chicago a few weeks ago.

"Hence it is not mere ballyhoo to say that it is the positive duty of every theatre owner in said territory to attend this meeting. Allied, by insisting on open discussion of the proposals, has secured for the theatre owners the right virtually to legislate with reference to the rules under which they will do business during the next three years—probably permanently.

"Every theatre owner should be as much concerned in voting on the measures coming before this meeting as in voting for the men who will control the Government.

"This is not an Allied meeting, or an MPTOA meeting, but a mass meeting of all independent exhibitors. The purpose is not to adopt hollow resolutions but to act on concrete proposals of the greatest importance to every one in the business.

"Mr. Saperstein and his associates have done everything possible to insure a comfortable time at a minimum expense.

"Every theatre owner who reasons the matter out will conclude that he cannot possibly afford to stay away."

The New York mass meeting is expected to be an anti-climax to the Chicago session, which will be held at the Congress hotel November 28-29-30 with between 700 and 1,000 exhibitors expected to attend.

ARCHITECT COMPARES PAST WITH PRESENT

A comparison of theatre construction of the past with that of the present day is made in the current Better Theatres section of Motion Picture Herald by Ben Schlanger, New York theatre architect. Mr. Schlanger, in the course of his article says: "The overdressed de luxe theatre is a symbol only of the days of the prosperity hysteria, when the demand for things 'bigger and better' was the vogue. We are left with bigger theatres, but certainly not better theatres."

The current issue of Better Theatres is the Fall Buyers Number, containing The Equipment Index, describing the equipment and supplies used by the motion picture theatre, and listing the companies dealing in them; and Theatre Supply Dealers, naming the territorial theatre equipment dealers of the United States and Canada.

THE BEST BARGAIN

by MARTIN
QUIGLEY

THE motion picture attained its present position of dominance because it has been able to offer to the public the best entertainment bargain obtainable.

It is reasonable, therefore, to assume that once the motion picture ceases to afford to the public its best bargain in entertainment its progress will be arrested and it will be in jeopardy of falling into a decline.

The very pressing question comes forward as to whether the motion picture generally has remained the best entertainment bargain obtainable by the public. There are reasons for believing that in a great many cases as to programs, and in a great many locations as to prices, the motion picture is falling short of the enviable position it once enjoyed.

The money stringency that exists generally among the people, together with the fact that there is much mediocre product on the market, creates a great number of situations in which the public is not getting much of a bargain at the theatres.

Where theatres are not scaled at a single price we have noted a marked tendency for persons to select the lower price seats. This is not the sort of thing that led to the original success of the motion picture and the motion picture theatre. At one time the theatres were operated as genuine places of mass entertainment. The ordinary run of the public were taught to look upon the picture theatre as a place particularly their own, where it was a case of first come first served—and all without respect to admission price location. There were no reserved seats, no dress circle for the elite and no class distinctions of any kind. Aside from a single admission charge the theatres aimed not to be, and were not, more exclusive than a public park.

Then came increases in admission prices, scaling of prices and eventually the depression which has caused millions of people to regard even a nickel more importantly than they formerly regarded a dollar.

Recently in a town of thirty-five thousand population we noted a theatre in which the first and second balconies, at lower admission price, were crowded and the main floor, at a higher price, less than half filled. The main floor price was fifty cents, plus the five cent tax. This means an expenditure of two dollars and twenty cents for a family of four—which is a substantial expenditure, under existing conditions, for ninety-five per cent of the families of the country.

And what was to be had for this family expenditure at the theatre under consideration? The feature picture was an acknowledegd studio failure (run in a house operated by the company which produced it), a fair two-reel comedy, an average newsreel and an organ solo which served no good purpose other than to lengthen the program, if that, indeed, is a good purpose—which it probably is not.

There was no bargain there. An exceedingly high price was charged for an exceedingly indifferent program. The program was an argument against theatre attendance for two reasons—the quality and the price. And there is nothing in the world anywhere that has the vitality to survive the deadly combination of low quality and high price.

We propose no solution; that is the problem of the managers. But we do wish to point out—and with all possible emphasis—that the condition to which we refer, which condition is, of course, no trade secret, needs immediate and thorough attention.

The theatre in question may, perhaps, be unable to afford a lesser admission price and may be unable to get, for the time being, stronger programs uniformly. But the public is in no wise interested in its financial problems. It does not care whether or not the theatre is working out a long-term, high priced lease; it does not care whether or not there are high financing charges and home office assessments to be met. The public—quite properly—is only interested in the quality of the show and the price charged.

In order that the industry in its present proportions may survive, it is necessary that the combination of quality and price afford to the patron the best entertainment bargain obtainable.

Unless and until the best-bargain status of the motion picture theatre generally is resumed—regardless of what heroic measures must be employed to achieve that end—the industry cannot be said to have put its house in order.

U. S. EXPECTED TO ACCEPT PATENTS AND STOCK PLAN OF THE ELECTRICS

Government Postpones for Another Week or Two Its Antitrust Action Against RCA and Other Companies

An eleventh hour decision was made by the Government on Monday to extend until next Monday the postponement of its antitrust suit against Radio Corporation of America and leading electrics, which was scheduled to go to trial Tuesday morning. Negotiations for settlement out of court continue. Should the federal authorities accept, as appears likely, a new plan for a split of cross-interests, now being worked out at Washington, Wilmington and New York, it is expected that immediate steps will be taken to effect eventually a realignment of interlocking stock holdings and cross licensing agreements. On Monday both parties may present an injunctive decree indicating that a truce has been reached.

On October 8 there appeared in the HERALD a comprehensive chronicle of events leading up to the suit and details of the complicated structures involved, and it was pointed out that "a split-up of the far-reaching cross-licensing agreements which are participated in by the leading electrical corporations may be consummated, bringing about a complete realignment of the various important and profitable concessions which would give to each the exclusive rights to engage in certain fields of the radio, sound or electrical industry without fear of competitive interference by any corporate member of the treaty. Reports from Washington sources said that the old interlocking agreements would be dropped in favor of a new set which already has been drawn in order to halt the federal suit of monopoly which is pending against Radio Corporation, RCA Photophone, RCA Victor, RCA Radiotron, General Electric, Westinghouse, American Telephone, Western Electric, General Motors and General Motors Radio Corporation."

Would Bar Inter-Company Stock

Department of Justice officials are understood to be insisting that any settlement of its antitrust action against Radio Corporation and other defendants provide for complete elimination of inter-company stock ownership. This is said to be regarded by the Government as the only means of assuring complete breakup of the allegedly illegal patent and cross-licensing pool which is the basis of the action.

Just before the trial was to have begun at Wilmington, news dispatches reported that David Sarnoff, RCA president, had made a hurried trip to Washington to present the reorganization plan to Justice officials, who are proceeding in the suit under the Sherman act. Mr. Sarnoff returned immediately.

Promising to be the greatest of antitrust actions brought by the Government against an industry, the trial was to have begun in the U. S. district court at Wilmington before Judge John P. Nields last Tuesday, to run for at least six months. For a month now, executives of the companies have endeavored to arrive at a corporate and inter-company setup that would eliminate the principal official objection. Details are being guarded, but they are drastic, it is indicated.

H. C. Mahaffey, Jr., clerk of the U. S. district court, this week read with interest the settlement reports appearing in newspapers, but said he knew nothing definite and that the court was ready to start trial. It was to have begun in October, but was postponed due to the illness of Judge Nields.

Charles F. Curley, Wilmington, solicitor for the defendants, said Monday that there have been conversations regarding settlement, but he had nothing definite to report. However, RCA, its subsidiaries, and General Electric and Westinghouse, which jointly control the corporation, drew up a comprehensive plan for reorganization for submission to the Department of Justice in an eleventh-hour effort to forestall trial.

Would Be Three Year Delay

In case the suit was pressed, and after the lower court had reached a decision, it probably would be taken before the United States supreme court by the losing side, it was said, and it would be at least two years before a decision could be reached. Altogether, there would be three years of uncertainty, during which the management would find it inadvisable to make any plans for the future.

In May, 1930, the Government brought suit against the radio group charging that the fundamental cross-licensing agreements by which the Radio Corporation of America obtained rights to patents were in violation of the antitrust acts. In March last, despite the elimination of numerous criticized practices and other steps taken by the radio group, the Department of Justice filed an amended and supplemental petition enlarging the scope of the issues and adding new parties to the suit.

The Radio Corporation has modified certain traffic agreements and contracts, reduced rates and royalties and minimum annual royalty requirements under licenses and has taken other steps to compromise the federal action.

Negotiations between companies are reaching the stage where the plan for reconstructing their relationships is likely to be formulated in its entirety within a few days. There will be, in fact, not one plan but a series of separate measures proposed.

It is made clear that while the cross-licensing and stock ownerships attacked in the Government suit are believed to be legal by the respective companies, the companies are prepared nevertheless to meet the objections in so far as they can do so without jeopardizing their investments or patent ownership rights.

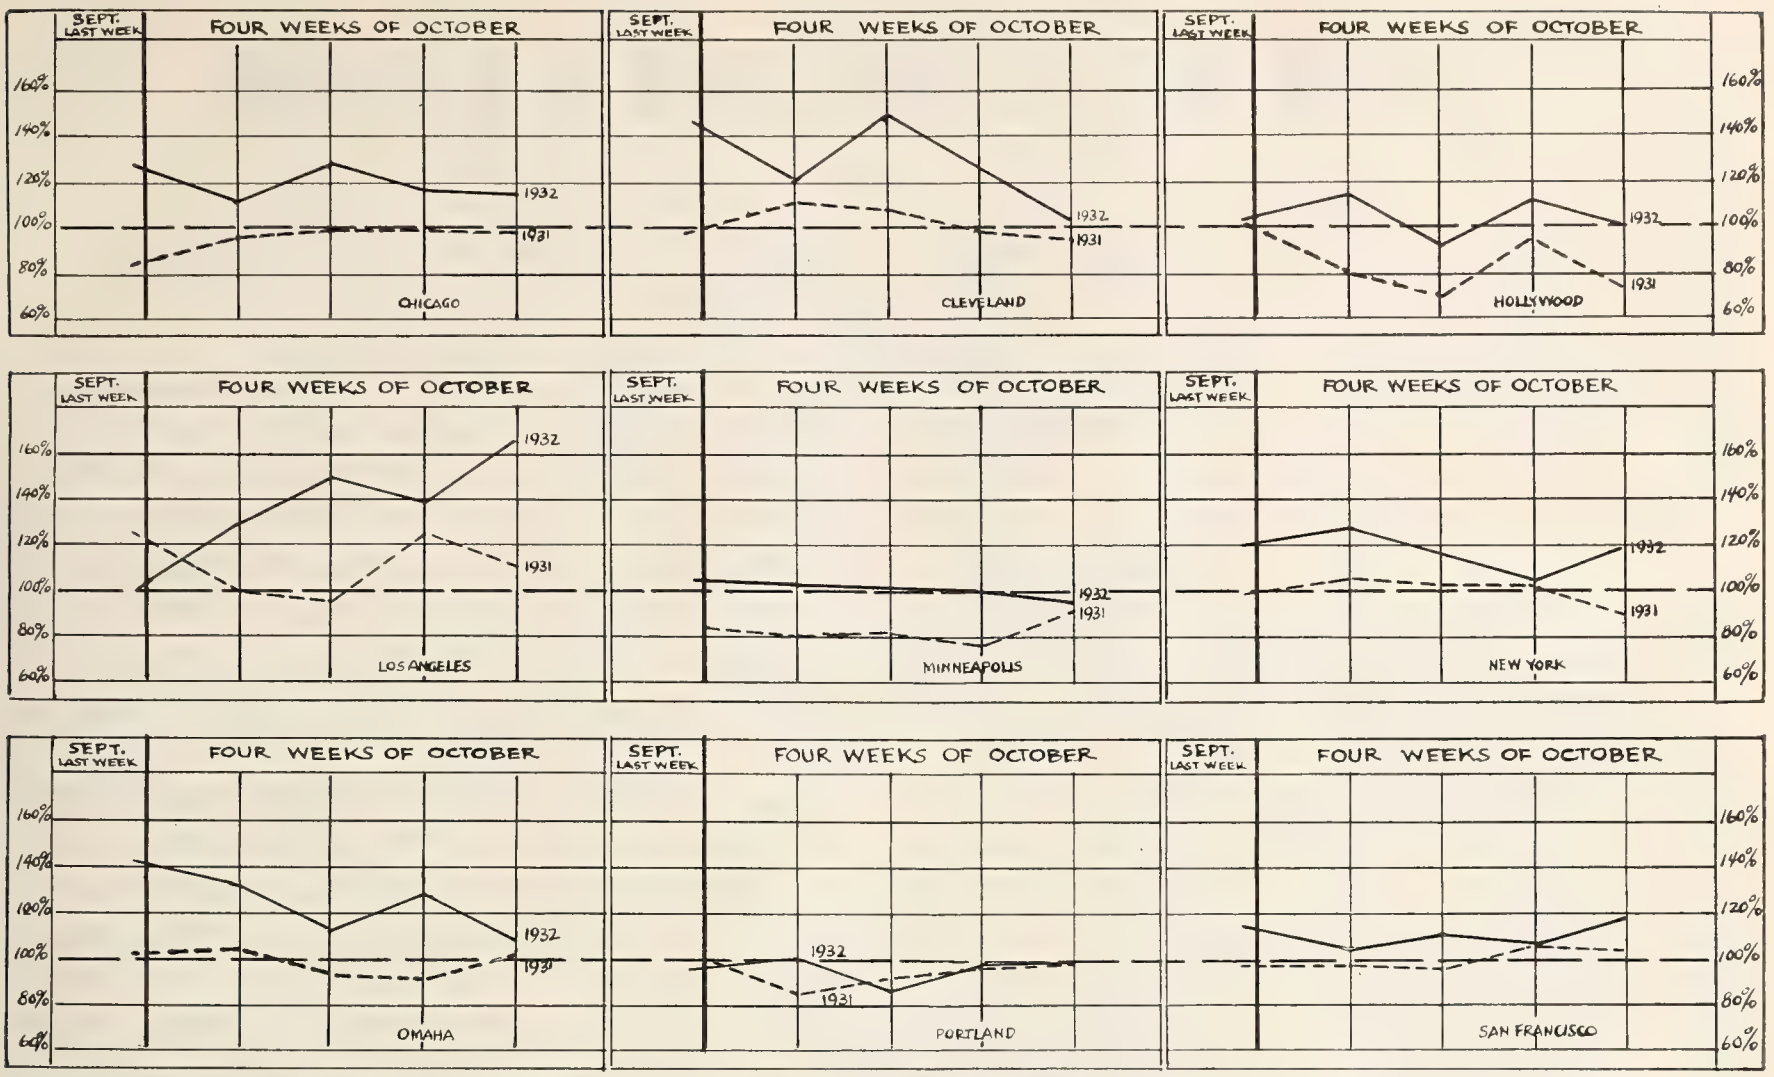
Another problem involved is the determination of the manner in which the large ownership of Radio Corporation stocks by General Electric and Westinghouse can be altered or reduced to satisfy the expressed dissatisfaction of the Department of Justice.

Radio Corporation holds exclusive licenses of General Electric and Westinghouse for all radio patents involved in the manufacture and operation of radio sets and tubes.

All Would Hold Own Patents

Under the readjustments considered, the exclusive licenses would be canceled and all three companies would hold their own patents, licensing each of the other companies under non-exclusive arrangements so that any one of the companies could manufacture complete receiving sets. The same privilege would be available to all other radio manufacturers.

Many details would be involved. There are approximately $18,000,000 advances owed to the electrical companies by Radio Corporation, the funding of which under any altered stock ownership would require prolonged consideration. An equally important problem is the matter of negotiation. Also, RCA has deferred obligations to Radio-Keith-Orpheum arising out of its recapitalization last December.



Further, it was added, RCA and subsidiaries owned real estate in New York City which would not be entirely required under the physical and financial setup proposed for the group, especially when space in Radio City became available. Contracts were signed for leasing for 20 years about 1,000,000 square feet of office and studio space in Radio City by the Radio Corporation and subsidiaries a year ago, not including theatre property.

Adjustments of the long-term leases, transfers of real estate property owned and similar measures arising out of the major proposals involved would be important incidents in the working out of the plans in their entirety, it was said, particularly as part of the real estate owned might be used to offset intercompany debts that would have to be liquidated.

RKO Reports Net Loss of $1,120,796 For Third Quarter Ended September 30

Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corporation and subsidiary companies, in a report of operations for the quarter and nine months ended September 30, 1932, show a net loss of $1,120,796.30 for the quarter and a net loss of $4,964,331.06 for the nine months' period. Loss from operations is noted as $157,258.77 and $1,532,428.78 for the quarter and nine months, respectively. Following is a tabulation of the report of operations for the quarter and nine months' period:

	Third Quarter	Nine Months
Loss from Operations	$ 157,258.77	$1,532,428.78
Profit from Other Sources	106,645.91	128,607.35
	$ 50,612.86	$1,403,821.43
Interest on Gold Notes and Debentures	193,102.36	658,097.58
	$ 243,715.22	$2,061,919.01
Depreciation and Amortization	877,081.08	2,902,412.05
Net Loss	$1,120,796.30	$4,964,331.06

Comparative increase in box office receipts for nine cities in 1932 over 1931 for a five-weeks period in September and October is shown in the graph. The five weeks are the last week of September and four weeks of October. For each year the box office figures for the third week in September were taken as 100 per cent for the purpose of the comparison.

326 Cuts Made By N. Y. Censors In Fiscal Year

The annual report of the motion picture division of the New York State Education Department, covering the period from July 1, 1931, to June 30, 1932, has been compiled by Dr. James Wingate, former New York censor who recently went to the Coast to join the Hays organization. During the fiscal year, the board reviewed 2,015 films. Eliminations were made in 326.

Of the eliminations made in films the great majority were due to the fact that, in the opinion of the reviewers, they "tended to incite to crime." Thirty-one formal requests for re-examination by the director were made by applicants, and one appeal to the Board of Regents.

Total receipts were $229,140; expenditures $67,929. The net revenue was $161,210, an increase of $12,137 over the preceding year. Net profit to the state, over and above all expenditures since the creation of the commission in 1921, has been more than $1,000,000.

Eastman Pays Dividend

The directors of Eastman Kodak Company have declared a regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the common stock and $1.50 on the preferred. The dividend is payable January 2 to holders of record December 5.

GAUMONT BRITISH TAKES MOSS CIRCUIT

Gaumont British, major English company, has acquired control of the Moss Empires circuit of theatres, largest group of vaudeville houses in England. Max Ostrer and C. M. Wolf, joint managing directors of Gaumont British, have been added to the board of directors of the Moss company. With the Gaumont circuit augmented by 52 theatres, its holdings now comprise over 400 theatres. The combined capital of the two organizations is now nearly £7,000,000 sterling, equivalent at the present rate of exchange to approximately $22,960,000.

500 Find Truth Unmasked at AMPA Beefsteak Dinner

About five hundred members of the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers gathered at the Park Central hotel Tuesday night for a Beefsteak Dinner and exposition of the industry's "half-naked truth," including Goona-Goonas the world over. Maestro Hal Horne, of United Artists, mastered the unceremony of the occasion which was marked by the donation of many tributes, floral and otherwise, pro and contra, hither and yon. A picture of the august gathering appears on page 13 of this issue.

Radio to Start Unit Production Soon: Selznick

"We expect to introduce the unit-production system to some extent in our next year's schedule and I hope that we will make fewer pictures," said David O. Selznick, executive producer for RKO Radio Pictures, on his arrival in New York recently from the Coast. "A production schedule of forty or more features is too much for one man to supervise in one season.

"The only solution to production problems is to reduce the costs of unit production. We plan gradually to give the producer more authority, to have him assume complete charge of stories and talent. A change of this sort is a difficult thing to work out. While we are not ready to make the change now, we will probably have about half of our next season's product on this basis, with two or three units each producing four or five feature pictures.

More pictures should be made for selective audiences, in Mr. Selznick's opinion. There should also be more adult fare in our motion picture theatres.

Cycles are all right, he declared. If you can beat the other fellow to the public with the pictures you do so, but you don't if you find you are going to be late.

Average cost for the present season's productions will not exceed $237,000, he said. He noted that 50 per cent of the stories announced are never produced.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Glen Allvine has temporarily discontinued all deep sea fishing activities.

It all happened when Mr. Allvine, who is fond of ocean fishing when the water is lake-like, was inveigled into accompanying George Kadel, of Elliot Photo Service, and Howard Reichenbach, motion picture printer, for a bit of early codfishing. Nothing was said about the current temper of the wind and waves and Mr. Allvine prepared for a quiet day on the briny. Within half an hour he suffered deep disillusionment and from that point on nothing seemed to matter. If Glen brought fish home he bought them.

"If you think the job of being a movie actress is tough, try being the ex-wife of a prize fighter," was the confession of Estelle Taylor, in an interview while appearing last week in an act at the RKO Mainstreet theatre in Kansas City. "If I say nice things about Jack," continued the former Mrs. Dempsey, "people will say I'm two-faced, and if I say unpleasant things they'll say I'm vindictive. I'm just an actress trying to get along." She said "there seemed to be a great resentment that a fiery vixen from Hollywood should ensnare a great big, innocent, handsome prize fighter. There seems to be an innuendo campaign to the effect that Jack lost his fights because he was too devoted to me."

Ten million eight-hour work-days, benefiting, directly or indirectly, 56,000 persons is the Rockefeller contribution, through Radio City, to the "turning prosperity's corner" campaign. Credit is given to the Rockefeller interests because they supplied the wherewithal—$250,000,000 worth—but David Sarnoff, president of RCA, is supposed to have had something to do with it, too. Mr. Sarnoff, it is said, is the person who sold the idea to John D. Rockefeller, Jr. It is still a little too early to ask how Mr. Rockefeller feels about it.

Eddie Buzzell, Columbia director, is writing a series of articles for a national magazine. The first two installments are the work of Mr. Buzzell, the stage star, who failed as an actor in Hollywood and blames it on the inefficiency of Hollywood directors. The last two are by Eddie Buzzell, the successful director, who takes to task stage stars who go to Hollywood and blame their failure on the directors.

Gordon B. Pollock, cameraman, has returned to Hollywood after two years abroad and he's still a good Yank. Although Mr. Pollock acquired a beret for a headpiece while traveling for Paramount through France, England, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Holland and Belgium, he insisted upon giving American manufacturers a break whenever possible. He paid 40 cents in Rome for a Saturday Evening Post and $2.38 in Berlin for one package of Chesterfields. A "flivver," bought in Paris, cost him $1,700.

Lowell Thomas was the guest speaker at the Tuesday luncheon forum of the Motion Picture Club. After reading in Motion Picture Daily that "Edward G. Robinson wept real tears for five full minutes after witnessing a screening of 'Silver Dollar' at the Warner projection room t'other day," one chap said it was a shame and that something should be done about it.

Wedding bells are about to ring forth for Herbert Fecke, of our advertising staff. Mr. Fecke has always been a fervent disciple of singleness and for one reason or another he has steadfastly refused to divulge any of the details of the coming event, even to his closest associates. However, our reporters learn that Herbert visited the license bureau last week but was turned down because the young lady is not a local resident; that he gave up his bachelor quarters in the Hotel Victoria at about 8:30 a. m. last Saturday, moving directly to his new home at the Parc Vendome, 350 West 57th Street, apartment 8-F, and that the ceremony is supposed to be performed November 26, at Albany, or is he already married? Helen Rolland is the prospective bride and Raymond Gallo, a co-worker of Mr. Fecke, will be best man. The future bridegroom positively refused to attend a bachelor dinner.

A New York distributor has on hand a new group of features. Executives of the company admit that they have box office possibilities, provided three or four reels are eliminated from each subject. Film editors are now cutting them down to two and three-reelers.

Rumor mongers will not rest until they set ex-Mayor James J. Walker in the picture business. They have had him at Fox four times, associated with Nathan Burkan twice, and have repeatedly mentioned his name in connection with the MPPDA, the Stanley Circuit, several important distributors and what have you. Mr. Walker left his native heath last week and immediately it was said his trip to Italy was on behalf of foreign activities of the Hays organization. Where next?

Warners has acquired picture rights on a special article which Randolph Bartlett, motion picture writer, contributed to American Mercury on the subject of "The Paris Racket," an exposition of the invisible means of support of an adventuresome fringe of the American colony on the Seine. When it reaches the screen some of the girls and boys will have to go to work or come home.

Esselle Parichy, who is quite well known in motion picture cinematographic circles, was browsing about New York the other day when he noticed that in Bryant Park they charge five cents to view, through a powerful telescope, persons standing on the observation tower of the Empire State Building, who, in turn, paid a dollar to look down at the people who paid five cents to look up. It was election day and reporters in Kansas City were besieging celebrities who happened to be in town, with queries as to whom they favored for president. Kay Francis was among those caught in the news writers' net. She had arrived by train from New York and was awaiting a plane to take her to Hollywood for an important conference with Darryl Zanuck at Warners' studio.

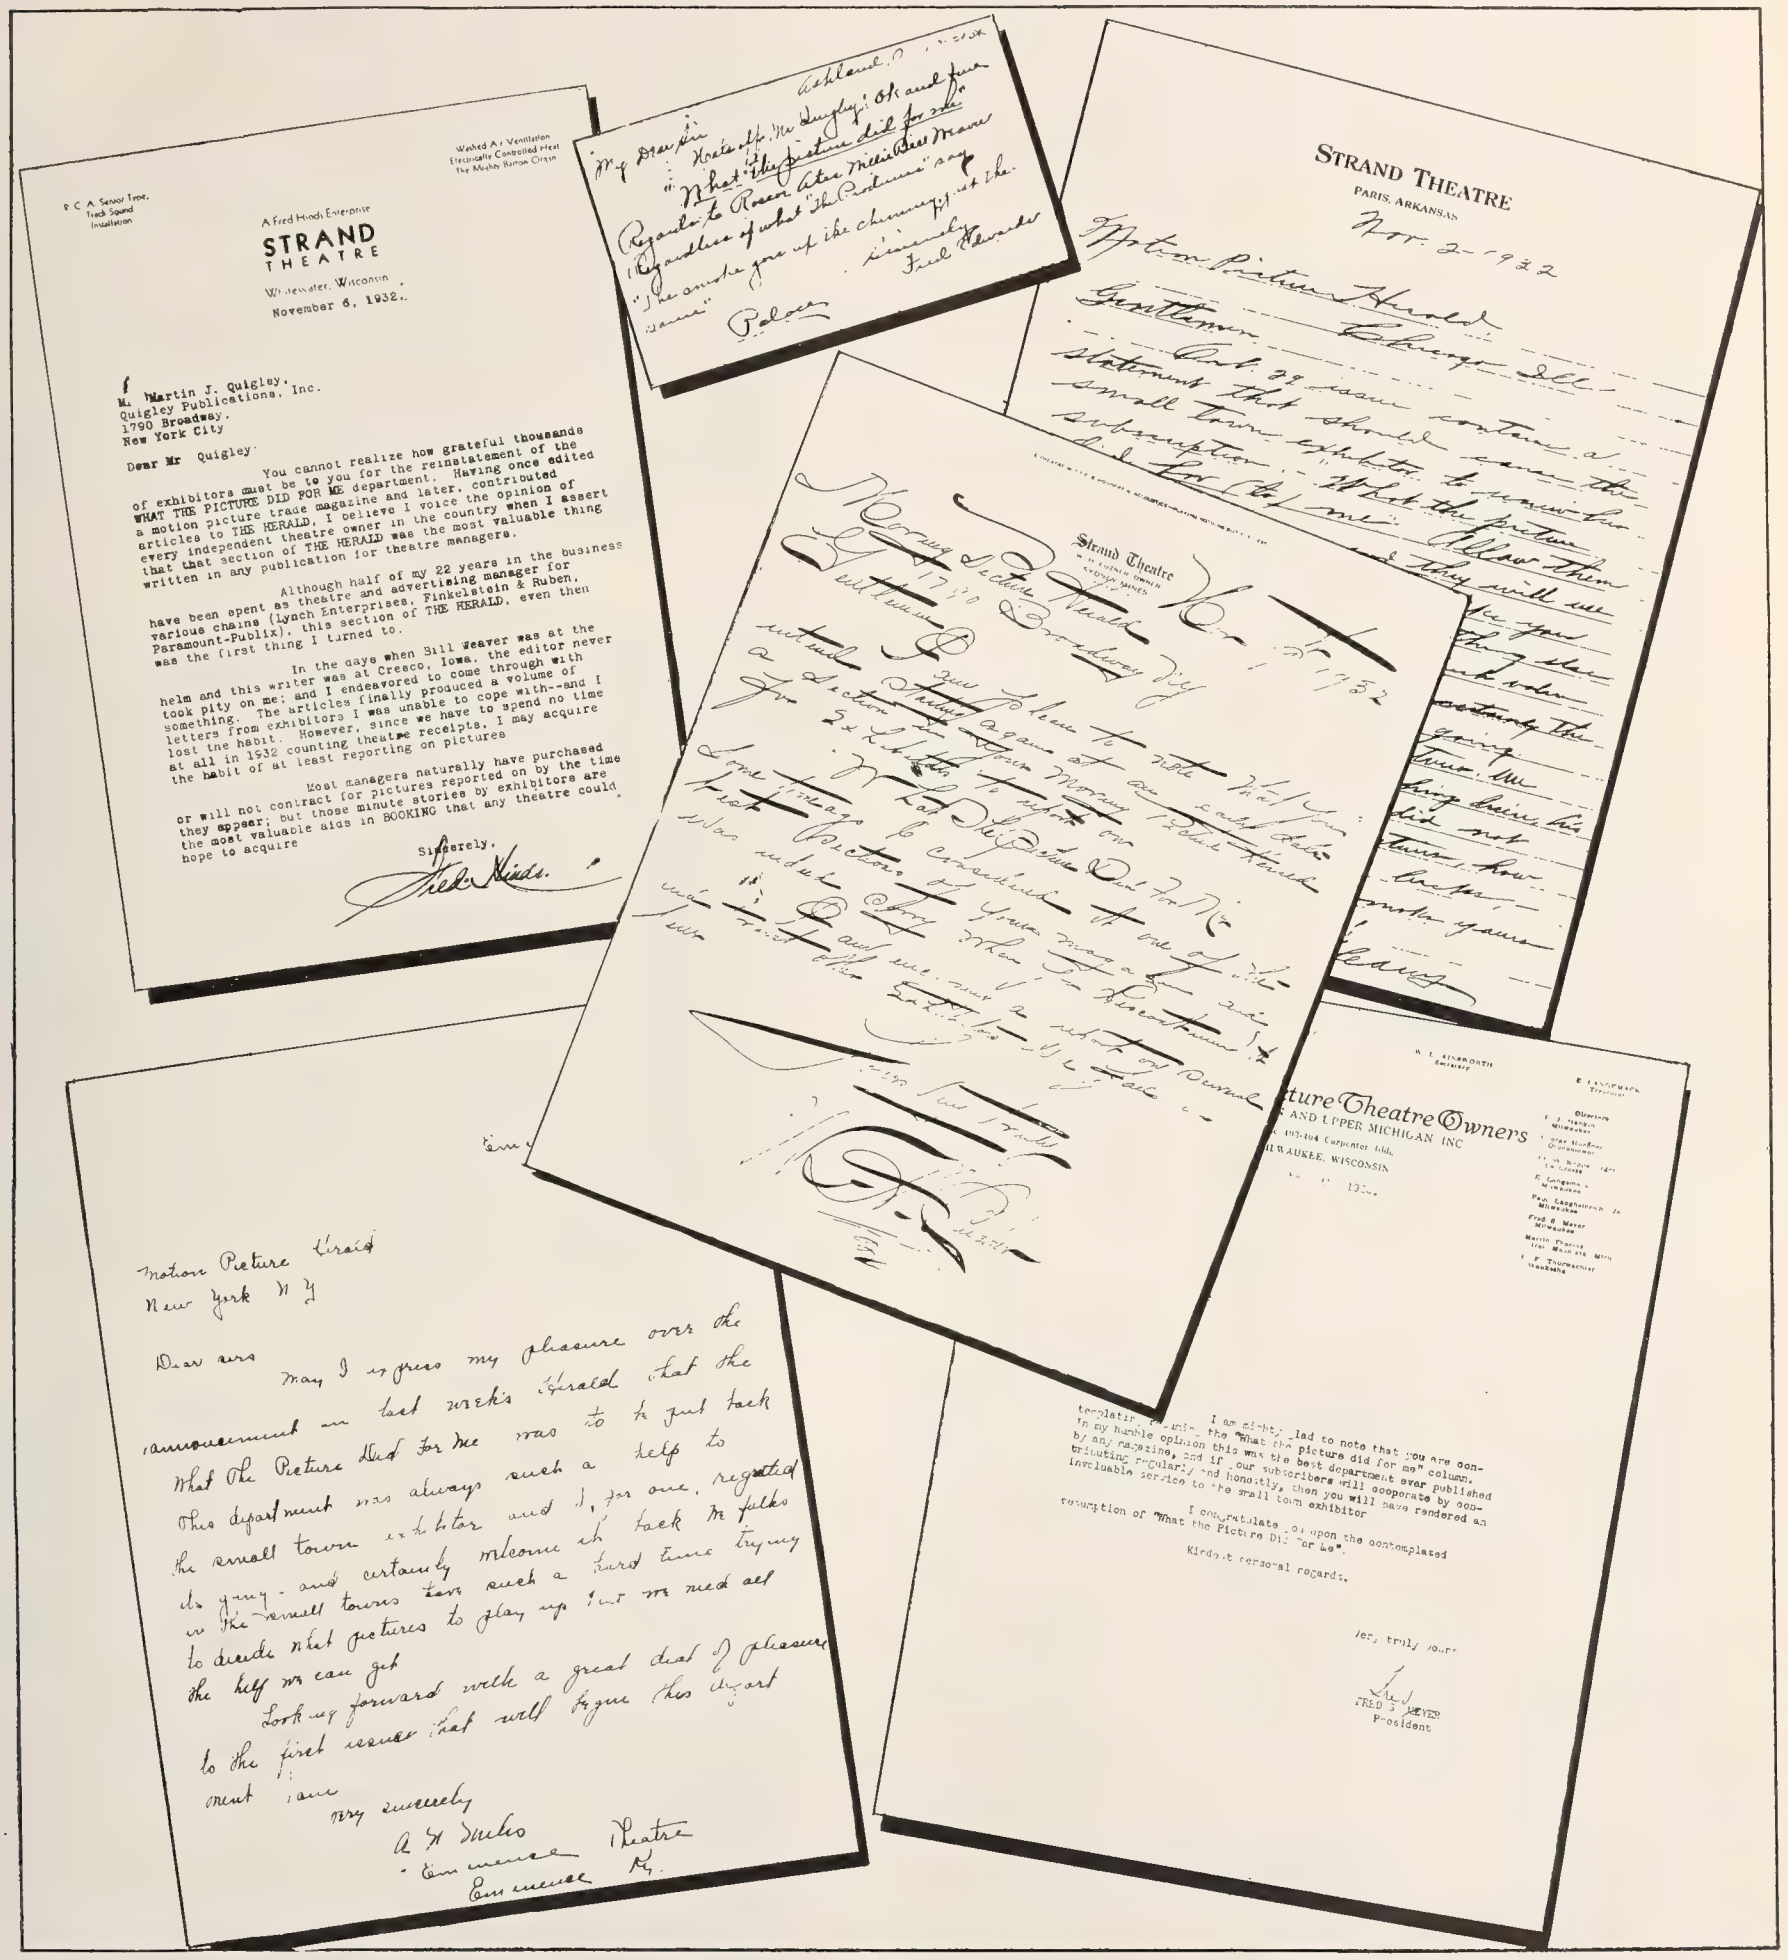
"Whom do you want to win?" Miss Francis was asked.

"You'll never know. It wouldn't be good camera to say."

"Meaning you figure that both Republicans and Democrats are among your fans?"

"Exactly."



"Suppose we say that you're for Norman Thomas?"

"Who's he?" she asked suspiciously.

"The Socialist candidate."

"Fine! I love everything social," replied the young star as she hurriedly departed, leaving the reporters wondering if she really meant it.

ON "WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME"

Among the great many enthusiastic letters from exhibitors which greeted the announcement of an early return of the exhibitor's own department, "What the Picture Did for Me," were the representative messages of congratulations reproduced above, from the South, East, West, and from Canada. Veteran contributors to the department were among those sounding the call to fellow theatre owners to be among the first to contribute. There is Fred Hines, of the Strand Theatre, Whitewater, Wis., one of the pillars of "What the Picture Did for Me." And Fred S. Meyer, president of the M.P.T.O. of Wisconsin and Upper Michigan, says he's "mighty glad." So, too, with many others. W. H. Cuzner, of the Strand at Sydney Mines, Nova Scotia, could not even wait for the report blanks, which are going forward this week, but sent in two pages of comment on a number of pictures.

Ruling Asked This Week in Roxy Theatre Name Suit

RKO has asked Addison S. Pratt, recently appointed special master in the Roxy theatre name suit, to limit review to the extensive briefs that have been submitted by both sides. A decision has been requested by November 18. The special master will review the briefs this week and hold additional hearings if they are not sufficiently clear.

It was the opinion of Harry Kosch, receiver for Roxy Theatre Corporation, who is seeking to prevent RKO from applying the name to its new theatre in Radio City, that no further hearings will be held.

BUSY WEEK ON THE PREVIEW FRONT

Meehan Describes the New Clara Bow; Range of New Films Runs from Epic to Good Rowdy Fun

by LEO MEEHAN
Hollywood Staff Correspondent

Outstanding this week is the return to the screen of that little gal from Brooklyn who used to wear out ticket choppers faster than exhibitors could install them—Clara Bow. Under the Fox banner, she is presented by that veteran producer, Sam Rork, in "Call Her Savage."

You can call her anything you want, but I call her a new, a better and more fascinating Clara Bow, and I can see no reason why she may not quickly resume her place as one of the most popular girls in the cinema. A long and much-needed rest, taken on a ranch in Nevada—far from the wilds of Hollywood—marriage, an evident clearer point of view of what she is doing, new poise and a maturity of personal beauty make her actually a new personality, without the loss of one scintilla of the fire and vitality which rocketed her to stardom 'way back years ago.

Clara Bow, in the opinion of this writer, always possessed the potentialities of being a great dramatic actress. She has the divine spark of genius. It is the rare sort, like the desert wild flower, which one is born with; that too much cultivation or attention might quickly spoil. That, and Hollywood, and fair weather friends, came within an inch of wrecking her and her career. Then she pulled herself together. She married, happily it seems, to Rex Bell, and together they buried themselves in a shack out in the desert. Now she is back, and we are happy to record that the return looks promising. If the Madame Glyns and the rest of our sophisticates will lay off the "it" stuff, and let her growth as a dramatic actress continue and flourish, if she gets real stories to bite into, sympathetic direction—for she is an extremely sensitive soul—she will reign again as a great favorite.

A Good Start

The story is an adaptation by Edwin Burke of Tiffany Thayer's somewhat naughty novel. As in the case of "Bad Girl," Burke seems to have done a pretty good job of cleaning up the rough spots without vitiating the original story. However, Miss Bow is called upon to suffer continuously the "sins that are visited upon the children, even unto the third generation," and we must admit there were times when we wished she could play wildcat without such tragic consequences always following. It will be a mistake if Miss Bow, capable of more important things, is pegged as a bad girl trying to be good, or a good girl trying to be bad. Splendid support is given by Monroe Owslay, Gilbert Roland, Thelma Todd, Estelle Taylor, Anthony Jowitt, Willard Robertson, Weldon Heyburn, Hale Hamilton and others. Sam Rork has made a good start with the new Clara Bow. John Francis Dillon directed sympathetically.

Fox previewed another interesting picture this week, "Pier 13," featuring Spencer Tracy and Joan Bennett. Directed by Raoul Walsh, it is packed with a load of good rowdy fun of the common-people type. Characters mostly live and work around New York's harbor and steamship docks, with Tracy in a flippant role of police officer, in love with the cashier of a cheap waterfront beanery. Both the dialogue and action have plenty of good old slapstick humor, rough and ready wit. It should suit everyone but the prissy and the ultra-fastidious, and probably they don't go to motion pictures anyhow.

Among the more pretentious offerings of the week was the Radio epic of economic depressions, "The Conquerors," the eloquent theme of which is that no matter how much travail, tragedy and suffering times of financial panic may bring, you can't down America or the American people. Going way back to pre-Civil War days, Howard Estabrook's story shows how repeatedly the country has gone completely to the demnition bow-wows, only to rebound to greater things. Richard Dix delivers his most telling performance since "Cimarron." He is neatly supported by Ann Harding, Edna May Oliver and others.

The Kelly-Bischoff-Saal combination, producing for World Wide, again proves that good pictures are no accident by delivering a well turned package of entertainment called "Uptown New York," directed by Victor Schertzinger. Top numbers in the cast include Jack Oakie (who lately has been racing hilariously through one good performance to another), George Cooper, Lee Moran, Henry Armetta, Alexander Carr, Raymond Hatton, with Shirley Grey and Leon Waycoff handling the romance department until Mr. Oakie discovers that love is more important than slot machines. No independent organization this season has turned out more consistently good pictures than the K-B-S boys, and here is another one with lots of showmanship in it.

The vogue for dramatic unities started by such productions as "Grand Hotel," "Union Depot," "Transatlantic" and others is carried into New York's famous playground in Warners' First National picture, "Central Park." An inconsequential story becomes a whirlpool of comedy, melodrama, thrills, pathos and novelty through the screen treatment by Ward Morehouse and Earl Baldwin, while John Adolphi keeps it moving at a breathless pace. This shows what good production can do for a trivial yarn—treatment again. This one gives you 'most everything but the kitchen stove, which, of course, wouldn't be in Central Park, would it?

M. H. Hoffman's picture, "The Iron Master," deals in he-man fashion with a young giant who rises from the scrap iron pile to the command of a great steel plant. Reginald Denny gives a good account of himself, supported by Lila Lee, Farrell Macdonald, William Janney, Virginia Sale and others.

Columbia's "No More Orchids" is a gay domestic drama, done en moderne, with romance provided by Carole Lombard and Lyle Talbot. Some swell comedy is provided by Louise Closser Hale and C. Aubrey Smith. There's lots of color, witty dialogue and the stuff that appeals to the women.

A particular impression of the week in previewing is the growing importance and popularity as a comedian of Henry Armetta, delightful creator of Italian personalities. We must have seen Armetta in half a dozen pictures already this month and don't see how he has time to do them all, and all so well.

And Another Thing—

So, there will be no more cycles, sez you? Ho hum! Lissen to this: "Central Park" (Warner Bros.), "Murder at the Zoo" (Paramount), "Zoo in Budapest" (Lasky-Fox), "The Big Cage" (Universal). Yes-sir—the animals have been brought back alive from the jungles and the cameras are now turning up the unhappy creatures in their Hollywood cages.

RINGSIDE, Short Subject Awards committee of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. Arguments about who should win waxing hotter, louder, longer, with the annual awards banquet set for Friday night of this week. Unless the boys can get together it may be necessary to call in the entire Academy membership to settle the matter of who wins in the short subject fields, up for honors for the first time.

This is a coincidence, and not a studio publicity yarn. Shooting of the Armistice Day scenes in London's Trafalgar Square for Fox's great Noel Coward spectacle, "Cavalcade," actually took place on Armistice Day. It just so happened that these scenes were reached in the regular production schedule on November 11. Fox invited the press out to dinner, and then to witness the shooting of the stirring episode with 2,500 extras. The Irish delegation at the dinner encountered some difficulty when served with turkey. It was Friday. Winnie Sheehan didn't come in till after dinner.

ACADEMY'S ANNUAL AWARDS THIS WEEK

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences' annual awards to production personalities for the best efforts during 1932 will be held at the Hotel Ambassador Friday evening. The affair will be broadcast natonally and will highlight a short subject starring Charlie Chaplin, in which he makes his first talking appearance. It was produced by him and Walt Disney especially for the dinner.

THE OCTOBER BOX OFFICE CHAMPIONS

DEMONSTRATING, it would seem, a heightened interest of the public in screen entertainment, the key theatre box offices named nine productions as the "champions" for that month, and so many were tied, that only five rankings are represented. MGM's "Smilin' Through" claimed first place for itself, while Paramount's "The Phantom President" won second.

WARNERS' FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and subsidiary companies, report total assets of $182,727,759 as of Aug. 27, 1932, and a net loss for the year ending on that date of $11,224,550, after all charges, interest, amortization and depreciation, and including profit of $2,870,503 from retirement of debentures and subsidiaries' funded indebtedness which was credited to earned surplus account. The profit and loss deficit for 1932 was $12,078,665, compared with a surplus of $223,747 for the year preceding. Harry M. Warner, president, in his report to the stockholders expressed optimism in the future, pointing out that "the company has been equal to every demand made upon it during the period of this depression."

Amortization of both negatives and positives has been considerably lowered. Whereas it had been the practice of Warners to write off a negative completely at the end of 88 weeks, the company hereafter will lower the amortization period to 65 weeks. Prints of Warner pictures which previously were written off 49 per cent at the end of 13 weeks will now be amortized 64½ per cent at the end of the same period. Complete amortization of prints will remain the same, concluding in one year.

Net Income $23,045,518

Net income, before charges, was $23,045,518, as compared with $36,371,383 for the preceding year.

President Warner last Saturday sent the following statement to stockholders:

"For the year ended Aug. 27, 1932, your company reports a net loss of $11,224,550 after deducting all charges, including interest, amortization and depreciation and after allowing for a profit of $2,870,503 arising from the retirement of debentures and subsidiaries' funded indebtedness. The net loss from operation before amortization and depreciation of properties and before allowing for the profit arising from the retirement of funded indebtedness was $4,794,508.

"During the year your board of directors deemed it prudent to cease the operation of certain unprofitable properties. In consequence thereof special reserves against property values have been made in the amount of $3,633,895. In addition, the directors have taken the conservative step of carrying upon the books of your company, investments in and advances to affiliated companies (including Skouras Bros. Enterprises, Inc., and St. Louis Amusement Company) either at or below the book value of the stock of the underlying corporations or at the nominal value of $1.00, for which a further appropriation of $2,376,921 has been made from capital surplus. These amounts, together with similar appropriations for prepaid royalties, investments in patents, foreign and domestic, and miscellaneous investments, have brought the tital deductions from capital surplus during the year to $7,624,790.

"There has been charged to deficit $758,050 representing bond and note discount unamortized at August 27, 1932 less premium received on debentures issued in prior years.

Change in Amortizing

"It has been the practice of the company to amortize its film inventories based upon the average earning experience of the pictures. Our experience with pictures recently released indicates that the revenue in the earlier months of release of a picture is a much higher percentage of the ultimate revenue than had been the case in prior years. In conformity, therefore, with the policy of the company, the rates of amortization have been adjusted as follows:

CUMULATIVE PERCENTAGE OF FILM COST WRITTEN OFF.

	Negatives		Positive Prints
	Former Rate	Revised Rate	Former Rate	Revised Rate
13 weeks after release	42½	51½	49	64½
26 " " "	65¾	73	78	90
39 " " "	79¼	84¼	93½	96¾
52 " " "	86½	93¾	100	100
65 " " "	93	100
88 " " "	100	...

"The application of the revised rates has resulted in an increased amortization during the year ended Aug. 27, 1932, of $1,368,524.

"Included among the mortgages and funded debt maturing within one year are $4,488,425 first mortgages, $661,150 standing demand mortgages and $790,200 other mortgages, in addition to sinking fund requirements and installment payments of $4,559,475. Notwithstanding present business conditions we have not been experiencing any difficulty in renewing first mortgages as they have become due. Moreover, there are available at substantial price discounts large blocks of bonds of sinking fund requirements and mortgage installments.

"Your board of directors recommends an amendment to the certificate of incorporation of the company, providing for common stock with a par value of $5.00 per share in lieu of the existing common stock without nominal or par value but with a stated value of $5.00 per share. The proposed amendment will not only result in a substantial saving in taxes to the company, but, based upon the existing transfer tax laws, will also result in a material saving to stockholders upon the sale and transfer of common stock. This amendment will neither change nor affect the rights or the number of outstanding shares of stock. If this amendment is adopted, it will not be necessary at this time for stockholders to exchange their certificates.

Cites Koplar Suit

"A suit instituted in St. Louis by certain persons, including Harry Koplar, a stockholder of your company and of certain of its subsidiary companies in St. Louis, has resulted in the filing on November 3, 1932, of a report of the referee appointed by the court, wherein he finds that the charges of Koplar and his associates are unfounded and untrue. The referee's report, which is now before the court for confirmation, exonerates your company and its officers and directors from all alleged acts of wrong doing and recommends that the complaint be dismissed with costs to be assessed against the plaintiffs. The referee states in his report that 'previously to causing this suit to be instituted he [Koplar] had evidenced his intention to involve the company in litigation unless his stock was purchased at a price far above the market . . . . that his purpose in prosecuting this suit, in the opinion of the referee, was to attempt to force Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., to purchase his stock at his price, or suffer the consequent loss incident to litigation; * * * thus it appears that he was trafficking in this alleged cause of action.' The referee further states that bringing this type of action is incompatible with good faith.

"The same Harry Koplar has also brought suit against your company in the federal court of Delaware. Three previous suits of a similar character filed against your company in the state court of Delaware have all been dismissed.

"On Oct. 31, 1932, there were 44,460 common stockholders of the company as compared with 40,636 on Oct. 31, 1931, and 26,990 on Nov. 7, 1930.

"The fact that the depression has had a direct effect upon the motion picture industry requires no comment. During the period of this depression, the company has been equal to every demand made upon it. Drastic reductions have been made in operating costs. Salaries have been further cut and economies have been effected in all departments."

Assets of $182,727,759 for 1932 are $31,129,693 lower than in 1931, when they totaled $213,857,452. The difference is attributable for the most part to a reduction of $10,876,946 in current and working assets, principally films and story inventories; and to $13,330,145 less fixed assets, including properties and buildings owned and equipment. Current assets as of Aug. 27, 1932, including $2,928,645 cash, amounted to $14,904,263 and current liabilities were $12,906,591. This compares with cash of $3,767,087, current assets of $25,781,209 and current liabilities of $13,945,407 on Aug. 29, 1931.

Investments in Affiliates

Investments in and advances to affiliated companies totaled $3,784,195 on August 27 last, which is comparable to $8,291,666 at the end of 1931.

Mortgages and special accounts receivable, less reserves, totaled $328,616 in the 1932 report, and $181,611 in 1931; deposits to secure contracts, less reserves, were $1,833,840 at the end of 1932, and $2,387,027 in 1931; deferred charges were $1,347,640 for 1932 and $3,333,840 for 1931, both figures including prepaid taxes, insurance, rents, expenses and other items.

Goodwill is represented in the current report as $8,695,674, which is slightly less than in 1931, when it was $8,718,424.

Price, Waterhouse & Co., New York accountants, in certifying the report, said that books of subsidiaries in equity receivership were not examined, and that the accounts of foreign film subsidiaries and branches consolidated therein are as of July 30, with the exception of the Australian unit, which dates as of June 25. It is also said that in the balance sheet are included assets of foreign subsidiaries and branches amounting to $958,609 at rates of exchange prevailing at August 27, of which $689,013 ($528,897 being in England) are net and current working assets.

Arbitration Expenses

One interesting item listed under liabilities is "Expenses of arbitration proceedings—amount indeterminable." Evidently this has to do with the arbitration of a current dispute over royalties with Electrical Research Products and Western Electric.

Current and working liabilities were reduced to $12,906,591, from $13,945,406 in 1931. These include notes payable, purchase money, accounts payable, sundry accruals, amounts due affiliated companies, royalties payable and advance payments on film, deposits and the like.

Also listed as liabilities are optional 6 per cent debentures, due 1939, totaling $37,200,000, less $210,000 held in treasury; and mortgages and other bond issues totaling $59,932,500, less bonds held in treasury. A total of $96,922,500 in mortgages and funded debt is reported. Capital surplus is listed at $56,325,484.

Charged against net income, which totaled $23,045,518, are amortization of film costs (exclusive of studio properties), $21,272,-

FULL TEXT OF OPTIONAL CONTRACT

Optional Standard License Agreement 1933

AGREEMENT of license under copyright made in one or more counterparts between ...., a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Distributor), party of the first part, and the Exhibitor (hereinafter named and referred to as the Exhibitor, operating the theatre hereinafter designated), party of the second part,

WITNESSETH: The parties hereto agree as follows:

License

FIRST: The Distributor grants the Exhibitor and the Exhibitor accepts, a limited license under the respective copyrights of the motion pictures designated and described in the Schedule hereof and under the copyright of any matter included in any sound recorded therewith, to exhibit publicly said motion picture and to reproduce for public performances such recorded sound in synchronism therewith, but only at the said theatre for the number of consecutive days specified in the Schedule and for no other use or purpose; provided that the reproducing equipment in the said theatre will operate reliably and efficiently to reproduce such recorded sound with adequate volume and high quality; and provided further that if copyrighted musical compositions are included in such recorded sound, the Exhibitor now has or will have at the date or dates of the exhibition of each of such motion pictures a license from the copyright proprietor thereof or from any licensee of such copyright proprietor to perform publicly the said copyrighted musical compositions. If more than one theatre is hereinafter designated the said motion pictures are licensed for exhibition at only one of such theatres unless otherwise in the Schedule specifically provided in writing.

Term and Warranty

SECOND: (a) The term of this Agreement shall begin with the date fixed or determined for the exhibition at the said theatre of the first motion picture deliverable hereunder and shall continue for a period of one year thereafter unless otherwise in the Schedule provided. The Distributor agrees during said term to deliver to the Exhibitor, and the Exhibitor agrees to exhibit at said theatre during said term upon the date or dates therein provided for, a positive print of each of said motion pictures (except such as may be excluded as provided in Clauses Fifteenth and Seventeenth hereof). The Distributor warrants that each positive print will be in good physical condition for projection and exhibition, and will clearly reproduce the recorded sound in synchronism therewith if properly used upon standard reproducing equipment. If the recorded sound is not recorded upon a print, all references herein to a print shall be deemed to include the records, discs and any other device upon which sound may be recorded for reproduction with the exhibition of a print.

Damages—Failure to Deliver

(b) If the Distributor shall fail or refuse to deliver, or the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to exhibit during the term hereof, any of said motion pictures, excepting those which may be eliminated as provided in Clause Fifteenth hereof, and those which may not be generally released as provided in Clause Seventeenth hereof or if the Distributor shall deliver to the Exhibitor a print of any motion picture which print shall be determined was not in condition for exhibition and for the reproduction of sound as provided in Clause Second, the Exhibitor or the Distributor, as the case may be, shall pay as liquidated damages a sum equal to the fixed sum herein specified as the rental of each such motion picture or a sum computed as provided in Clause Third (c) hereof, if the rental of any such motion picture is to be determined, either in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre or any part thereof or upon a percentage of such receipts and a fixed sum.

Payment

THIRD: (a) Exhibitor agrees to pay for such license as to each such motion picture the fixed sums specified in the Schedule at least three (3) days in advance of the date of delivery of a print thereof at the Distributor's exchange or of the date of shipment to the Exhibitor from another exhibitor, unless after the acceptance of this application by the Distributor such payment shall be otherwise agreed to by the Distributor in writing signed by the Distributor at its main office in New York City. All payments hereunder shall be made to the Distributor at the City in which is located the exchange from which the Exhibitor is served.

Percentage Bookings

(b) If the rental of any of such motion pictures is to be determined either in whole or in part upon the admission receipts of said theatre or any part thereof, the Exhibitor agrees to pay such rental immediately after the last exhibition upon the last date of the exhibition of each such motion picture or if requested by the Distributor at the end of each day's exhibition. In each such case the Exhibitor shall deliver to the Distributor immediately after the last exhibition upon each date of exhibition of each such motion picture a correct itemized statement of the gross receipts of said theatre for admission thereto upon each such date. Such statement, if requested by the Distributor, shall be made upon forms furnished by the Distributor and shall be signed by the Exhibitor or the Manager or Treasurer of said theatre and the Cashier thereof and shall include a statement of such facts and figures as may be provided in the Schedule to be furnished by the Exhibitor. Upon the exhibition date or dates of each motion picture an authorized representative of the Distributor is hereby given the right to verify the sale of all tickets of admission to said theatre, and the receipts therefrom; and for such purpose shall have access to the theatre, including the box office, and also the right to examine all relevant entries relating to such gross receipts in all the Exhibitor's books and records, and if hereunder it is provided that the Exhibitor make certain expenditures and/or deductions, to examine all entries relating to such expenditures and/or deductions. Such right of access and examination of the Exhibitor's books and records limited as aforesaid, shall continue for a period of four (4) months after the receipt by the Distributor of each such statement. The Distributor agrees, unless such representative is in the continuous employ of the Distributor or employed as a checker, not to employ as a representative for such purpose any person a resident of or employed in the place where the said theatre is located, other than a person engaged in business as an accountant. The Distributor agrees that any information obtained pursuant to the provisions of this clause will be treated as confidential, excepting in any arbitration proceeding or litigation in respect to this license.

Liquidated Damages—Percentage Bookings

(c) If the Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit any of said motion pictures as herein provided and the rental or any part thereof is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the admission receipts of said theatre, the Exhibitor shall pay the Distributor as liquidated damages for each day the Exhibitor fails or refuses to exhibit such motion pictures, in addition to any fixed sums payable hereunder in respect of such motion picture, a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by the distributor was exhibited thereat during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date or dates when said motion picture should have been so exhibited hereunder, or if no feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety day period, then a sum equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre during the period of thirty operating days immediately prior to the date or dates when such motion pictures should have been exhibited; provided, that if the Exhibitor shall exhibit such motion picture for less than the full number of days provided for in the Schedule, for each day less than said full number of days, the sum equal to such percentage shall be computed upon a sum equal to sixty-five (65%) per cent of the gross receipts of said theatre during the last day of the exhibition thereat of such motion picture. A sworn statement of the said daily gross receipts shall be delivered by the Exhibitor to the Distributor upon demand therefor.

Delivery and Return of Prints

FOURTH: (a) The Distributor agrees within a reasonable time after each of said motion pictures is generally released for public exhibition and becomes available for exhibition hereunder by the Exhibitor, to deliver a print thereof to the Exhibitor.

(b) The public exhibition of any of said motion pictures for three (3) consecutive days at prices usually charged for admission to the theatre where so exhibited in the territory wherein is located the exchange from which the exhibitor is served, excepting any "road show," "tryout," "preview," or "pre-release" exhibitions thereof, shall be deemed the general release for public exhibition of such motion picture but only in such territory. A "pre-release" exhibition shall be deemed any exhibition because of seasonal conditions making desirable exhibitions in advance of general release as herein defined.

(c) The Exhibitor agrees to exhibit each of said motion pictures in the order of its general release by the Distributor in the exchange territory in which said theatre is located. The Exhibitor shall have the right to select any of the motion pictures for exhibition out of the order of its general release, subject to prior runs and/or protection granted other exhibitors, on the date or dates determined as provided in Article Sixth hereof or otherwise agreed upon, but only upon the following conditions (a) that the Exhibitor is not in default hereunder and shall have fully complied with all the provisions, if any, set forth in the Schedule for the exhibition of one or more of said motion pictures at specified intervals; and (b) that the Distributor and the Exhibitor shall then agree upon the date or dates upon which all of the motion pictures generally released prior to the general release of such motion picture and available for exhibition hereunder shall be exhibited by the Exhibitor, which date or dates shall be within thirty (30) days from the first exhibition date of the motion picture to be exhibited out of the order of its general release; or in the alternative the Exhibitor shall then pay to the Distributor the license fee for each of such motion pictures then generally released and available for exhibition hereunder, and as to any thereof which shall not be exhibited by the Exhibitor within thirty days from the first exhibition date of the motion picture to be exhibited out of the order of its general release, the grant of the run and protection period in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor. Upon the failure or refusal of the Exhibitor to exhibit any of such motion pictures then generally released and available for exhibition hereunder within said thirty day period or to pay the license fee thereof, the right of the Exhibitor to thereafter select for exhibition any motion picture out of the order of its general release shall be forfeited. The provisions of this paragraph (c) shall not be deemed to limit or qualify the provisions of Article Sixth hereof excepting as in this paragraph (c) specifically provided.

(d) The Distributor shall make deliveries hereunder to the Exhibitor or to the Exhibitor's authorized agent, by delivery at the Distributor's exchange, or to a common carrier, or to the United States Postal authorities. If deliveries are made to a carrier or to a post office, they shall be made in time for prints to reach the place where the said theatre is located in time for inspection and a projection thereof before the usual time for opening said theatre.

(e) Exhibitor agrees to return immediately after the last exhibition on the last date of exhibition licensed, each print received hereunder, with its reels and containers, to the exchange of the Distributor from which the Exhibitor is served or as otherwise directed by the Distributor in the same condition as when received, reasonable wear and tear due to proper use excepted. Exhibitor agrees to pay all costs of transportation of such prints, reels, and containers from the Distributor's exchange or the last previous exhibitor having possession of the same, and return to the Distributor's exchange; or if directed by the Distributor, to ship such positive prints elsewhere than to the Distributor's exchange transportation charges collect. It is agreed that the delivery of a positive print properly directed and packed in the container furnished by the Distributor therefor, to a carrier designated or used by the Distributor and proper receipt therefor obtained by the Exhibitor, shall constitute the return of such positive print by the Exhibitor.

(f) If Exhibitor fails to or delays the return of any positive print to the Distributor or fails to forward or delays forwarding (as directed by the Distributor) any such print to any other exhibitor, the Exhibitor agrees to pay the Distributor the damage, if any, so caused the Distributor and in addition the damage, if any, so caused such other exhibitor. The Exhibitor shall have the right to participate in any compromise of or intervene in any arbitration or legal proceeding based upon any claim for such damage asserted against the distributor by another exhibitor; notice of which shall be given the Exhibitor by the Distributor.

Loss and Damage to Prints

FIFTH: The Exhibitor shall pay to the Distributor a sum equal to the cost of replacement at the Distributor's exchange for each linear foot of any print, lost, stolen or destroyed or injured in any way in the interval between the delivery to and the return thereof by the Exhibitor in full settlement of all claims for such loss, theft, destruction or injury. Such payment, however, shall not transfer title to or any interest in any such positive print to the Exhibitor or any other party, nor release the Exhibitor from any liability arising out of any breach of this agree-

ROADSHOW CLAUSE OPTIONAL

Inserted near the end of the new uniform agreement, along with other clauses which are optional with the distributor, appears one governing roadshows which may be exercised by the distributor if it is in keeping with regular sales policies. It reads, in part:

"The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit and/or cause to be exhibited as a "roadshow," at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder, such of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as the distributor may from time to time select and determine, provided, however, that such roadshow exhibitions shall be at theatres at which admission prices for evening performances, during such exhibitions thereof, of not less than one dollar shall be charged for the majority of the orchestra seats, and further provided that, except in the cities of New York and Los Angeles, not more than two of such motion pictures shall be so roadshown."

15 PER CENT CANCELLATION PROVIDED

ment. The Distributor shall at the option of the Exhibitor repay or credit to the Exhibitor any sums paid by the Exhibitor for any lost or stolen print, excepting "news reels," upon the return of such lost or stolen print to the Distributor within sixty (60) days after the date when the same should have been returned hereunder. The Exhibitor shall not be liable for the damage or destruction of any print, provided the Exhibitor establishes such damage or destruction occurred while in transit from the Exhibitor. The Exhibitor shall immediately notify the Distributor's exchange by telegram of the loss, theft or destruction of or damage or injury to any print. If any print shall be received from the Exhibitor by the Distributor or any subsequent exhibitor in a damaged or partially destroyed condition it shall be deemed to have been so damaged or destroyed by the Exhibitor unless the latter, immediately after the first public exhibition thereof shall have telegraphed the Distributor's exchange that such print was received by the Exhibitor in a damaged or partially destroyed condition, and setting forth fully the nature of such damage and the amount of footage so damaged or destroyed.

Selection of Play Dates

SIXTH: Unless otherwise agreed upon or unless definitely specified or otherwise provided for in the Schedule, the exhibition date or dates of each of said motion pictures shall be determined as follows:

1. Subject to prior runs and/or protection granted or hereafter granted by the Distributor to the other exhibitors and within a reasonable time after a print or prints of any of said motion pictures are received at the exchange of the Distributor out of which the exhibitor is served, and provided the Exhibitor is not in default hereunder, the Distributor shall mail to the Exhibitor a notice in writing of the date when each such motion picture will be available for exhibition by the Exhibitor (which date is hereinafter referred to as the "available date"). Such notice shall be mailed to the Exhibitor at least fifteen (15) days before the available date therein specified.

2. Within fourteen (14) days after the mailing of such notice, the Exhibitor shall select an exhibition date or dates not theretofore assigned to another exhibitor or other exhibitors, within the period commencing upon the available date and ending thirty (30) days thereafter and give to the Distributor written notice of the date or dates so selected.

3. Upon the failure of the Exhibitor to so select such date or dates the Distributor shall designate such date or dates by mailing written notice thereof to the Exhibitor.

Protection and Run

SEVENTH: The Distributor agrees not to exhibit or grant a license to exhibit any of said motion pictures for exhibition in conflict with the "run" or prior to the expiration of the "protection period" if any in the Schedule specified at any theatre therein named or within the territorial limits therein specified. Such period of protection as to each of said motion pictures shall be computed from the last date of the exhibition thereof licensed hereunder. If protection is granted against a named theatre or theatres indicating that it is the intention of the Distributor to grant such protection against all theatres in the immediate vicinity of the Exhibitor's theatre then unless otherwise provided in the Schedule, such protection shall include any theatre in such vicinity thereafter erected or opened.

Description of Pictures

EIGHTH: (a) The Distributor shall have and hereby reserves the right in the sole discretion of the Distributor to change the title of any of the said motion pictures to make changes in, alterations and adaptations of any story, book or play and to substitute for any thereof any other story, book or play. The Distributor also shall have and hereby reserves the right to change the director, the cast or any member thereof of any of said motion pictures.

(b) The Exhibitor shall not be required to accept for any feature motion picture described in the Schedule as that of the following named star or stars any motion picture of any other star or stars: .... nor to accept any other feature motion pictures in place of any thereof in the Schedule which are designated "no substitutes," provided that not more than twenty (20%) per cent of the total number of feature motion pictures specified in the Schedule, other than the motion pictures of said star or stars, are so designated. The right of rejection conferred on the Exhibitor by this clause is in addition to the right of exclusion provided in Clause Fifteenth hereof.

(c) The Distributor warrants that none of said motion pictures are reissues of old negatives, old negatives retitled or foreign produced by a foreign producer, excepting those specifically specified as such in the Schedule; and further that none of said motion pictures contains or will contain any advertising matter for which compensation is received by the Distributor, or any subsidiary or affiliate of the Distributor.

Advertising Prior to First Run

NINTH: (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a subsequent run of the said motion pictures the Exhibitor shall not advertise any thereof by any means of advertising prior to or during the exhibition of any one of said motion pictures by any other exhibitor having the right to a prior run thereof and charging admission prices higher than the prices charged for admission to the Exhibitor's theatre, excepting advertising inside the theatre not intended for removal therefrom by the public, unless the first date of exhibition hereunder of any such motion picture shall be within fifteen (15) days from the last exhibition date of such prior run exhibition, in which case the Exhibitor shall have the right to advertise such motion picture provided the Exhibitor does not in any advertising state that the prices charged for admission are or will be less than the admission prices charged by the Exhibitor having the first or prior run of such motion picture. Nothing in this clause shall be deemed to prohibit the Exhibitor from advertising generally all of said motion pictures as a group but such general advertising shall not refer to any one of said motion pictures during its exhibition by any other exhibitor having the first or immediately prior run thereof, excepting as herein provided.

(b) For a breach of the provisions of this clause the Distributor shall have in addition to all other rights the right to exclude from this license any motion pictures advertised in violation of the provisions hereof by written notice to such effect mailed to the Exhibitor and upon the mailing of such notice the license of such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor, unless arbitration is herein provided for and immediately upon the receipt of any such notice of exclusion the Exhibitor by written notice given to the Distributor shall deny breaching any of the provisions of this clause, in which case the question of fact raised by such denial shall be determined by arbitration.

Acceptance by Distributor

TENTH: Until accepted in writing by an officer of or any person authorized by the Distributor, and notice of acceptance sent to the Exhibitor this instrument shall be deemed only an application for a license under copyright, and may be withdrawn by the Exhibitor any time before such acceptance. Unless such notice of acceptance is sent the Exhibitor by mail or telegraph within fifteen (15) days after the date thereof, if the said theatre of the Exhibitor is located east of the Mississippi river, and within thirty (30) days after the date thereof if located west of said river, said application shall be deemed to have been withdrawn. The deposit by the Distributor of any check or other consideration given by the Exhibitor at the time of application as payment for any purpose or the delivery of a print of any of said motion pictures shall not be deemed an acceptance hereof by the Distributor.

Changes in Writing

ELEVENTH: This license agreement is complete and all promises, representations, understandings and agreements in reference thereto have been expressed herein. No change or modification hereof shall be binding upon the Distributor unless in writing signed by an officer of or any person duly authorized by the Distributor at its main office in New York City, excepting in an emergency and only then, a change or modification may be consented to in writing but only by the representative of the Distributor managing the Distributor's exchange out of which the Exhibitor is served provided such change or modification does not change or modify the run, and/or protection period, or decrease any rental specified in the Schedule.

Assignment on Sale of Theatre

TWELFTH: This license shall not be assigned by either party without the written consent of the other, provided, that if the Exhibitor sells the said theatre or transfers any interest therein and is not in default hereunder, the Exhibitor may assign this license to the purchaser of the theatre or of such interest without the written consent of the Distributor but any such assignment shall not be valid or of any effect hereunder unless a written acceptance thereof by the assignee assuming the obligations of the Exhibitor shall be delivered to the Distributor. Any such assignment shall not release the Exhibitor from any liability hereunder unless such release from liability is consented to by the Distributor in writing.

Taxes

THIRTEENTH: The Exhibitor shall pay to the Distributor upon demand, any tax, fee or other like charge now and/or hereafter imposed or based upon the delivery and/or the exhibition of prints of motion pictures and/or upon the sums payable under this license by the Exhibitor to the Distributor. If under any statute or ordinance any such tax, fee or other like charge is or shall be payable or paid by the Distributor and the exact amount payable hereunder by the Exhibitor is not therein definitely fixed or cannot be exactly determined, then the Exhibitor shall pay such part of any such tax, fee or other like charge paid or payable by the Distributor as shall be fixed in the manner determined by the then President of the American Arbitration Association.

Prevention of Performance

FOURTEENTH: If the Exhibitor shall be prevented from exhibiting or the Distributor from delivering any of the said motion pictures for causes beyond their direct control then this license in respect to each such motion picture shall terminate and revert to the Distributor without liability on the part of either party, provided reasonable written notice of such termination and the cause thereof is given.

Option to Exclude if Group Licensed

FIFTEENTH: (a) If the total number of feature motion pictures offered to the Exhibitor by the Distributor, at one time, shall have been licensed by the Distributor hereunder, and the rental of each thereof averages less than Four Hundred ($400.00) Dollars, or if the rental of each is to be computed upon a percentage of the receipts of the Exhibitor's theatre, that the rental of each feature motion picture exhibited at the said theatre during a period of one (1) year prior to the term hereof, shall have averaged less than Four hundred ($400.00) Dollars, the Exhibitor shall have the right to exclude from this license, first not to exceed five (5%) per cent of the total number of feature motion pictures licensed hereunder; thereafter to further exclude not to exceed five (5%) per cent of said total number; and/or lastly to further exclude not to exceed five (5%) per cent of said total number, the aggregate number of feature pictures so excluded in no event to exceed fifteen (15%) per cent of the total number licensed hereunder; provided that the Exhibitor is not in default hereunder and shall have fully complied with all of the provisions, if any set forth in the Schedule for the exhibition of one or more of said feature motion pictures at specified intervals; and provided further that the Exhibitor shall give to the Distributor written notice of the Exhibitor's election to exclude any of said feature motion pictures not later than fourteen (14) days before the date or dates fixed for its exhibition hereunder and at the same time: (1) as to each feature motion picture excluded in the first five per cent of the total number so excluded to pay to the Distributor the rental therefor specified in the Schedule; (2) as to each feature motion picture included in the five per cent of the total number thereafter so excluded to pay to the Distributor one-half of the rental thereof specified in the Schedule; and (3) as to each feature motion picture included in the five (5%) per cent of the total lastly so excluded there shall be added to the rental of the motion pictures then remaining to be delivered hereunder an amount at least equal to the aggregate of the rentals of the motion pictures so lastly excluded, apportioned equally to each or to any one or more thereof, selected by the Exhibitor, upon notice to such effect given to the Distributor, and the exhibition period specified in the Schedule of any thereof of such motion pictures so selected may be, at the option of the Exhibitor upon written notice to such effect, ratably extended for such number of days, as the rental thereof specified in the Schedule plus the amount added as herein provided, permits. In computing such number of days fractions of more than one-third shall be deemed one day.

(b) On or before the fifteenth (15th) day after the end of each three (3) months period of the term of this license, the Distributor shall repay to the Exhibitor a sum equal to the amount paid by the Exhibitor to the Distributor as rental of the feature motion pictures first excluded by the Exhibitor as provided in Paragraph (a) of this clause, during such three months period provided that during such three months period the Exhibitor shall have exhibited as herein provided, all of the feature motion pictures licensed hereunder then generally released and available for exhibition hereunder by the Exhibitor, excepting those, if any, excluded as provided in this clause and shall have paid to the Distributor at the time herein specified the rental of each thereof.

(c) For the purpose of this clause only, the rental or any part thereof of each feature motion picture which is to be computed in whole or in part upon a percentage of the receipts of said theatre, shall be deemed to be that amount or part thereof which is equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of such theatre on each date any feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited thereat during the period of ninety (90) days prior to the date of the Exhibitor's written notice to exclude such feature motion picture, or if

CANCELLATION EXTENDED

Privileges accorded exhibitors on cancellation of pictures have been increased in the new contract which is now ready for approval by exhibitors and distributors. The clause is said to represent the most liberal cancellation proposition ever offered, permitting up to 15 per cent on a group contract. The agreement also covers midnight shows, which are prohibited unless permission is expressly granted by the distributor. No picture shall be exhibited prior to six a.m. on the day of exhibition, which means that it cannot be pre-shown late the night before.

VOLUNTARY ARBITRATION INCLUDED

no feature motion picture distributed by the Distributor was exhibited at such theatre during said ninety (90) days period, then the rental or part thereof shall be deemed to be that amount or part thereof which is equal to such percentage of the average daily gross receipts of said theatre during the period of thirty (30) operating days immediately prior to the date of said written notice to exclude such feature motion picture.

(d) In computing said percentages of the total number of feature motion pictures fractions of less than one-half shall be disregarded.

(e) Upon the failure or refusal of the Exhibitor to fully and completely comply with each and every condition hereinabove in this Clause specified and upon which the Exhibitor is granted the right to exclude any of the feature motion pictures licensed hereunder, such right to exclude any feature motion picture and thereafter to exclude from this license additional feature motion pictures, shall thereupon forthwith terminate and shall not again be granted hereunder during the term hereof.

(f) Upon the exclusion of each of the feature motion pictures permitted by the provisions of this clause the run and protection period, if any, granted the Exhibitor in respect thereto shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license thereupon shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

First Run Exhibitions

SIXTEENTH: (a) If the Exhibitor is granted a first run of the said motion pictures, the exhibitor shall exhibit each of the feature motion pictures excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this Clause within the period beginning with the date scheduled and announced by the Distributor for the general release of each feature motion picture in the territory wherein is located the exchange of the distributor out of which the Exhibitor is served and ending one hundred and twenty (120) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the first exhibition date of any of the said motion pictures shall occur on a date later than ninety (90) days after its scheduled and announced general release date, then the period of protection of such motion picture shall be reduced so as to expire one hundred and twenty (120) days after said scheduled date of its general release. If the Exhibitor is granted a first run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days, the grant of the said first run and the protection period in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor, with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this clause provided.

Second Run Exhibitions

(b) If the Exhibitor is granted a second run of the said motion pictures and any other exhibitor having been granted the first run thereof immediately prior to such second run fails to exhibit any of the feature motion pictures, excepting those described in Paragraph (d) of this clause within the said period of one hundred and twenty (120) days specified in Paragraph (a) of this clause, the Exhibitor shall exhibit each such feature motion picture within the period beginning with the date of the expiration of the said one hundred and twenty (120) days period and ending fourteen (14) days therafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the Exhibitor is granted a second run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said fourteen (14) days period the grant of such second run and the protection period if any in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the distributor with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in Paragraph (e) of this clause provided.

Subsequent Runs Exhibitions

(c) If the Exhibitor is granted a run subsequent to a second run of the said motion pictures and any other Exhibitor having been granted the second run thereof immediately prior to such subsequent run fails to exhibit any of the feature motion pictures, excepting those described in paragraph (d) of this clause within the said period of fourteen (14) days specified in paragraph (b) of this clause the Exhibitor shall exhibit each feature motion picture within the period beginning with the date of the expiration of the said fourteen day period and ending seven (7) days thereafter, notwithstanding any provision of Clause Sixth hereof to the contrary. If the Exhibitor is granted a run subsequent to a second run of the said motion pictures and the Exhibitor fails to exhibit any feature motion picture within said seven (7) day period, the grant of such subsequent run and the protection period if any in respect thereof shall be deemed waived by the Exhibitor and the license fee as to such feature motion picture shall thereupon forthwith become due and payable to the Distributor with the right to the Exhibitor to exhibit such feature motion picture as hereinafter in paragraph (e) of this clause provided.

Extended Runs

(d) Any of the motion pictures which shall have been exhibited at any theatre in the said territory for more than one show week prior to the run granted the Exhibitor shall be excepted from the provisions of this clause and of paragraph (b) of Clause Fourth.

Exhibition After Revocation of Run and Protection

(e) Upon the waiver of the grant of the run and/or the protection period of any feature motion picture as provided in paragraphs (a), (b) or (c) of this clause, the Exhibitor upon payment of the sum or sums payable hereunder as provided in this clause for the license to exhibit such feature motion picture, shall have the right to exhibit the same hereunder upon a date or date not in conflict with any run and/or protection period granted or hereafter granted to other exhibitors, upon written request mailed or delivered to the Distributor within sixty (60) days after the last date upon which such feature motion picture should have been exhibited by the Exhibitor as provided in this clause. Failing to make such request within said period of sixty (60) days the license to exhibit such feature motion picture granted hereunder shall terminate and revert to the Distributor.

If the provisions of this clause shall in anywise be in conflict with the provisions of any other license agreement made and entered into by the Distributor with any other exhibitor prior to September 1, 1933, the provisions of this clause shall be deemed to be subordinate and subject to the provisions of such other license agreement.

Pictures Not Generally Released

SEVENTEENTH: If any of the said motion pictures described in the Schedule shall not be generally released by the Distributor for distribution in the United States during the period beginning..... ..... and ending....., each such motion picture, but not to exceed a total of five thereof, shall be excluded from this license, upon written notice to such effect given to the exhibitor by the Distributor prior to fifteen (15) days before the end of said period, unless the Exhibitor shall give written notice to the Distributor not later than thirty (30) days after the end of said period that the Exhibitor elects to exhibit hereunder all such motion pictures if generally released during the year immediately following the end of said period. If such notice of election is given as aforesaid the Distributor shall deliver and the Exhibitor shall exhibit each of such motion pictures upon the terms and conditions of this license excepting that any thereof which are not so generally released within the said following year shall also be excepted and excluded from this license. In such case the Distributor may exhibit and license for exhibition each of such motion pictures so excluded when and where desired by the Distributor and all claims of the Exhibitor in respect thereof are hereby expressly waived and the Distributor released and discharged therefrom by the Exhibitor.

EIGHTEENTH: If the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to pay the rental of any of such motion pictures as provided in this license or to furnish statements of the receipts of said theatre, if any are required hereunder, or to give the Distributor's representative access to the said theatre or its box office and/or the Exhibitor's books and records relative to motion pictures the rentals of which are based upon the said theatre's admission receipts as herein provided, or if the Exhibitor shall exhibit or permit the exhibition of any of said motion pictures at any time or place other than as herein specified, or if the Exhibitor becomes insolvent or is adjudicated a bankrupt, or executes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or if a receiver is appointed for any of the property of the Exhibitor, or if the Exhibitor voluntarily or by operation of law should lose control of the said theatre or of his said interests therein making it impossible for the Exhibitor to exhibit the said motion pictures at the said theatre, then upon the happening of any one or more of said events, the Distributor may at its option, (1) terminate this license agreement, or (2) suspend the delivery of additional motion pictures hereunder until such default or defaults should cease and be remedied. It is agreed that the exercise of any of said remedies by the Distributor shall be in addition to and without prejudice to any right or remedy of the Distributor against the Exhibitor at law or in equity and/or otherwise provided for in this license agreement.

Cutting or Alteration of Prints

NINETEENTH: The Exhibitor shall exhibit each print in its entirety and shall not copy, duplicate, subrent or part with possession of any print. The Exhibitor shall not cut or alter any print, excepting to make necessary repairs thereto, or when required by any duly constituted public official or authority or with the written or telegraphic consent of the distributor. The Exhibitor however may cut the print of a news reel.

Optional Arbitration Clause

OPTIONAL CLAUSE: The following Clause Twentieth is optional with the parties hereto. If it is desired to make such clause a part of this license, the Exhibitor and the dully authorized representative of the Distributor shall sign their respective names where indicated immediately following this paragraph.

It is agreed by and between the parties that Clause Twentieth, providing for voluntary arbitration of disputes arising hereunder, shall be included as a part of this license.

Representative of the Distributor authorized to agree to the following Clause Twentieth.

.....
Exhibitor.

Arbitration

TWENTIETH: The Exhibitor and the Distributor respectively, freely and voluntarily agree that as a condition precedent to the commencement of any action or proceeding in any court by either of them, to determine, enforce or protect the legal rights of either hereunder, each shall submit all claims and controversies arising hereunder for determination by arbitration to an Arbitration Board (hereby expressly waiving the oath of the arbitrators) which shall consist of four members, each of whom shall be engaged in the motion picture business, and two of whom to be appointed by the Exhibitor, and the remaining two to be appointed by the Distributor.

Upon the written request of the Distributor or the Exhibitor for the arbitration of any dispute or controversy arising hereunder, the party making such request shall name therein two arbitrators stating the business address and business or business connection of each and shall designate therein the date, time and place of the hearing of such controversy. The date of such hearing shall not be earlier than seven (7) days from the date of the sending of such notice, unless it shall be claimed in such notice that irreparable injury will result unless there is a speedy determination of such controversy in which case such hearing may be designated to be held earlier than said seven (7) day period.

Within five (5) days after the mailing of such request for arbitration, the party upon whom such request is made shall name two arbitrators in a written notice mailed or delivered to the other party, stating therein the business address and business or business connection of each arbitrator. If either party fails or refuses to name the arbitrators as herein provided or if any arbitrator so named shall fail or refuse to act, or be unable to serve or shall be challenged and others are or another arbitrator qualified and then available to act is not then appointed, others or another arbitrator may be appointed by the other party as the case may be.

No member of the Arbitration Board shall hear or determine any controversy in which he has an interest direct or indirect and any member having such interest shall be disqualified to act.

If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to reach a decision, then they, or a majority of them shall immediately select an umpire who shall not be engaged in the motion picture business. In such case the hearing before the umpire shall be at such time and place as the umpire shall designate and shall be had before the umpire alone, the arbitrators not to be permitted to attend the hearing before the umpire. If the arbitrators or a majority of them are unable to agree upon the selection of an umpire, the American Arbitration Association shall be requested to make such selection.

The Arbitration Board shall have general power to determine such dispute or controversy as shall be submitted, to make findings of fact in respect thereof and to direct specific performance of a contract, and/or that the same has been breached in whole or in part, and/or that damages on such account shall be paid. The Board of Arbitration shall have the power only to give force and effect to the provisions of this license agreement and the rights or obligations of the parties thereunder; provided that if after a full hearing of any controversy submitted for arbitration hereunder, the arbitrators or a majority of them are of the opinion that because of unusual circumstances disclosed at such hearing, a strict enforcement of the provisions of this license agreement would impose undue hardship upon one of the parties, the arbitrators or a majority of them may recommend in writing to the parties a settlement of such controversy upon such terms and conditions deemed by the arbitrators fair and just. If

SEVERAL CLAUSES OPTIONAL

Optional clauses in the proposed uniform exhibition contract have to do with arbitration, advertising accessories, admission prices, midnight shows and roadshows. Arbitration would be governed by a written request from the exhibitor and provides for the creation of local boards with equal representation. Following formal request of the exhibitor, the distributor must also sign an agreement before the arbitration section becomes a part of the contract. If the arbitrators fail to settle the dispute, or if either party disagrees with their decision, the controversy shall be deemed withdrawn and then submitted in written form to the proposed new national appeal board.

OPTIONAL PROVISIONS

such settlement is not agreed to by the parties within five (5) days after the receipt of a copy of such recommendation, the controversy shall be deemed withdrawn from the arbitrators and shall be submitted, with a written statement of all of the facts adduced at the hearing before the arbitrators together with all documentary evidence, to the National Appeal Board in New York. The disposition by the National Appeal Board of any such recommendation shall be final and binding upon the parties hereto.

The hearing of any such controversy shall be had before the Arbitration Board in the city wherein is situated the exchange of the Distributor from which the Exhibitor is served, unless the parties agree in writing that such hearing be had in some other place. If either party fails or refuses to submit to arbitration any such claim or controversy, the other party may apply to a United States District Court, or to any other Court, including a court of a state in which such hearing would otherwise not be had, for an order to proceed to arbitrate in which case such hearing shall be had in such place as the court to which such application is made may lawfully direct.

The parties hereto further agree to abide by and forthwith comply with any decision or award of the arbitrators, or a majority of them and consent that any such decision or award shall be enforceable in or by any Court of competent jurisdiction pursuant to the law of such jurisdiction now or hereafter in force.

If the Exhibitor shall fail or refuse to submit to arbitration any such claim or controversy or to abide by and comply with the award of the arbitrators in respect thereto within 7 days the distributor may at its option suspend the deliveries of the motion pictures provided for in this and in each other existing license agreement between the parties hereto and/or terminate this and each such other license agreement; and upon such termination the aggregate of the license fees of all motion pictures specified in this and any other such license agreement then not exhibited forthwith shall become due and payable by the Exhibitor.

If the Distributor shall fail or refuse to submit to arbitration any such claim or controversy or to abide by and comply with the decision or the award of an Arbitration Board in respect thereto within seven (7) days, the exhibitor may at the option of the Exhibitor terminate this and any other existing license agreement between the parties hereto by mailing a notice to such effect to the Distributor within seven (7) days after such failure or refusal; and the Exhibitor shall have the rights and remedies provided in Clause Second (b) for failure to deliver motion pictures.

Any such termination by either party shall be without prejudice to any other right or remedy which the party so terminating may have by reason of any breach by the other party to this or any other existing agreement between the parties.

Each of the parties hereto, without notice to the other, may apply to any court having jurisdiction to make this agreement to arbitrate a rule or order of such court.

OPTIONAL CLAUSES

Advertising Accessories

The Exhibitor agrees to lease from the Distributor or the Distributor's authorized agent for use only in connection with the exhibition of each of the motion pictures exhibited hereunder and agrees not to sublease or sell the following advertising accessories:

Admission Prices

The Exhibitor during the whole of the licensed exhibition period of each of the motion pictures exhibited hereunder agrees to and shall charge for admission to said theatre the following prices:

Evenings: Adults, orchestra—balcony—children.

Matinees: Adults, orchestra—balcony—children.

If during any such period less than said admission prices is charged, the distributor in addition to all other rights hereunder shall have the right to immediately terminate the license of the motion picture then being exhibited, by written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor and upon the giving of such notice, the license of such motion picture shall forthwith terminate and revert to the distributor.

Midnight Shows

The license herein granted for the number of days specified in the schedule shall not include the right of exhibition at any time during said exhibition period prior to six A. M. on the date or first date of exhibition herein provided for unless exhibition prior to six A. M. on said date or first exhibition date is expressly granted in writing.

Roadshows

The Distributor shall have the right to exhibit and/or cause to be exhibited as a "roadshow," at any time prior to the exhibition thereof hereunder, such of the motion pictures licensed hereunder as the distributor may from time to time select and determine, provided, however, that such roadshow exhibitions shall be at theatres at which admission prices for evening performances, during such exhibitions thereof, of not less than one dollar shall be charged for the majority of the orchestra seats, and further provided that, except in the cities of New York and Los Angeles, not more than two of such motion pictures shall be so roadshown.

If any such roadshow exhibition shall be in the city of New York, N. Y., and if the exhibitor's theatre be situated in a territory then served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges located in said city, the distributor shall have the right to except and exclude from this license any such motion picture (not exceeding in the aggregate two of such motion pictures) so roadshown in said City upon sending written notice to such effect to the Exhibitor not later than eight weeks after the commencement of such roadshow exhibition in such city, provided the distributor shall by like notice except and exclude such motion picture from all other license agreements containing this clause and licensing the exhibition of such motion pictures in such territory. Such exception and exclusion shall not be affected in case the Distributor shall inadvertently omit to send such notice to any of such other exhibitors.

If any such roadshow exhibition shall be in the city of Los Angeles, Cal., and if the exhibitor's theatre be situated in the territory then served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges located in said city, the distributor shall have the right to except and exclude from this license any such motion picture not exceeding in the aggregate two of such motion pictures) so roadshown in said city, upon the same terms and conditions above provided for the exception and exclusion of motion pictures roadshown in the city of New York.

If and when any such roadshow exhibition (except any roadshow exhibition in New York and/or Los Angeles) shall be in the territory served by the Distributor's exchange or exchanges serving the Exhibitor's theatre, such motion picture so roadshown in such territory shall forthwith be excepted and excluded from this license. The Distributor shall send written notice to such effect, to the Exhibitor within fourteen (14) days after such roadshow exhibition commences.

The Distributor may so exercise such right to except and exclude any such motion picture from time to time, in the respective territories, as above defined, in the United States. Any motion picture so roadshown in any place in the United States, and not excepted and excluded from this license as aforesaid, shall not be deemed available for exhibition hereunder until after the completion of such roadshowing of such motion picture in the United States, and such motion picture shall be exhibited hereunder as and when available.

For each motion picture that the Distributor shall except and exclude, as aforesaid, the Exhibitor is hereby granted the option to except and exclude from this license (in addition to those which may be excluded as provided in Clauses Fifteenth and Seventeenth) one of the other motion pictures licensed hereunder, but only if the Exhibitor shall give to the Distributor written notice to such effect not later than fourteen days before the date fixed for the exhibition hereunder of such other motion picture. The Distributor may exhibit and/or license the exhibition of any and all motion pictures excepted and excluded from this license by the Distributor and/or the Exhibitor, as aforesaid, when and where desired by the Distributor, free from all claims of the Exhibitor in respect thereof and the license of each thereof shall forthwith upon exclusion as hereinbefore provided terminate and revert to the Distributor.

To Open Quittner-Paramount Trial in New York This Week

The damage suit for $5,100,000 brought by Joseph E. Quittner, exhibitor of Middletown, N. Y., against Paramount-Publix, will be heard late this week in the United States district court in New York. Disposition of a previous suit on the federal court calendar set the Quittner proceedings back several days.

LAEMMLE SAYS NO ON EXCLUSIVE PLAN

Occupying a full page in the latest issue of Universal Weekly, company house organ, Carl Laemmle, president, briefly but emphatically stated Universal's policy toward exclusive runs by a definite "No." The statement in full said: "In answer to the question whether Universal intends to sell pictures exclusively to any one theatre in any one territory, my answer is No!—Carl Laemmle."

Mr. Laemmle said later: "No substitute can ever be found for the value which accrues to a picture by giving it the widest possible distribution in the greatest number of theatres."

Death of Lefcourt Does Not Affect Remington Firm

The sudden death from heart disease in New York last Sunday of Abraham E. Lefcourt, one of the country's largest builders of skyscrapers and a real estate operator, will not affect the production activity of Remington Pictures, of which Mr. Lefcourt was president. Executive changes may occur later, it is understood.

The realty holdings of Mr. Lefcourt, who was 55, were estimated at more than $100,000,000 in 1928, and he was considered one of the largest property owners in midtown New York, where most of his massive office buildings were erected. Mr. Lefcourt was financial backer of Pioneer Film at the time that M. H. Hoffman was its active head.

RCA Victor Introduces New Fidelity Equipment

The RCA Victor Company has announced the development and introduction of a device known as the Highest Fidelity Photophone sound reproducing equipment for theatres and auditoriums of all sizes. The development is described by the company as an entirely new sound head that utilizes a rotating drum instead of a gate.

The existing all AC operated equipment is noted as the basis of the design for the new device. Four types of equipment have been designed: the Super size, for theatres seating from 2,500 to 4,000; Small size, 1,400 to 2,500 seats; Small size, 600 to 1,400 seats, and Special size, up to 600 seats.

HARDING CONQUERORS

LOVE MADE THEM CONQUERORS! . . .

Wars!...Panics!...Heartaches!...Heartbreaks! ...Such were the fires that forged the steel for their swords and their plows...for they came with Conquerors' blood in their veins and banners of courage flying! Out of their hearts flamed the faith of a dauntless nation ...and out of the thunderous hours they lived has come a drama deep as human passion!

A soul-stirring romance rolling across the screen in mighty heart-beats . . . America's story, its saga of courage, written eternally in the cities, the fields, the mountains...star-spangled with the faith of a great people.

DESTINED TO TAKE ITS PLACE AMONG THE GREAT ATTRACTIONS OF ALL TIME . . . . .

Production Costs Cut 15 Per Cent

by FRANCIS L. BURT
Washington Correspondent

An increase of 1.3 per cent in the number of motion pictures produced last year, but a decrease of 16 per cent in cost as compared with 1929 is shown by the United States Census Bureau in a preliminary report on the motion picture industry.

Total costs of production declined 17.6 per cent, it is reported, from $184,102,419 in 1929, date of the previous census, to $151,765,513 in 1931. Of this decline of $32,337,000, the figures disclose, $22,066,000 was in the production of negatives, which dropped from $128,496,710 to $106,429,997.

The number of studios and laboratories reporting for last year was 137 against 142 in 1929, a drop of 3.5 per cent. Employment dropped from an average of 19,602 in 1929 to 14,547 in 1931, or 25.8 per cent, whole compensation dropped from $85,027,612 to $69,889,497, or 17.8 per cent. Payments for contract work declined from $11,311,716 to $11,024,493, or 2.5 per cent, while the cost of materials, fuel and purchased electric energy declined from $38,441,025 to $31,543.048, or 17.9 per cent.

Statistics on production compiled by the bureau show an output last year of 1,220 theatrical films valued at $99,741,373 against 1,204 valued at $118,716,041 in 1929; news films valued at $3,422,129 against $6,152,286; advertising pictures valued at $2,873,998 against $3,377,292, and educational films valued at $392,497 against $251,091. The "theatrical" films are not all full length features.

Laboratory work included positive films costing $12,507,981 against $10,646,094 in 1929 and $14,020,012 against $21,104,878 received for work done for others; the value of other work done was $2,621,419 against $1,643,395, and receipts for use of studio facilities were $1,457,424 against $4,338,282.

Jacobson to Do Production Work

When Carl Laemmle returns to Universal City next week, he will take with him Sam B. Jacobson, "U's" newsreel editor who will engage in feature production work at Universal City. Mr. Jacobson started his reel duties November 23, 1929, with Graham McNamee as the "Talking Reporter." He began as a publicity man at Universal City. During his last year there he produced 12 single-reelers.

Mr. Jacobson's post will be filled by Allyn Butterfield, who has had 12 years' training in newsreel editorial work, three under Mr. Jacobson. He will be assisted by Linn Bonner and Henry Clay Bate.

Bickerton, Jr., on Advisory Board

Joseph P. Bickerton, Jr., well known attorney and producer, has been elected a member of the advisory board of the Chemical Bank and Trust Company's Times Square office in New York.

Central Park

(First National)

Comedy-Melodrama

A cruel zoo keeper, a hungry boy and an equally hungry girl who meet and fall in love, a nearly blind policeman, an escaped lion and an escaped lunatic, society swells, gangsters, the glamour of a big charity ball in the famous Casino, a sensational holdup, hot dog concessionaires, platoons of motor cops, squads of screaming motorcycles and an electrifying old-time "chase" in which almost everybody joins, a couple of killings and all the color of New York's renowned playground—these are the personalities, incidents and locale that go to make up "Central Park."

They turn a five and ten-cent yarn, that more than once seems bound for nowhere, into a farcical comedy melodrama giving it romance, drama, pathos, thrills, terror, suspense and novelty that swept a preview audience into gales of laughter. And when they weren't bubbling over with glee, they were intrigued by its romance, stirred by its drama, thrills and terror, and impressed by its human interest. On top of it all they seemed to be amazed that such a hodge-podge yarn could turn eventually into such a coherent story. It didn't seem to make any difference to them that both the lion and the lunatic got lost in the shuffle. They seemed to be enjoying a film that was neither sophisticated nor a burlesque, but surely was entertainment.

You will note that the running time is exceedingly short, which might indicate it was intended for straight program purposes. But the finished product gives the producing company something in the line of startlingly different entertainment. Maybe the cast doesn't feature any outstanding names that only need to be placed in the marquee to attract capacity houses, but where there is so much of all kinds of entertainment that average audiences appreciate that failing should make but little difference.

"Central Park" is no mean title. And such names as Blondell, Ford, Kibbee, Walthall and Armetta are well known enough to catch the fancy of theatre goers. More important than either, however, is the entertainment that is in the production. All of it crammed into 55 minutes' running time goes to make up a feature that properly sold to your patrons should bring the adults of both sexes in droves and provide the youngsters with a carnival of fun.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by John Adolfi. Screen play by Ward Morehouse and Earl Baldwin. Photographed by Sid Hickox. Release date, Dec. 10, 1932. Running time, 55 Minutes.

THE concept of this department is that the exhibitor is concerned not with any critic's idea of "how good?" or "how poor?" but rather with the question of precisely what the product is and what is to be done with it when and as it is played. The exhibitor, in general, is concerned with the special aspects of strength and of weakness in the product, its appeals and shortcomings, that he may adequately deal with it when he becomes its sponsor to his public. These "review" pages aim to aid the exhibitor as the retailer of the merchandise concerned.—THE EDITOR.

Uptown New York

(World Wide)

Dramatic Comedy

In this semi-dramatic romance, human interest, made more vivid by clever Jack Oakie comedy in which he is ably aided by George Cooper, Henry Armetta and Lee Moran, is the outstanding feature. A double-edged romance is the underlying idea. Dr. Max Silver is in love with Pat, but does not dare marry outside the fold of his own race. Yet he always wants the girl. Oakie, dumb about love but smartly ambitious about his penny-in-the-slot gum-machine business, finally wakes up to the fact that the girl means everything in the world to him.

At times, when the story tends to become too dramatic, the Oakie-Cooper-Armetta comedy lifts the suspense and starts the yarn off on a new task. Thus while retaining all the value of its dramatic moments, it forces the natural comedy which audiences expect from Oakie to stand out in startling contrast and give the picture that angle of human interest that is so much appreciated in screen romances.

Clever direction, in which the expert handling of characters, sequences and dialogue stands out prominently, adds to the interest and gives the various phases of the picture a novel and easily understood coherence.

The manner in which the romantic triangle is presented is quite unusual. It is evident that the romance between Dr. Silver and Pat is honest, and while audiences may figure that after he has married another girl he should forget the first, that angle is necessary in order to strengthen the relation between Oakie and Pat. The fact that the girl is so infatuated with the Doctor while Jack is trying so hard to be worthy of her and win her affections gives the story suspense, even after they are married, and when Dr. Silver performs an operation that fixes up her broken spine the audience is given another angle to consider.

For straight showmanship purposes, it seems that the title "Uptown New York" is foreign to the theme. Nevertheless, there is a certain glamour that should stimulate the curiosity of theatre-goers.

But probably the most effective way of capturing their interest will be through an advance campaign that stresses the cast names, with plenty of emphasis being placed upon Jack Oakie. His rising popularity should not be overlooked. Follow this line with angles that bring out the romance, drama and novel comedy. Remember that the recent World Wide releases, "The Crooked Circle" and "False Faces," have been better than ordinary entertainment and that this picture is in the same class.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Conquerors

(RKO Radio)

Romantic Drama

From either viewpoint, the story it tells, or the way in which it is acted, "The Conquerors" is timely, valuable and unusual. In one great sweep it touches the low and high spots of American history from the time this country embarked on the building of the western empire. Against a background that seems to be based on the premise, "America can and will," it is full of dramatic punches.

"The Conquerors" shows off Richard Dix and Ann Harding to better advantage than any others of their latest pictures. The same may be said of Guy Kibbee and Edna May Oliver, a pair whom your audiences should do plenty of talking about as they leave the theatre.

The history of the United States, to which is added the Dix-Harding romance, with Dix occupying a dual role, is the theme. The early pioneers across the Alleghanies, the building of the railroads, the wars, the panics, great personalities and great events, great inventions all follow in sequence. Coming right down to modern times, treating men and events that are familiar to all but the youngest children, such as the World War and our part in it, the troops coming home, the after-war depression—a scene handled with graphic effect as the stock market rises amazingly, and then the crash.

While to some there may seem to be a too liberal use of stock and newsreel shots, the events which these sequences treat add greatly to the glamour. The way in which they have been fitted into the complete picture forces them to tell much of the story by using actualities to emphasize the plot.

"The Conquerors" is full of timely, interest-creating situations that make an easy task of building a real advance campaign. Once get over the idea that here is a vivid, romantic story of ourselves and the rest should be easy. The possibilities for sensational tieups with school, patriotic organization, civic group, merchant, and so on, are unlimited. It is that kind of picture that gives you every right to go to the mayor or governor and ask him to issue a proclamation urging the citizens to see it.

The selling of this picture to patrons will be mainly a local issue. If you think you are a showman, "The Conqueror" is the kind of box office material that will give you every opportunity to demonstrate your belief.

It has the stuff to give America a new grip on itself. It also has the stuff to make new box office records. Get your patrons to appreciate the first point and their interest will take good care of the second.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Drama

Modeled basically on the theme wherein the lives and activities of numbers of people center in one location with occasionally dramatic interludes, "Manhattan Tower" carries that idea over into the realm of the skyscraper office building.

The action remains in its entirety within the confines of the building, and direction has employed with rather telling effect the technique of the long angled shot from various unusual perspectives much in the manner of the European production. It serves nicely here to create an impression of massiveness, the power of brick and steel and the continuity of the related bits of action taking place on various floors.

The production is entertaining, having its touch of romance, its bit of comedy, its rather straightforward drama, and it is performed with reasonable effectiveness, even though the work lacks complete finish in certain instances.

The exhibitor, in his effort to sell the picture to his public, lacks the advantage of strong box office names though several of the players are known to be dependable performers. The best marquee names to be found in the cast are Mary Brian, Irene Rich, James Hall and Hale Hamilton. The showman, then, must rely for the most part on the type of story, its unusual and exclusive setting and the dramatic situations.

In the building, and the story, are Miss Brian, private secretary to Clay Clement, stock market gambler with the money of his firm; Hall, electrician working in the building's plant, her sweetheart; Miss Rich, estranged wife of Clement, seeking a divorce; Hamilton, attorney, in love with Miss Rich, and urging her to get that divorce. In a rushing series of events which cover a period of only a few hours during the business day, Miss Brian draws the savings of herself and Hall, giving it to Clement to invest, Miss Rich has a final scene with her husband, Hamilton by an appeal saves large deposits about to be withdrawn from the important banking institution which occupies the street floor of the building.

Hamilton's secretary, overhearing and misconstruing a statement made within the private office, rushes downstairs spreading the word of a run on the bank. High above, Miss Brian asks Clement to return her money. He refuses. Hall arrives on the scene and the fight which follows results in Clement's plunge through a window to his death in the street far below, thus straightening what appeared to be a highly tangled situation.

The brief idea of the story's content should indicate to the exhibitor the manner in which he may draw the attention of his patronage. The thought of the teeming life, drama, death and comedy which daily goes on within the walls of any huge office structure should certainly suggest innumerable angles for a hard hitting campaign, which in turn should bring a reasonably satisfactory result at the box office. There's nothing here for children.—Aaronson, New York.

No More Orchids

(Columbia)

Gay Drama

This rather gay domestic drama is made romantic by the rich girl, Carole Lombard, who wants to marry the poor boy, Lyle Talbot; whimsically comic by the ultra-modern and very young but white-haired Louise Closser Hale and the good fellow, pal-father, Walter Connolly; dramatic by the crabbed C. Aubrey Smith, who wants his granddaughter to marry a prince and also refuses to loan her father the money that would save his bank from crashing. All of it is made more punchy by some exceptionally clever and well delivered dialogue.

Colorful in story and elaborately mounted, it is probably a feature that will appeal more strongly to women than to men. At the same time, it may be too deep for any but the older youngsters.

Starting when Anne falls for Tony, only to have that boy rebuff her, the story provides some zippy fun aboard an ocean liner bound for New York. Home, the girl tells her hopes to her father, who is more of a pal than a dad. Aided by Grandma, he tries to bring the youngsters together. Offsetting their efforts is Uncle Cedric, who controls the money bags and has his heart set on Anne wedding a titled foreigner. An odd angle enters into the story, as Bill's business associates urge him to appeal to Cedric for funds to save their bank from crashing. The suspense is heightened as Anne tells Cedric she doesn't want to marry the prince, but when he threatens ruin for her father she agrees to it. Before the marriage can come off, however, Bill and Grandma lure Anne off to their country house where she is joined to Tony and her father, gay to the end, flies off to crash against a mountain, knowing that his insurance policies will take care of the bank as well as Anne.

While the rich girl-poor boy plot is far from new, there is a line of novelty and suspense in "No More Orchids" that gives its presentation here a unique freshness. The picture can be sold as catch entertainment. The lack of big star names does not hurt it any. The many gowns that Carole Lombard wears make it possible to stage a fashion show in connection with the feature. Also the angle of inquiring who is the best dressed actress on the screen should help to boost the feminine interest.

Go after matinee business strongly. Get the women enthusiastic about it and they should do the kind of talking that will take care of night business.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Columbia. Story by Grace Perkins. Screen play by Gertrude Purcell. Adaptation by Keene Thompson. Directed by Walter Lang. Photographed by Joseph August. Release date, November 25, 1932. Running time, 74 minutes.

You Said A Mouthful

(First National)

Comedy

Exciting comedy, dished up in hectic fashion that should tickle the funny bones of any kind of audience, is the keynote of this newest Joe E. Brown jamboree. It is full of those things in action and dialogue that first provoke broad grins and then turn loose gales of laughter. Also included is a lot of the typical Joe E. Brown type of romance, plenty of suspense and the delineation of an ocean marathon swim that presents novel underwater photography.

Brown is ably assisted by Farina of original "Our Gang" fame and Harry Gribbon. Romance is provided by Ginger Rogers. In the three ramifications which the plot permits—first, the office gang headed by Gribbon egging Brown on to the most preposterous ambitions; second, the discovery that Brown's million dollar inheritance amounts to only $5.80, and lastly the preparations for and the running of the great Catalina Island Channel swim give Brown every opportunity to demonstrate the kind of comedy in which patrons best like him.

The real fun starts when Brown and Farina embark for Catalina to get jobs as bus boys. Mistaken for a world champion swimmer, but deadly afraid of any kind of water, he is received as hero as his name (Holt) is the same as that of the favorite swimmer.

Disregarding all the folishness before the swim, in which Ginger Rogers makes him her hero, the race starts with Brown clad in what he thinks is a non-sinkable bathing suit which he has invented. Then the race. Sometimes swimming, sometimes walking along the bottom of the ocean, towed at blinding speed by a shark, he's seized with panic as he finds out that he is not wearing the nonsinkable suit. Finally comes the dash to victory after running into a mess of seaweed.

Brown in the role of an innocent fakir is continually "on the spot." Trapped into an exhibition of speedy aqua-planing, this sequence has Joe doing tricks that the most expert riders never dreamed of. As a great lover, he opens the doors wide for torrents of laughter.

With the title, "You Said a Mouthful," as a basis, there should be no difficulty in creating a campaign of fun and foolishness that should intrigue the curiosity of every kind of patron. The adults who want a good laugh will get a mouthful out of this one and it should be just what you want to show to the youngsters.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by Warner-First National. Directed by Lloyd Bacon. Original story by William B. Dover. Screen play by Robert Lord and Bolton Mallory. Photographed by Richard Towers. Release date, Nov. 26, 1932. Running time, 72 minutes.

Unusual

Carrying the audience into far-flung places on the globe, the Magic Carpet series of Fox has recorded with remarkable selective valuation salient features of a little-known life in a manner which brings it to America in sharp relief. In this particular subject, the camera roves about the frontier of India, picturing caravans of mules and camels moving across wild, rolling country infested with brigands, and at the same time stunning in its panoramic sweep. Ably has the camera recorded the scene, and interesting are the pictures of England's famed native India Army and the regiments of Tommy Atkins stationed there. A notable subject.—Running time, 9 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre receipts for the calendar week ended November 12, 1932, from 105 houses in 18 major cities totaled $1,369,017. The total for the preceding calendar week, ended November 5, was reported erroneously last week, the correct figure for 113 theatres in 19 cities having been $1,456,636. A decrease of $87,619 is therefore indicated this week in comparison with the previous week's total. During the later period four new low individual house records were established, while no new high figures were noted. This compares with three new "lows" and no new "highs" for the preceding week.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 150.—(A) Explain just how two- and three-phase current is produced. (B) How is two-phase usually transmitted? Three-phase? In this we refer to the wiring. (C) Should you attach a wire circuit half a mile long to a one-volt battery, the wires completely insulated from earth and from each other, would they show one volt of pressure at any point of their length? (D) Suppose you connect the positive of one battery or dynamo to the negative of a second one of similar characteristics and voltage, what would such a connection be called and what would be its effect? Suppose you connect the two negatives and the two positives together and connect the combination to a circuit. What is the combination called and what would be its effect?

Answer to Question No. 143

Bluebook School Question No. 143 was: "(A) Can you offer any illustrative proof that something does actually pass from one point to another when current 'flows'? (B) Does electric current seek to pass into the earth? (C) If you say that current generated by a dynamo has no affinity for the earth, explain why it often leaves the wires and flows into earth. (D) Explain, in your own words, just what takes place when current finds a path and passes from negative to positive."

Lode, T. Davis and T. Richards, M. T. Farrell, G. T. Stanhope, R. L. Myers and T. L. Cullen, D. Hendershot, B. Hodson and E. M. Johnson and S. G. True.

With compliments to Messrs. Rau and Evans, Lester Borst, G. E. Doe, S. G. Williams, T. Van Valkenburg and W. Broadbent for their excellent answers to Section A of the question, the answer of J. Wentworth impresses me as perhaps best. He says:

"Let us assume an electric dynamo at X, and 110-h.p. motor at Y, at a distance of 100 feet from the dynamo. Current (e.m.f.) is applied to the motor, which pulls a machine requiring all its rated 100-h. p. capacity.

"I believe we may stop right here and admit the fact that something has actually passed over, or through, the conductors connecting the power generating and the power-using source as proven, since it is not within the range of reason that such an amount of power, or power in any amount, for that matter, can be conveyed 100 feet, or any other distance, greater or smaller, unless something conveys it. There is no disputing the question that power has passed through or over those wires, so how may we reasonably dispute or even question the fact that something has passed through or over them? Just by what this power is conveyed is a matter now in dispute. But the very fact that power is conveyed is illustrative proof that something does pass or travel from one point to another. I repeat: power does that very thing."

(B) S. G. Williams says, "Electricity does not seek to pass into the earth unless it (the earth) offers a path or conductor by means of which it may reach the opposite pole of its source, the generator.

(C) T. Lavenburg says, "Electricity generated by a dynamo or a battery has no affinity for earth, except that it offers a path of sufficiently low resistance between points on conductors of opposite polarity attached to the generator, so that the voltage of the system may force the current over or through that path. Such grounded points may be close together or separated by considerable distance. If the points be near together, but by reason of dry earth or for some other cause, the resistance is high, little current will flow. It will constitute merely a 'leak'. Even though the points of grounding be far separated, but if by reason of water pipes, gas pipes or earth of high conductivity, the total resistance be low, the current flow may be heavy —even heavy enough to constitute a near approach to a 'short'. It is not a matter of length of the path offered through the earth, but of the resistance that path offers and the voltage of the system.

(D) We will listen to Rau and Evans on this one. They say, "When the electric current finds a path and passes from positive to negative, pressure is consumed, and thus power is generated, which if directed intelligently, may be employed in useful work. The device through which the work is made manifest may be a lamp, by means of which light is produced; a motor, by means of which pulling power is made available, or a resistance coil used for heating purposes. If the power be misdirected, it will still do work, most likely made manifest in the form of useless and perhaps dangerous heat."

WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

Oak Park, after a long struggle, finally licked the local blue law on Sunday shows, and exchange officials are predicting a similar change in the Evanston situation when that village holds its spring elections.

Courshon and Frank are the new owners of the Webster theatre.

Louis Matthews, who has been with National Screen Service as an artist, has joined the Filmack Company, thus giving Irving Mack not only a new artist but a chap who is pointed with pride as Film Row's best bowler.

John Joseph of RKO staged a screening of "Little Orphan Annie" at the Universal building projection room last Wednesday. In addition to exhibitors, many manufacturers who make Orphan Annie merchandise and candy were on hand.

Essaness is preparing to open the West End theatre.

Harry Lande, who has been representing Powers Pictures here, is preparing to open his own exchange in the Universal building and will soon announce a lineup of independent product.

H. R. Phillips, who heads Western Theatrical Premium Company and has been making his headquarters in the Allied office, has moved to 838 South Wabash. His organization has been augmented by W. H. Foster, who will handle the southern states, Tom Delaney, who will be Illinois and Wisconsin representative, and Jack Cohen in charge of the Michigan territory.

Nat Levine, producer of Mascot Pictures, was a visitor along the Row, stopping here to confer with Ben Judell, Mascot distributor.

Walter Babitz of the Grant theatre, Cicero, has been made organizer of the Illinois Allied unit and will devote his efforts to obtaining new members.

HOLQUIST

Big 4 to Resume Activity With Feature, Shorts Output

Big 4, independent company inactive since April, headed by John R. Freuler, and separate from Freuler Film Associates, which he also heads, plans immediate resumption of production activity. The program is to include westerns, melodramas and 52 short subjects.

Mr. Freuler has returned to the Coast from New York to supervise the preparation of the program, and to initiate the work of two units. Charles L. Glett, Big 4 vice-president, will handle distribution from the New York office.

Sophie Tucker in Short Films

Sophie Tucker, vaudeville and radio star, will make two one reel talking-singing pictures for Stanley Distributing Company. These two one reel subjects will be part of a series being made by Stanley featuring famous radio stars. The first subject will be "Little Red Hot Schoolhouse." Marshall Neilan is scheduled to direct.

Moray Sees Double Feature Ban Improving Shorts Sales

The return to the single feature policy by exhibitors in the Chicago territory has increased the short subject sales of Vitaphone fourfold, declared Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales manager, on his return to the home office from a tour of the Midwest.

Exhibitors in the Cleveland territory expect a return to single features on January 1, he said. A general current of optimism pervading the theatre business in the sections he visited is reported by Mr. Moray.

Small to Screen Joe Palooka

Edward Small, Coast producer, will make a film based on the newspaper cartoon figure, Joe Palooka, by Ham Fisher, with Jimmie Durante chiefly featured. United Artists will release the film.

Richardson's Handbooks on Projection

IN THREE VOLUMES

Universally accredited as the best and most practical treatise ever published on projection and the many problems daily confronting the man in the projection room. The remedy for hundreds of every day perplexing annoyances is explained in detail and in simple language.

Volume 1-2 is devoted to the general subject of projection including its allied activities, but without information on sound. Volume 3 deals exclusively with sound. All three volumes are profusely illustrated and contain over 1400 pages of information and helps. Each volume contains Richardson's famous Question and Answer Series.

JENKINS' COLYUM

Medicine Lodge, Kansas

DEAR HERALD:

There now, the HERALD has gone and done it. They are going to reinstate the department, "What The Picture Did for Me," and now you boys listen here. There have been more than a thousand of you exhibitors who have complained because this department was discontinued. You have told us that it was the most interesting and important feature of the magazine, but it was discontinued because of the lack of interest of you exhibitors in not reporting to it, and its continuance will depend upon the number of you who send in reports. Hundreds of you have acknowledged your delinquency in the matter.

Bill Jones up in Wisconsin said he always enjoyed reading what Ike Smith down in Texas had to say about a picture, but Bill never has said anything himself. Tom Horley out in Idaho says he never missed a report by Harry Thompson back in Ohio, but Tom had all the characteristics of an oyster. "Let George Do It" is a slogan that a lot of you have kept posted on your desks, and now it is going to be up to YOU whether this service is to continue or not. If you respond as we feel sure you will do, this service will be a fixed department and they are likely to have to enlarge the book, which we think they would be glad to do.

There is a right way and a wrong way to report a picture. The wrong way is to govern your reports entirely by your individual opinion. We have reported the wrong way a lot of times. The right way is to report the audience reaction. If the picture builds business on its second and third showing you may be sure it is a good picture. If it slumps on second and third showing you may be sure it is not so good provided the slump is below normal business. Poor business does not always indicate a poor picture. We saw "Emma" take a nose dive in one theatre because everybody and his pup had gone to another town to a night fair, and it would have been unfair to say that "Emma" was a poor picture. We have seen where "Freaks" did a big first night business and fizzled the balance of the run. Well, that's that, and now what are you going to do about it, are you going to report?

George Wooldredge, who has been managing both theatres in McPherson, has resigned from that position on account of the ill health of Mrs. Wooldredge and they have moved to Kansas City. Mr. C. W. Helstrom, the owner of the theatres, has taken active management, and between these duties and the duties of councilman and supervisor of highway construction he is about the busiest Jayhawker we have met. He eats up work like a boy eats huckleberry pie.

O. K. Mason of Hoisington, who owns theatres at Hoisington, Great Bend, Kinsley, Norton and Goodland, might be classed (if he'd agree to it) as a former citizen of our home town. His grandfather and an uncle used to live there, and when he was a boy he spent part of his time there and he and his cousin, who is now Dr. McPherson, used to fight every day with Dave and Fritz Sellery, with the outcome generally undecided.

Mr. Mason and Mr. Warner, branch manager in Kansas City for Warner Bros., were going out duck hunting the next morning and wanted us to go along. Gosh-all-fish-hooks, there it goes again, they just tantalize us wherever we go.

O. K. says he is coming up to Neligh some time to visit his cousin, and if he does we are going to duck him in the Elkhorn river just to get even with him. Outside of that he's a swell fellow.

J. W. Morris, who manages the theatres in Great Bend for Mr. Mason, installed a loudspeaking arrangement in the Plaza theatre to give his audience the election returns on election night right hot off the wire. That's what we call service. And did he have a crowd?

C. D. Jarrett manages the Paramount theatre at La Crosse for Mr. Larned, who is a film salesman for Paramount. Mr. Jarrett is a hardworking lad and he impressed us as having more than ordinary knowledge of the business. If a theatre can be put over in La Crosse, Mr. Jarrett is the boy who can do it, and we could see no reason why La Crosse should not be a good show town. We are for him 100 per cent.

Mr. J. A. Schnack, who operates the Electric at Larned, believes that now that the election is over people will return to sanity and business will pick up. We believe he is right. We have all been crazy too durn long.

Mr. Wooten, who operates the opposition house, was out of town when we called. Sorry we didn't get to see him.

We've got it in for Roy Culley of the Pastime theatre here in Medicine Lodge. That guy took us up to his house to supper and the spread that Mrs. Culley had laid out for us would make Old Man Glutton swear he'd never want another mouthful in his whole life. Beafsteak, boy, you ought to eat one of her steaks. Peach preserves, wow, wow. Candied sweet potatoes, oh mama. Browned gravy with mashed potatoes, hush, chile. Custard pie, ice cream. Oh well, what's the use. We ran two miles up a hill and back before we dared to go to bed, and that Culley put up that job on us just on purpose, and he's always claimed to be a friend of ours. Anyhow he's got a nice theatre and good sound that helped a whole lot. Thanks, Mrs. Culley, that was SOME feed you gave us.

We never knew until this morning that there was more than one Will Rogers in the United States. We picked up an Oklahoma paper and read that Will Rogers was running for justice of the peace or road overseer or something, and we wondered if our Will of "Jes Call Me Jim" fame had renounced the screen and was going to boss a road gang or issue dog licenses from a justice of the peace office in Clairmore. We were glad to learn that it wasn't our Will, but then one never can tell what a Democrat will do. Next week we will be with the Sooners.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHARLES E. ("CHICK") LEWIS, chairman and editor

SIGNS OF THE TIMES!

WITH THE NATIONAL ELECTION behind us and a hopeful future before us we ought to be feeling a lot more cheerful than it has been our lot to feel during the past six months. A close study of box office grosses, as listed each week in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, indicated that the receipts all over the country were still in the "hot weather" class.

It is no longer a mystery why business remained off even after what we call show-weather made a turn for the better. Radio election speeches were the answer. As Mr. Terry Ramsaye pointed out in last week's issue the competition was a bit too keen when one stopped to consider the outstanding speakers who were nightly entertaining (and entertaining is the right word) millions of potential theatre patrons via the air.

The prolonged slump—having been definitely traced to the recent campaigning of candidates and others—may now be considered at an end, and with this thought in mind we must buckle down to business and start the trend back to the box offices.

Judicious booking of shows and particularly careful selection of the units comprising an evening's entertainment are prime factors in building up business. Once your coming shows are properly lined up your next thought must be the selling of those shows in your communities. This will not prove difficult to showmen deserving of that title. They will be able to sell good attractions for profitable returns through intelligent and convincing copy and in all probability will be able to do so without the blah-blah and exaggeration that has been the key-note for all too many campaigns.

A SENSIBLE BIT of advertising psychology is to hammer your thought across until it has sunk in deep and left that kind of impression that should insure at least a fifty per cent sale.

But that same thought can be pounded until it becomes just the reverse. And if such is the case, then it behooves us to strike what we often hear called the happy medium. This is especially true where teaser campaigns are part of a general merchandising plan.

A teaser campaign can either create interest or make them lose that same interest. First, it must attract their attention. Then it must whet their appetites for the merchandise you are trying to sell them. But all of this should lead definitely up to a climax—your opening day.

Leave them wanting to know more. . . Plan your teaser campaign so that it will build up over a limited period. . . It ceases to be a teaser campaign if it runs too long. . . They will grow cold and stop looking for more. . . No successful teaser campaign was ever worked out haphazardly. . . It calls for careful planning and proper timing all the way through.

THIS IS THE SEASON for atmosphere in large doses, but, like the poor patient who was overdosed, don't overdose your patrons or your theatre.

Thanksgiving offers great possibilities in the way of atmospheric effects ranging anywhere from Puritan displays to turkeys and pumpkins. Christmas can be counted on for the usual lighted and decorated tree and laurel and holly wreaths all around the marquee and lobby.

But, like in everything else, do not allow your feelings of the spirit of the season to make you overdo it. This is especially true of Christmas. Knowing, all too well, the effect holiday shopping and Christmas has on the box office, we should be in no great hurry to emphasize the fact to all who approach or attend our theatres.

If you were to ask our advice we should admonish you to do your Christmas front and lobby decorating not before December 18th. Such decorations are then appropriate for two weeks and should be removed immediately after New Year's Day. Tackling this job any sooner merely impresses on the minds of those who do come to your theatre the fact that Christmas will soon be with us. Its effect is bad enough without rushing them.

PRACTICING THRIFT and economy is a gift, not a bugaboo. If you receive orders from up above to cut expense don't fly off the handle and start bellyaching about being held down. Just try to put yourself in the boss' place and go over every necessary expenditure with a sharp pencil.

A good showman must be a good business man and every good business man well knows the importance of keeping the overhead down to a minimum. Waste in those small petty cash items soon mounts to staggering figures; perhaps the difference between profit and loss.

"CHICK"

DICK KIRSCHBAUM'S LOBBY LAFFS!

This one occurred to several dozen showmen at the same time, but Peterson was first, so he gets the credit. Just the same it does prove that many of the members are sending in their suggestions for the Lobby Laff series. Nice work boys, keep it up.

LASHLEY CASHED-IN AS RESULT OF USING STUNT ON THRILLER

The stunt of advertising for a woman to sit through the screening of one of those hair-raising mystery thrillers not only obtained a lot of word-of-mouth publicity and free space in the newspapers for Dick Lashley, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Greenville, S. C., but secured prominent mention of his theatre in a large display ad run by the newspaper that carried the classified item.

The ad read, $5 Reward for a woman who can sit in the Carolina Thursday night alone and witness a special screening of 'Doctor X.' Apply Manager Carolina Theatre." Over 1,500 appeared at the theatre within the next eight hours to apply for the job and out of this number Lashley selected the victim. The classified department of the paper was so pleased with results that it ran a house ad featuring the original ad. The woman's own version of her experience alone in the theatre also rated stories in the news section.

Apparently Dick and his newspaper boyfriends understand one another pretty well, for we also note that he tied up with them for a circulating building gag to boost "Bring 'Em Back Alive." A corking big three-column display ad announced—"Be the News-Piedmont's Guest to See This Picture!" Mats and copy on the picture dominated the entire ad, with a box at the bottom explaining how guest tickets could be obtained by sending in a six-months' subscription to the circulation department.

All of which is further proof that Dick Lashley and his crew are still carrying on at their usual place at the Carolina. We'll be telling you all more about them in a future issue.

Witson Wields the Axe

W. W. Witson, Los Angeles lumberman, realtor, former showman and newly elected head of Pacific National Theatres, Inc., succeeding W. E. Ellington, signalized his return to active participation in showbusiness by making a drastic cut in overhead.

Among those affected by the new policy is Dwight L. Hill, who will remain in the Los Angeles until his contract expires next spring, but whose district managership in San Diego is now taken by S. S. Blachy, former independent exhibitor.

Two managers, Jack Rosenberg, of the Plaza, San Diego, and James Work, of the Seville, Chulu Vista, are replaced by Harry Lundberg and Earl Ranson, respectively. James "Jimmie" Bacon, doorman at the Mission Theatre, San Diego, for the past four years, is now at the helm of the house.

MANNY SHURE AND RCA MAN PUT OVER A GREAT "STOPPER"

A strictly up-to-the-minute stunt was recently worked out in cooperation with the Radio Corporation of America by Manny Shure, manager of the Palace Theatre, Cincinnati, advises Clem Pope, city manager for RKO in that city.

You've all heard of the much discussed marvel of science, the photoelectric cell, we take for granted. Well, when a patron enters the door of the Palace (when the stunt was on) a beam of light is broken, which, in turn, starts operation of the apparatus in a Thrift Book booth. A voice from within informs the patron that he can save 10 per cent on the RKO Thrift Books, and, consequently, the patron immediately stops to find out what all the monkey business is about.

The only objection to the stunt, states Clem, is the blockade it causes in the lobby. On the other hand, Round Tablers, it's a brand new gag and one which ought to rate a lot of interest and publicity. Manny Shure worked the idea out with the help of a local RCA representative, who goes in for this sort of stuff in a big way. Get in touch with your local RCA man, if the idea appeals to you. If he can't rig the necessary gadgets, he'll probably be able to tell you who can.

SAMS GAVE PATRONS REAL ATMOSPHERE ON "CABIN IN COTTON"

Where could anyone find sweeter material to work with on "Cabin in the Cotton" than right down in Dixieland? They got cabins and they got cotton—all you need is the man to bring the atmosphere to town, and he was none other than our old friend, A. F. Sams, Jr., manager of the Playhouse Theatre in Statesville, N. C.

The accompanying photo will show the interesting street bally he made for the picture. The cabin was built over the automobile for very small outlay of cash and the car was driven through the street during the entire engagement. Sams also had two three-sheets mounted on the front and back of the cabin. Real cotton was picked and attached to the lower portion of the bally. A large banner advertising the film was placed on each slope of the roof.

For an inexpensive stunt the above greatly helped build business for the occasion and the word-of-mouth advertising it created was forcibly brought to Sams' attention. We are mighty glad to get a line on this Round Tabler's activities again and hope he'll see that his Club receives further news.

WEIL AND JOHNSTON PUT OVER A NOVEL STUNT ON "AIR MAIL"

For over two years the idea of shipping human freight via air mail from Hollywood to New York, or vice versa, has smouldered in the showman-like brain of Joe Weil, director of exploitation for Universal Pictures Corporation.

Recently, when his company released "Air Mail" his chance came, and with the 100 per cent cooperation of John Leroy Johnston, publicity director at the Universal City studios, the plot was hatched to cover Gloria Stuart, Universal player, with stamps and ship her to Broadway, New York City, for personal appearance during run of the picture at the Mayfair Theatre. Suffice then to state that Joe Weil's dream came true; that Miss Stuart was duly loaded, shipped and unloaded at the Newark, N. J., airport, and at this writing is doing her bit at the theatre for good old U. It cost 24,500 one-cent stamps to transport the young lady.

One of the photos on this page shows Miss Stuart, after she had gone to her hotel for a change of clothing, shaking hands with Manager Cruize of the Mayfair just before making her personal appearance there. The other photo shows a gathering of the famous "Quiet Birdmen" at the Mayfair front to witness a showing of the picture. Included in the group are: Clarence Chamberlain, Bernt Balchen and James Waugh.

Hammel to Frankfort

Alvin Hammel, winner of the $1,000 award offered by U. A. for best results on a company picture last season, after spending several weeks on the Coast with Sid Grauman, will resume his position as manager of the Capitol Theatre, Frankfort, Ky.

JOE KINSKY ON JOB WHEN PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE VISITED

Just to show Club members that Joseph Kinsky, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, was on the job when 40,000 politically-minded citizens gathered at the local ball park to hear presidential-nominee Franklin D. Roosevelt expound upon alleged shortcomings of the Republican administration, we're accompanying this little yarn with a photo showing a portion of the vast crowd, the speakers' platform, and, most important of all, the huge banner which advertised "Blondie of Follies'" appearance at the Capitol.

The banner measured 30 feet long by 9 feet high, was the only ad in evidence and in full view of everyone in the park. Permission to erect it was obtained from the Chamber of Commerce in return for the good will established by inviting visiting 4-H club members to the theatre the week prior to Roosevelt's address. In addition to the banner, 5,000 heralds were distributed to automobiles parked around the grounds.

Forty-thousand circulation is pretty nice coverage, to our way of thinking, and Kinsky deserves a lot of praise for putting over his stunt. An interesting angle lies in the fact that it was accomplished as the result of good-will work.

"FIRST" ANGLE WAS STRESSED BY SMITH DURING A CAMPAIGN

In exploiting "The Dark Horse" when it played the Palace Theatre, Huntington, W. Va., manager LeRoy Smith stressed the "firsts" idea in his advertising and the political idea in his novelties.

Under the heading "Our Platform Is Hits," ad copy read to the effect that the Palace was the first theatre in the district to play the first sound picture, the first big musical hit, the first big gang picture, the first big air picture, the first newspaper picture and "Hollywood's First Political Expose," "The Dark Horse" captioned "The comedy carnival of the presidential year." The ad of "firsts" served the purpose of giving the Palace a great institutional build-up and strongly calling attention to the picture of the week.

To stress the political angle, Smith made an exact reproduction of the type of campaign card handed out by politicians, applying the idea to "The Dark Horse." It advised recipients to "Vote the Straight Laugh Ticket," featured a cut of Guy Kibbee, gave theatre and playdate and wound up with the statement that "The Dark Horse" would "put America back on the Laugh Standard."

KEEPING UP WITH THE TIMES!

By GUY JONES

In which an intelligent patron makes an important observation.

SUMMER STUNT USED BY PRITCHARD MIGHT BE USED FOR WINTER

While baseball may not be in season right now, there's no reason why the publicity gag used by Dick Pritchard, manager of the Alcazar Theatre, Bell, Calif., could not be used for a number of winter sports, such as basketball, football, hockey, la crosse, etc.

The sweat shirts worn by the boys of the baseball nine shown in the accompanying photo supplied by the theatre at a cost of eighty cents each and bore the name Fox-Alcazar in large letters across the front. Not only were the shirts in evidence during the season, when the schedule called for three games per week, but the boys wore them on their way to High School. Every time their pictures appeared on the sports page of the local newspaper the name of the theatre again appeared in public print. The only extra consideration shown the boys, outside of giving them the shirts, was letting them see the weekly change of program.

We also note that Dick recently issued some novel heralds to exploit Laurel & Hardy in "Pack Up Your Troubles." These were of the "Reward" type and underneath that word appeared a photo of the two comedians. Below the photo, in large type, the same size as "Reward," appeared the numerals 1,000. Then, "laughs" and the following copy: "To any person or persons who attend the Fox-Alcazar Theatre the three days starting (dates) to see Laurel & Hardy in their new full length—full-strength—all laugh feature picture." Following this in heavy bold type, in order to round out the "reward" idea appeared, "Dead or Alive." Then, in smaller type, "You Should See It."

We understand that Dick organized that ball team all by himself and it certainly has proven its worth as a corking medium of publicity for his house. There are plenty of other sports to play around with during the winter season and maybe some of Pritchard's fellow Club members can successfully apply the same idea. His herald also presented a novel appearance and he advises us it received some real attention. 5,000 of them were pasted on barns, posts, fences and empty store windows. Thanks to him for making it possible to pass along both ideas and we'll be looking for more.

Wallach at Audubon

Edgar Wallach, formerly in charge of the Terminal Theatre, Newark, N. J., has been appointed manager of the Audubon Theatre, New York City, succeeding Zach Freedman, resigned. J. Michaelson, former assistant manager of the Terminal, succeeds to Wallach's old post.

ED HIEHLE GRABBED FRONT PAGE STORY ON FOOTBALL STUNT

The fine art of crashing the front page of a newspaper was recently demonstrated in an effective way by that redoubtable showman, Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatres, Newark, Ohio. Intense public interest in football prompted the move.

The headlines of the story on a front page tear sheet we have at hand really tells the story, so we won't go into details. It read: "What's Your Guess on Score of Newark-Mt. Vernon Tilt?" Now all of you are following the papers these days and know that readers are getting a lot of fun out of trying to figure out the scores of teams scheduled to play the following Saturday. It was announced in the paper that the theatre would give special tickets to the mathematicians who gave their time to figuring out the stunt.

As Hiehle observes, it was the novelty of the stunt rather than special tickets that enabled him to make the above tie-up with the paper, as he only handed out a few ducats for each show; in fact, he thinks interest might be spoiled by giving out a whole slew of passes when a few will more than answer the purpose. Use the stunt now—while it's in season—further comments, Ed, so we're passing it along pronto.

Another recent gag used by Hiehle which commanded a lot of attention was a street stunt on "Life Begins." He sent out a woman with a baby in a carriage and had her push the vehicle along the main thoroughfares. She was masked and bore a card on her back reading, "Life Begins At the Midland"—no more, no less. And did they look after she passed by? "You tell 'em," says Ed. In other words, there wasn't a great deal to look at in a front view except the mask, and curiosity, still lingering in the minds of the passers-by, prompted them to turn around for another look.

Like most of Ed Heihle's showmanship, this merely serves to further emphasize what can be done when a real showman starts out to do things. Adding that curious twist that makes an ordinary idea outstanding is one of the faculties of Ed, and having visited Newark, Ohio, on several occasions, we stand ready to state that such is a fact.

Thanks for the two gags, Ed, and we know you'll continue to keep up the good work. Just as soon as you get another "hot" one, be sure to pass it along for the rest of the fellows to take a shot at. See you at Cedar Point soon, we hope.

STRANG SAYS CHANGE OF POLICY GAVE HIS BOX OFFICE A BOOST

While it is our mission to boost pictures, to broadcast all sorts of information on how to sell pictures, to literally think pictures during waking hours and even dream of 'em at night, it is also our duty as a purveyor of news in the amusement field to report that vaudeville in its second week at the RKO Palace Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, is solemnly declared a bread winner by A. R. Strang, director of advertising and publicity. "Not a landslide back to prosperity," says he, "but losing less than straight pictures."

It has been a long, long time since we've had occasion to glance over a number off ads wherein vaude acts are billed over feature pictures, since the practice for the past several years has been exactly the reverse. Lately, however, we have noted a trend toward experimentation with vaudeville in several sections of the country, presumably as a means of feeling the public pulse in this direction, and motivated by the thought that it may turn out to be a tonic for a drooping box office.

We will continue to report moves in this direction and will be pleased to hear further from Strang as to whether the upturn resulting from his move is due merely to a change of diet, or, on the other hand, a definite indication that public taste in entertainment is swinging away from films to vaude acts.

OLD-TIME STILL GAG USED BY BOUCHER TO EXPLOIT A PICTURE

As a gag to exploit "Man From Yesterday," Frank Boucher, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winchester, Va., crashed his newspaper for a four-column layout of photos and caption of yesterday's screen stars, which was headed "Men From Yesterday! Can You Name These Screen Stars of Another Era?"

The caption explained that at the extreme left was a man known as "the grand old man of the screen; next to him a famous ex-western star who could ride a horse like nobody's business; at the right, an actor of English birth who starred in 'Light That Failed,'" etc. Readers were asked to write names of the six stars in a single sheet of paper and mail same to the Editor, Capitol, Theatre, in order to participate in the award of ducats for best answers.

Nice work on the free space for that one, Frank, and more power to you. Keep up the good work. This ought to make a corking gag for other Club members to use on this picture, or apply as a straight out-and-out bid for free space any time, if they're lucky enough to have some old stills in their libraries.

Orlove Nowy Manazer Teatru

Yes, that's right, believe it or not! It was so stated right in a Slavic newspaper, Milwaukee, that the well known Round Tabler, Louis Orlove, is "nowy manazer Teatru Modjeska." And so it goes for a whole column, to say nothing of a photo of the smiling Louis. The last line in the story stated: "Panu Orlove zyczmy powodzenia," which, we take it, means that he's a good guy and a great showman!

DISTINCTIVE ADVERTISING!

This is the type of modern newspaper advertising being turned out by E. V. (Dinney) Dinnerman, advertising manager for the RKO Theatres in Cincinnati under the personal supervision of Nat Holt, divisional manager.

There are only a few other divisional chiefs who watch and value their newspaper advertising as does Holt, and this type of group advertising is ample testimony that the material being used in their local papers must certainly be attracting the attention it deserves.

If you are at all interested in what good advertising looks like, we recommend this one.

WE HEAR FROM SID DANNENBERG ANENT NAT WOLF'S OFFICE

A few words from Sid Dannenberg, in charge of publicity and advertising for Warner theatres in the Cleveland zone, bring to our attention that we inadvertently referred to the well known Nat Wolf, the Warner Ohio zone manager as exploitation manager, a slip for which we humbly stand corrected.

To the best of our recollection the article in question was forwarded to us from Nat Wolf's office, hence the association, and it referred to the give-away of Bosco and other statuettes patterned after characters in "Looney Tune" cartoons, a move which resulted in a corking build-up for Saturday matinees.

However, Mr. Dannenberg did more than bring to light the frailties of composition and proof-reading by sending along the name of the manufacturer who gratuitously stood a major cost of the stunt in order to advertise his wares. Furthermore, he reiterates that the gag is one of the best business builders he and his crew have thus far handled. We thank him for sending this information and will be glad to forward the manufacturer's name to any Club member on request.

CALENDAR BETTER GAG THAN PROGRAM, THINKS GOLDSTEIN

Convinced that many people throw away regular programs, Samuel L. ("Goldie") Goldstein, manager of the Ideal Theatre, Roxbury, Mass., is a firm believer in the calendar he uses to list a month's attractions at his house.

A couple of samples at hand disclose that these calendars are not as large as the average brought to our attention, but, at the same time, plenty large enough to be perfectly legible. The measurements are 8 inches by 7 inches and the cards are printed in red and black—red for all emphasized words, dates and pictures and black (lightface) for names of stars in the different divisions of the calendar. When folded the card becomes a size practical for mailing purposes.

To our way of thinking this calendar of "Goldie's" is an improvement of the one of bulky proportions and offers a trial medium for those who are not quite sold on results being obtained from mailing out weekly programs. Of course the monthly card, for a theatre that changes four times a week, is a most inexpensive way of taking care of this end of advertising. Since it's working out well for "Goldie," it, perhaps, behooves others to seriously consider a try-out.

Old Gag Proves Its Worth!

The old gag of having an appropriately bannered ambulance standing in front of a theatre to cart away patrons adversely affected by an exciting mystery film hadn't been done in such a long time down her way, reports Anna Bell Ward, assistant general manager of the Phoenix Amusement Company, Lexington, Ky., that it again proved its worth as a means of garnering a lot of publicity. The banner read: "This Ambulance Is to Carry Patrons Home From the Ben Ali (theatre) Who Can't Stand the Excitement of Seeing Doctor X."

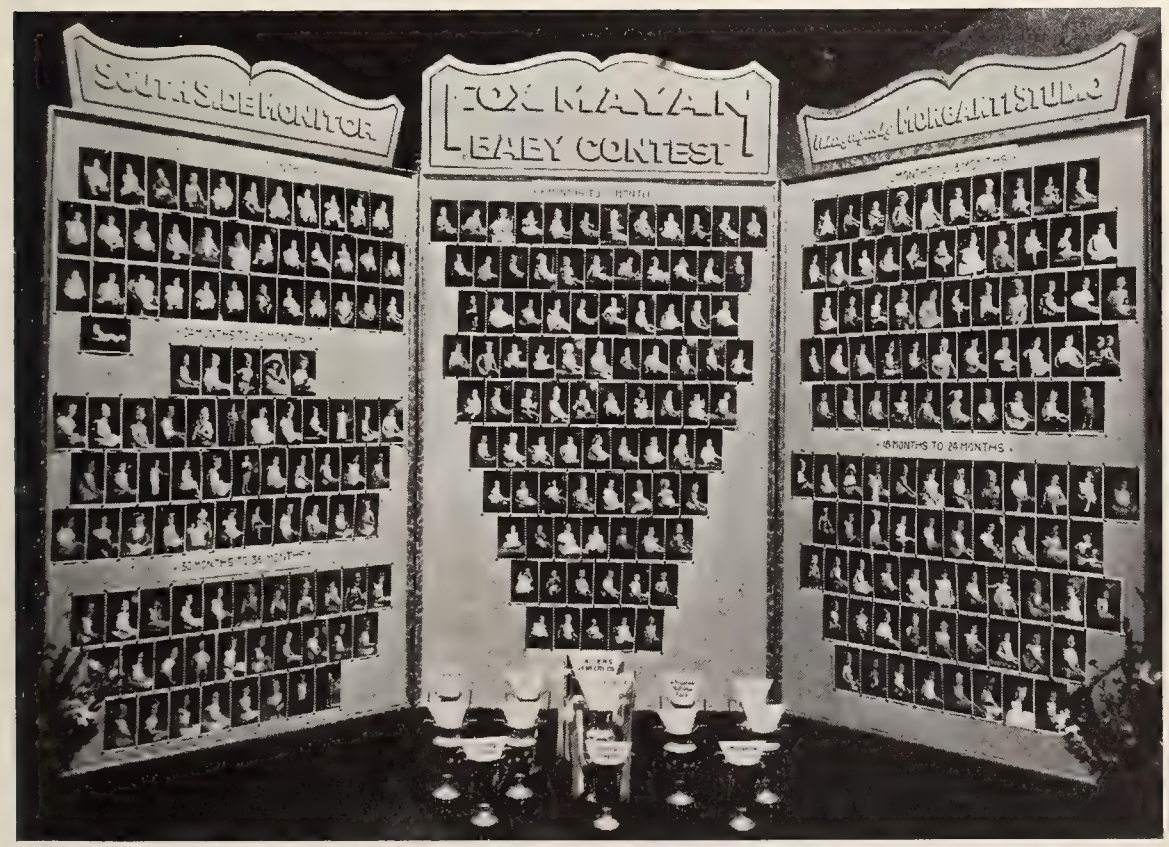
REVIVING THE BABY CONTEST TO INCREASE YOUR RECEIPTS!

Infants' Popularity Idea Can Be a Vital Factor in Building Good-Will and Business for Most Live-Wire Showmen!

THE many requests received by this department for information relative to the promotion of a Baby Contest prompts us to set forth, so far as consistent with available data, a detailed campaign on this popular and effective tonic for stimulating neighborhood good will for theatre and, consequently, the means of producing the desired effect at the box office.

Although all the Baby Contest campaigns we have been privileged to look over are more or less based upon a certain formula and close cooperation from a group of business men and community patrons, the recent efforts made in this direction by H. B. Ashton, manager of the Fox-Mayan Theatre, Denver, Colo., are so coherently set down and so up-to-date in every respect, that we'll follow his eminently successful plan.

Six Important Points!



Exclusive of the theatre, six factors are indispensable to the proper working out of this stunt: a newspaper; a photographer; a baby specialist (doctor); a jeweler; a group of merchants, and, of course, a large number of doting parents who think their offspring just about the most perfect specimens of young manhood or womanhood in the whole world.

Let's start off with the newspaper, for as in all instances of promotion of cooperative ideas, we must have assurance of a certain amount of support from this powerful medium of expression. There will be announcements from time to time, photos of entries and the big smash when the winners are named. We sincerely believe most managers will find their editor-friends responsive to stunts of this sort on the mere ground that any news relating to neighborhood babies comes under the classification of circulation builders.

It hardly seems necessary to offer more than a suggestion for this particular stunt because it is so well known to seasoned showmen; but, H. B. Ashton, having sent us the details, can be thanked for our being able to tell you how he handled it from start to finish. Needless to say, we recommend it highly as a positive business builder for any theatre taking the trouble to get behind it right. The photo below will give you some idea of how successful it was for Ashton. Now the question is: Can YOU do it equally as well?

Now that the newspaper management has agreed to lend a helping hand, let's turn to the photographer, who is another very important factor in the group. Ashton believes it advisable to tie-up with a prominent, well established concern, rather than some obscure outfit which would undoubtedly jump at the chance to gain valuable publicity, in order to avoid any embarrassment resulting from poor work. It goes without saying that the photographer is bound to receive a great deal of benefit from a contest of this kind. It will enable him to secure re-orders and, at the same time, extend his reputation as a photographer of note.

The best size for the photographs is a 4 by 5 and it is well to have it clearly understood that these are to be the property of the theatre until close of the contest, when it becomes a graceful gesture to turn them over to the parents of the children.

The display and loving cup awards as set up in Ashton's lobby.

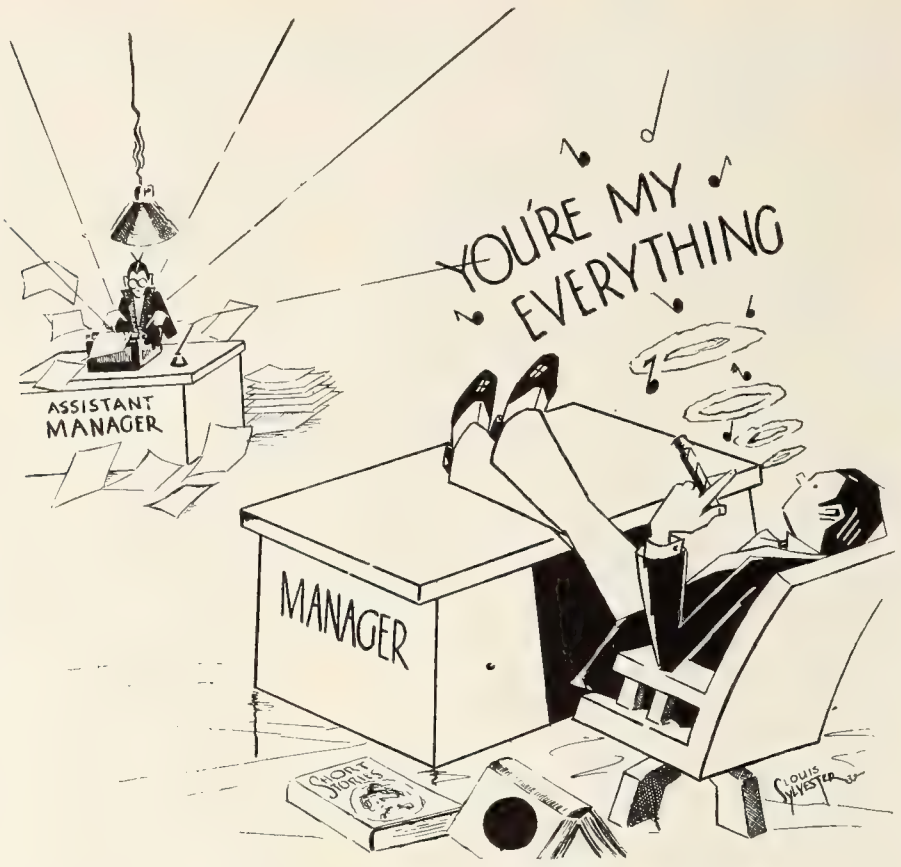
Many Avenues for Merchant and Newspaper Tie-Ups Are Available Thru Widespread Interest in This Fine Idea!

As illustrated in the accompanying photo of Ashton's frames, all photos are posted in the lobby as soon as completed, separated into the various age classifications of six months: namely, one to six months; six months to one year, and so on until the age limit of 35 months is reached.

The next logical move is to get in touch with a baby specialist who is not too darned set in the ethics of his profession to enter into the spirit of the occasion. By this we do not mean to contact another obscure personality who is out to build a practice; on the contrary, this man, too, should be well thought of in the community. What we are attempting to convey is that many doctors are averse to being tied-in with any move that bears the taint of advertising, so it will be well to plan the proper approach to the man you pick for this job. His services should be gratis if he is properly impressed with the idea, which means that if there is anything wrong with the baby as the result of his examination, the parents will naturally go to him for treatment. Ashton insists that there be no cost to the theatre or parents for this examination.

12 Merchants Tied In!

Now let's see what we can do with the group of merchants we've decided to let into the deal. With all the foregoing contacts and agreements made, it is, comparatively, a simple matter to sell a number of live-wire concerns on the idea of swinging in line. In Ashton's case, 12 were approached and each sold the idea of contributing a loving cup, which can be purchased wholesale for $7.50 apiece.



In return for donating the loving cups the merchants receive advertising. This is handled by placing all the cups on display in the lobby, with a credit card for each merchant in the cup. More cups can be promoted and awarded if so desired. If only 12 are used, two are generally awarded in each classification; one for the cutest baby, according to photograph, and one for the most perfect baby, as based on the doctor's examination.

Another gag suggested by Ashton, which can be used to intensify interest, is the promotion of an oil photograph for award to the most popular baby. This is also handled by voting conducted at both stores and theatre. The system of voting has been gone into so many times in connection with not only Baby Contests but many other stunts conducted along the same lines, that it's almost unnecessary to go into details. Merchants generally hand the votes out to customers and the cashier at the theatre does likewise.

Registration of the babies is the next matter up for consideration. At the time the infants are registered they are given their photograph card, which entitles them to a

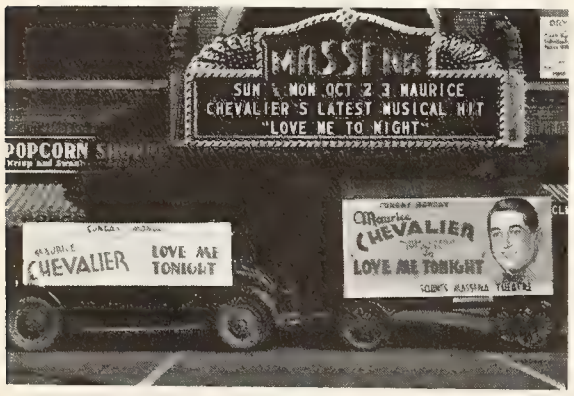
WE OFTEN WONDER! By LOU SYLVESTER



—if this is the theme song for managers still able to afford the services of a good assistant? We hope that Lou Sylvester's idea will be universally adopted by all theatres for the benefit of the overworked (?) manager.

ABE COHEN IS STILL HITTING THE BALL IN THE MASSENA THEATRE

Once again we are able to report that Abe Cohen, manager of Schine's Massena Theatre, Massena, N. Y., is on the job of showselling up in his northern neck of the Empire State.

This time we present for the inspection of his fellow Round Tablers a reproduction of a snap-shot taken of the auto and trailer he uses to ballyhoo coming attractions. Note that the trailer is a four-wheeled affair, permitting a large display of paper. The auto likewise carries its share of advertising. There is considerable adjacent territory to draw upon up Abe's way and we gather he not only covers entire city but many roads through the rural districts.

If one of those hard winters that hit Massena doesn't snow Abe and all the folk in up there during coming weeks, we think we can promise his fellow Club members some interesting slants on what it takes to put over shows in northern New York towns. He's been in Massena a long time, knows every business man there and has their confidence. When it comes to putting over a cooperative stunt he's there with both feet, so keep tuned in on Massena, Round Tablers, and we'll broadcast some more just as soon as Abe gets busy.

Northwest Managers Meet

Some fifty-five theatre managers and heads of divisions recently gathered at the Washington Athletic Club, Seattle, at a meeting called to order by Charles Skouras and Frank Newman, Fox-West Coast executives, to discuss new season policies.

Among those present were James Clemmer, Fox Fifth Avenue, Seattle; Frank Newman, Jr., Fox Paramount; Ted Gamble, Paramount, Portland; Mark Bowman, publicity, Carl Werner, publicity, Paramount, Portland; Manager Jack Gault, Rialto; Victor Keady, Fox Broadway, and Manager Harold Mann, United Artists, Portland.

SCHREIBER WORKED OUT NOVEL PLAN TO SELL THRIFT BOOKS

In line with the RKO Thrift Book campaign, now in force throughout the circuit, Harry Shreiber, manager of the RKO Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, worked out a stunt which proved a mighty effective selling aid.

He rigged a loudspeaker on the box office and ran a wire to a "mike" in his office. One of the girl employees, with a fine speaking voice, put over a sales talk which was interesting without being annoying and, consequently, added many sales to the campaign. This same loudspeaker also wishes the patrons a courteous good afternoon or good evening, schedule of shows and a few words concerning coming attractions.

On Election Night Schreiber arranged a unique stunt which allowed him to show returns without interfering with the screening of his regular program. It seems the Capitol has two winged stages (one on each far side of the main stage and screen, we judge) and on these the returns were projected.

He and Sign Artist Jones also rigged up a corking attention-getter recently for "Rain." Huge, cutout letters spelling the title, which when seen through "rain" provided from the sprinkler system and spotlighted on the side, made a marvelous display.

Clem Pope, RKO city manager out in Cincinnati, certainly has a lot of fast-stepping and ingenious showmen among his crew and it will not be our fault if we don't publish a whole lot more about what Schreiber and his gang are doing. Thanks to Clem for contributing the above.

Moss Now at Hillstreet

Richard L. Moss, former manager of the U. A. and RKO Orpheum Theatres, Los Angeles, and a well known member of the Round Table Club, recently was assigned managership of the RKO Hillstreet Theatre, another first run house in the film city. His

ASHTON'S BABY CONTEST!

free sitting at the photographer's studio. After the photograph is taken it is given a number on the doctor's examination card by the proprietor of the studio and from that time on the baby is known only by number—not by name—which does away with any personal angle entering into the contest. The theatre manager receives the baby's number, which the photographer places on the registration card, thus giving the theatre a complete record both by name and number. In this way it is a simple matter to identify any baby numerically or alphabetically.

While not compulsory by any means, it is considered good business policy to have parents attend the theatre when registering their progeny, which, of course, will not harm the box office one iota. It is another good, old Spanish custom to possess a ticket when casting votes for one's own baby, or any of the babies exhibited on the lobby frames, even though these may be otherwise obtained.

When night of making award of the loving cups, photographs and doctor's examination cards arrives, it is necessary to have present the mother of the baby or some immediate member of the family. When allotting the awards, in case the first prize winner's parent is not in the theatre, it is best to make both first and second choice.

The above would appear to bring to a close the plans for putting over a Baby Contest, but Ashton tells us a sort of a by-product of the stunt—Baby In Person Night—is the smash gag of the whole performance. This is generally handled about a week after the main stunt has been pulled and the personal appearance of the winning babies and their parents never fails to register another advance at the box office.

Practically all of the foregoing will have a familiar ring to many members of our Club, but for those who have not as yet tried out the stunt both Ashton and we believe it will prove an admirable method of creating a feeling of additional good will among business men, theatre and patrons in most any neighborhood. Furthermore, if there exists a case where cooperative plans are yet to be suggested by theatre man to merchant, this stunt has proven its worth as an effective means of obtaining future cooperation.

ADDED SELLING SLANTS!

Garey Carr Is Completely Sold On the Idea That His Front and Lobby Are Show Windows!

IF your ideas coincide with those of Garey Carr, enterprising manager of the Fox Granada Theatre out in Ontario, Calif., then you may be doping out in your mind just how you can follow some of the art gags that he likes so well and has found really productive of box office returns for his theatre.

As the photos on this page clearly illustrate, his ideas are many and varied. He, different from many other showmen, did not strike one single good idea and then work it to death. No, indeed. He thought up a dozen different slants and used them from time to time so that the house would not get tired of the selfsame thing over and over again.

Outdoor Ad—Indoors!

For example, as the first of the photos show, he erected an actual 24-sheet stand right in his lobby. Now, on the face of that statement you might be inclined to turn up your nose kind of sudden like. Well, don't. It can be made so attractive that it will not only draw the attention of the passing patron, but actually leave a real impression on them. Which, in other words, means they may be sold on the picture and come to see it.

The twenty-four sheet, as you will note, is well lit up with ollivettes and flood. Frame is kept spic and span and all in all he has made this gag fit right into an attractive lobby. And so can you.

The second picture shows his swell looking front on "First Year." Just exactly what the foliage meant we are not in a position to say other than that the general appearance is darned good. The cut-out of the 24-sheet from the exchange fitted right in with the rest of the display and made the completed job look mighty sweet. Don't you think so, too?

Then get a load of that trellis harbor under the marquee showing Gaynor and Farrell coming through. Is that good? We'll say so. Something of a real springlike atmosphere about the whole display, maybe that's the answer to the foliage gag. Nice work, Garey.

Attention To Detail!

What the photo unfortunately does not show here in this prize display is, the bird cages with live birds and the box office fixed up to resemble a wishing well. Topping off all the other fine points is the rock garden effect achieved by Carr with the aid of earth and rocks.

Number three in the group shows one of the finest displays we have ever had the pleasure of illustrating on these pages. And that's taking in a heck of a lot of territory because we've had some grand stuff to show in this section.

It's a display on Garbo and cleverly illuminated from behind the rising steps as well

Next in line for discussion is the "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" display which Garey worked out for his lobby. The best bets of all were the use of a live goat and Carr's own little daughter Peggy. Incidentally, he modestly says that there was nothing outstanding about this display in general. Well, we don't agree with him. There is plenty outstanding and the whole display is really a master stroke of showmanship because it created interest and comment. That must mean business in the long run.

Real Atmosphere Here!

Passing on to the last one; take a good look at the "Congorilla" front display and as around the Garbo head, too. Close inspection will give you all the dope you want on how to build one of these. Those who have seen it, labeled it one of the prettiest displays ever seen inside of a theatre.

then keep in mind every careful little detail that was worked out in the construction of it. The cut-out figures of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson. the cut-out figures of the big gorillas, the bunch of bananas, etc., etc. Then the jungle foliage. The box office treatment and the other incidental items all going a long ways towards making this display the kind that will pull 'em to the box office for a ticket.

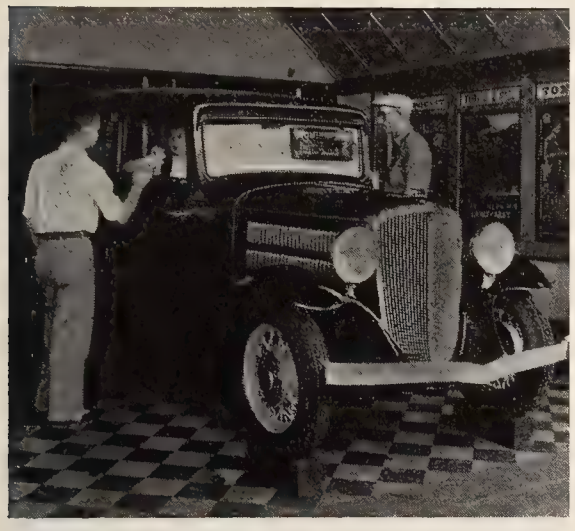
Altogether, Carr has proven his own contention that if your theatre is your show-window, use it as such. But make your show-window displays mean something by building them along showmanship lines.

Send Along Some More!

We are hoping that the near future will bring many more examples of this showman's fine ability to make use of an important adjunct to his show-selling activities. Others, too, may begin to better appreciate the value of their lobbies and fronts as a means if promoting the necessary interest that brings folk to the box office. Oft-times it is the little ex-Thisra touch in merchandising that turns the trick. This medium may be the answer.

Do as Carr is doing. Dope out inexpensive (yes his ideas are far from expensive), ideas for attractive, eye-arresting displays that will tie in definitely with some worth-while attraction.



ALLEN USED A NOVEL SLANT OF GIVE-AWAY OF NEW AUTOMOBILE

Something interestingly new in lobby furnishings was invented a short time ago by R. H. Allen, manager of the Grand Theatre, Tracy, Calif., which resulted from a tie-up made with a local dealer in automobiles.

In this instance the car was promoted for a give-away and was moved to the lobby to serve in place of the regular box office. The car was wired for electrical connections and telephone and a 12-inch shelf and cash drawer was installed in front of the instrument board. As you may see from the accompanying photo, a card carrying admission rates was hung on the windshield. The cashier sat on the front seat and handed out the tickets.

As Manager Allen observes, the stunt is particularly adaptable to theatres with small entrances and ought to prove a corking method of familiarizing every patron with the article of give-away. Thanks to him for passing along this original idea and we certainly hope he'll send along some more of the same calibre.

TURKEYS FOR THANKSGIVING!

Always a good box office bet, a turkey giveaway for Thanksgiving should be on your list of "things to be done." The more you can distribute the better it will be, so put on your promoting outfit and start making the round of the butchers, grocers and vegetable stores and get yourself set.

Although labeled a "turkey" giveaway, the more popular way is to make up, through cooperative tie-ups, baskets containing all the makings of a complete Thanksgiving Dinner for the average family. The usual trailer mention and card credit in the lobby is well worth the tie-up.

Exactly how you handle the actual distribution is up to yourself, the important thing is to get the stuff lined up and advertised because there remains but a short time to complete your selling of this idea so as to insure an SRO attendance.

SMITH CAUSED BIG FURORE WHEN WIVES READ HIS POSTCARD

When exploiting "Blondie of the Follies," Lynn Smith, manager of the Crystal Theatre, Gonzales, Texas, put over a hoax on some 200 citizens of his town which brought considerable publicity to picture and theatre.

We have one of the batch of postcards at hand that Smith had mailed in San Antonio. He engaged a girl to address the cards and write the following copy on side for message: "Dearest Mac: Darling, I will be in Gonzales Thursday evening at 7:45 P. M. and I'm dying to see you. Meet me at the Crystal Theatre sure. I have worlds to tell you. With all my love. Blondie."

We are indebted to an anonymous writer, who signs himself "A Club Booster," for contributing the above. He advises us he was there the day Smith pulled the stunt and that considerable excitement was stirred up as a consequence. The cards actually went to bona fide names and addresses and a lot of men and their wives, too, were wondering what it was all about. However, Smith has a reputation, this contributor tells us, for pulling something just a little different. It may take a little nerve to pull it and some may question the value of this sort of publicity. It's all in knowing your public, and Smith evidently knew his, as you can judge from the above description.

GENTES REMINDS US THAT THANKSGIVING IS ALMOST WITH US

As a reminder that Thanksgiving is just around the corner, E. E. Gentes, assistant manager of the Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, R. I., advises us that he has arranged for a turkey give-away.

One hundred and fifty pounds of these popular birds, purchased at 50 per cent below wholesale price, are scheduled for give-away on the Tuesday (usually an off night at the Laurier) preceding Thanksgiving. The balance of the 50 per cent of the wholesale price is taken care of by the market. In return, the theatre has agreed to run a credit trailer. Another angle that made a big hit with the market is that the people who receive the turkeys will have to call at the market to get them, thus giving the market an opportunity to make some extra sales, as well as added publicity.

The above is a timely reminder of one of the most popular stunts of the late fall season and we're obliged to Gentes for passing it along. We think his method of handling it will interest his fellow Club members, particularly the good break he has given to the concern who made it possible for him to buy the birds at such a low figure.

Another stunt recently used by him that attracted a lot of attention was the use of loudspeakers behind heads of radio stars featured in "Big Broadcast" and placed in the lobby. The purpose was to broadcast during the day the song by which each star became identified to the public.

LINED UP FOR "DOC" LEE'S AMATEUR NIGHT!

Above is a shot of a portion of the crowd lined up in anticipation of the novel amateur nights made famous over at the Greenpoint Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., by the well known "Doctor" Lee, RKO supervisor in that section of New York City and called "Doctor" because he has the reputation of being able to effect cures for sick theatres. It's the way Doc treats these nights that makes 'em click! Bona fide local talent—not ringers—and with enough billing to please the boys and girls, is part of the answer.

REQUA GETTING GOOD RESULTS FROM USING A MONTHLY CALENDAR

It's been some time since we've commented on monthly calendars, but that doesn't mean that these gadgets are not still being turned out. Here's one at hand from C. E. Re Qua, manager of the Cozy Theatre out in Norton, Kan., which bears the distinguishing feature of displaying coming attractions for the whole months in legible type.

The reverse side, in addition to postal permit for mailing and ruled lines for name and address, bears a box for institutional copy on "A New Show Year."

ReQua is one of the Club's recently elected members and we hope to hear a lot more about what he's doing to keep his Cozy Theatre in the limelight. Calendars, such as he uses, have been found excellent show reminders by many of our members whose selling plans include this type of advertising. The only fault we've ever found with some calendars brought to our attention is that some are much too cluttered up with copy. Re Qua's has enough white space to make it pleasing to the eye.

McGEE TOPPED-OFF NEW FILM CAMPAIGN WITH A SPLENDID AD

Rounding out a campaign designed to sell new season product to patrons in his community, Pat McGee, manager of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Okla., ran a full length, three-column newspaper ad which seems to us a corker. Owing to proportions of the ad we can't have a cut made, so will try to describe it.

A boxed-off portion at the top of the ad was headed "More-More-More-Big Hits." Followed: . . . "We're not boasting! . . . every week we'll present a knockout attraction! . . . the next ten weeks' bookings at the Criterion and Capitol Theatres are the finest we've ever presented! . . . and remember! for 11 years these theatres have been the ENTERTAINMENT LEADERS in Oklahoma City. Just glance over these new productions . . . we GUARANTEE them!" (Names of stars and pictures titles followed.)

A ruled off portion to the left of the ad, extending from the box clear down to the bottom of the page, was headed—"read what our leading citizens say:" About a dozen testimonials from well known bankers, merchants, doctors, etc., who had read the prospectus, were arranged stagger-fashion in this space. The balance of space was devoted to two good-sized display ads on attractions for the week.

As Pat points out, the testimonial gag has been worked many times before, but, it seems to us, not quite in the fashion described above. Breaking at the tail-end of considerable plugging on coming attractions, the ad caught the public eye at the right time and put over the necessary punch.

THE WINNING DEFINITION OF ADVERTISING

A contest conducted by Advertising Age for the purpose of finding a definition of advertising that would be suitable for placing in the dictionary was won by Mr. Louis Hausman of the American Safety Razor Company, Brooklyn. Here is Mr. Hausman's definition:

"Advertising—The dissemination of information concerning an idea, service or product to impel action in accordance with the intent of the advertisers."

Mr. Gilbert T. Hodges, one of the judges, pointed out that in a contest the judges must accept the definition as offered, but suggested that in adopting a definition for use by the profession and for publishing in the dictionary, it might be best to combine the best parts from several. Here is his suggestion: "Advertising—the printed, written, spoken or pictured representation of a person, product, service or movement, openly sponsored by the advertiser and at his expense for the purpose of influencing sales, use, votes or endorsement. —B.M.T. Advertiser

U. A. HOME OFFICE MADE TIE-UP WITH LARGE DEPT. STORE

A tie-up with one of the largest department stores in the city featured advance work done by the New York office of United Artists Corp. in connection with the opening of "Mr. Robinson Crusoe" at the Rivoli.

In addition to turning over a 107x30 foot display room for construction of a South Sea hut and a cage to house Gagi, Doug. Fairbanks' monkey pal, the department store ran large ads that mentioned the theatre, attraction and opening day. Several hundred stills were also displayed in the store.

Using the Dennison material mentioned in the press book and thatched huts of their own. Chicago and Detroit have also worked out stunts similar to the one described above. A branch of the same department store in Philadelphia has also made arrangements for a duplicate of the New York display. As far as "Gagis" are concerned, monks are available in most cities.

FEDERICO PAINTED STRIKING DISPLAY FOR NEW PICTURES

The snap-shot reproduction on this page of a lobby wall piece created and painted by Thomas Federico of Shea's Bellevue Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., by no means does justice to the original, which measured 25 feet by 12 feet and occasioned a lot of complimentary remarks from those who viewed it.

For one thing, the snap was a small one and for another the color scheme did not lend well to reproduction, hence the attractive panels do not stand out as they should. Anyway, it was a big flash on pictures in line for Shea's Greater Show season. Federico did an excellent job.

Next time maybe Thomas will send us a larger and clearer photo. He tells us that he appreciates publication by this department of many examples of art work done by well known artists in this field and he wants to help the good work along by doing what he can in this line. We will look forward to hearing from him again.

GLENN CARROLL'S NOVEL BALLHOOS!

Ballyhoos and novel lobby displays are given considerable emphasis in campaigns made by Glenn Carroll, manager of the Fox-Midland Theatre, Coffeyville, Kansas.

According to the accompanying photo he used a man dressed in a devil costume to plug "Devil and the Deep"; a wagon outfitted like one of the old pioneermen's covered trucks for "Vanishing Frontier," and another fellow, dressed in cut-away, large, black felt hat and wearing a heavy black mustache, used the suit case gag for "Miss Pinkerton."

Recently he constructed a number of novel, motorized lobby displays with the aid of a cut-awl and the usual accessories. These included a large elephant that wagged his head in behalf of "Bring 'Em Back Alive"; a horse for "Horsefeathers" with a feather duster for a tail that was also animated, and still another of Will Rogers, sitting on a bucking horse that really bucked. All of which attracted an unusual amount of attention.

Carroll just completed a Fall Style Show which worked out very much to the advantage of all participants. Another stunt he put over a few weeks ago was a tie-up made with a local dancing teacher, who furnishes novelty acts from time to time for advertising. When Carroll gets time he intends to send along full details. In the meantime, our sincere wishes for continued success and thanks for the above contributions.

BABY BUGGY BALLY HELPED CARL NIESSE RING UP NICE GROSS

A street bally of baby buggies, pushed by fellows dressed as old men, proved a corking attention-getter for Carl Niesse, manager of the Indiana Theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., when plugging "Blessed Event."

The pushers sent their buggies (promoted, of course) over the principal streets, in front of opposition, through department stores, etc., and the stunt materially helped round out a nice business done on the picture. The "old-man" costume combined with the baby carriage certainly caught the public eye and one of the pushers even equipped his buggy with an auto horn.

While we are indebted to the Warner home office for the opportunity to report on the success of the above stunt, we also want to thank Carl Niesse for his part and we'll look forward to hearing from him direct the first time he gets a chance to knock off a few lines about what's going on.

MORE SEATS AROUND THE TABLE!

M. SPENCER LEVE

is another Fox-West Coast man to send in his application for membership in the Round Table Club, and he manages the Fox-Ritz Theatre in Los Angeles, Calif. Step up and meet the gang, Spencer, and let them know that you will contribute your full share of the work they are doing to keep this department full of live tips on the art of showmanship. Shoot along some of your ideas about what it takes to fill seats these days and we'll see that the dope is passed along to your fellow showmen. We'll be on the watch for your next communication.

hails from out in Denver, Colo., where he manages the Fox-Oriental Theatre. We're also taking this opportunity to officially recognize Walter as a full fledged member of this great army of Round Tablers and it's our sincere hope that he, too, will do his utmost to keep the ball rolling along at the fast pace set by his brother showmen. There's lots of live-wire showmen out in Denver and many of them have contributed lots of good show-selling tips to this department. We'll be on watch for Smith's share of the good work.

has charge of the Logan Theatre in Logansport, Ind., and we're also recording that he has joined this great organization of showmen. Harry likes the idea behind this department and he proposes to do his share to keep the pages full of interesting slants on showmanship. Welcome to the gang, Jones, and we'll be mighty glad to hear from you at the first opportunity you find to shoot along some of your ideas on what it takes to boost trade these days.

hails from out in Walsenburg, Colo., where he manages the Fox-Valencia Theatre for Fox-West Coast. It is also a pleasure to extend this new member a cordial invitation to sit in around the Table and from now on we'll hope to hear a whole lot about what he's doing for showbusiness out his way. What was that last stunt you used, Don, to make the box office healthy and wealthy? Let's know, so we can pass the word along to the rest of the fellows.

is the manager of the Coliseum Theatre, one of the larger Fox houses in Seattle, Wash., and we are glad to acknowledge his application for membership in this great army of showmen. Baker is a well known theatre man out his way and we know his affiliations with the Club will work out to the benefit of all concerned. We hope he will regularly keep in touch with headquarters and keep us all informed about what he and his crew are doing to boost trade at the Coliseum.

manages the Majestic Theatre, a Fox-West Coast house out in Yakima, Wash., and a most cordial welcome is also extended this new member of our Club. According to our records Club membership in his city must be just about 100 per cent and it won't be our fault if Yakima doesn't get full representation in these columns. Give our best regards to all the boys out your way when you meet, Carlton, and now let's see what you can do toward keeping this department chock full of good show-selling ideas.

K. E. WARD

tells us that he should have joined the Round Table Club when it first started and frankly admits that just plain, ordinary procrastination—nothing else—has kept his name from the Club roster. Okay, Ward, for now that you're one of the gang your explanation is accepted. Round Tabler Ward manages the Rex Theatre down south in Sumter, S. C., operating under the banner of the Palmetto Amusement Company. We're also going to count upon his support in the matter of keeping this department chock full of interesting information on showbusiness.

is the energetic assistant manager of the Laurier Theatre in Woonsocket, R. I., and his recent application adds to the ever-increasing ranks of assistants who have joined this organization. Gentes has been with the Laurier for the past eight months and his boss, Charles H. Williams, informs us that in that time he has proved himself capable of managing the house. He was promoted to his present post from the job of doorman. In this or a forthcoming issue you'll read an account of how he promoted a flock of turkeys for a Thanksgiving stunt. Thanks for sending the information in, Ed, and keep up the good work.

holds down the job of advertising manager for the Stanley Theatre, the big Warner house over in Jersey City, N. J., which is Harry Kalmine's division. We also have his application for membership and want him to know that we're glad to record his name on the Club roster. That's a hard-hitting crew—that Warner bunch over in Jersey—and unless we're very much mistaken Deitch will send us accounts of a lot of live-wire advertising. Shoot some of your work along, Bob, and we'll see that it's passed along the line.

HERE'S THE BLANK

APPLICATION FOR MEMBERSHIP

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

Hey, "Chick":

Please enroll me in the Club and send me my framed certificate.

Name .....

Position .....

Theatre .....

Address .....

City .....

State .....

(Mail to Managers' Round Table Club, 1790 Broadway, New York)

JOSEPH W. SHUCK

was recently appointed manager of the Orpheum Theatre, a Warner Bros. house down in Fulton, Ky., and we are also in receipt of his application for membership in the Round Table Club. According to our records he replaced Club member Burgess Waltmon, who was transferred a short time ago to another Warner theatre at Owensboro, Ky. We're mighty glad to have Joe with us and hope he'll do his level best to keep this department the livest one of its kind in the world. Relative to his request for "full details" concerning membership, we're telling him right now that there's no other obligation other than sending along some ideas which will help his fellow members.

is located over in the Ridgewood section of Brooklyn, N. Y., where he has the job of helping Joseph Herman manage the Glenwood Theatre. Prior to taking this post John was chief of service at the Ridgewood Theatre, where the well known Sam Fried holds forth. John's job with the Glenwood is a promotion and we're glad to know that he's getting along so nicely. In addition to acting as assistant to Herman he also is chief of the exchequer. By the way, Ward, we wish you'd inform your Boss Herman that his certificate of membership was mailed some time ago. If it failed to arrive, please advise. And let's know what's going on over your way.

is located over in our nation's capitol city of Washington, D. C., where he has the job of assisting William R. Fischer with the management of the Loew's Columbia Theatre. George started in at the house three years ago and was promoted to his present post from the job of chief of service. He came up from the ranks to the service job through hard work and his boss tells us he's ambitious and has the makings of a good showman. With Manager Fischer to coach him in all branches of the work we feel sure he'll make good and will watch his career with interest. We'd like to hear what you and the boss are doing to sell your shows, George, so see what you can do about shooting along some information.

is another assistant manager to join the ranks of the many assistants in this organization. He has the job of helping A. S. Grasgrin manage the Butler Theatre down in Butler, Pa., and was promoted to his present post from the job of chief of service. Porritt has been associated with the Butler for the past year, is twenty-nine years old and well on the way up the showman's ladder. We'll be watching him climb and, in the meantime, would like him to pass a reminder along to Grasgrin that the Club hasn't heard from him in a long time. Tell him we'd like to know what's going on.

was once a projectionist but a short time ago his boss, J. A. MacEachron, manager of the Palace Theatre, West Helena, Ark., took him out of the booth and promoted him to the post of assistant manager. Jack has been with the Palace about six out of his twenty-two years and we'll say he has a darned good start up the ladder of success. He has become a member of this Club to not only improve his chances in the field but to contribute his share of helpful ideas. We don't have to remind readers that his boss does his bit for the Round Table, for his name will be familiar to most readers.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1932, unless otherwise specified.

STAGE ATTRACTIONS
FOR PICTURE THEATRES

INSTRUMENTAL

The Red Dominoes (19)
New York Academy of Music

This new band act, composed of 16 girl musicians, is capably directed by the beauteous Miriam Hoffman, and comprises every conceivable method of entertaining an audience. The band is arranged in a special full-stage setting which tends to set off each member of the organization to best advantage. The opening number, a scrim setting in which each face is lighted by an invisible flashlight as the girls sing, is most outstanding and starts the turn off to a fast pace. At the finish of this, Miss Hoffman, conductress and mistress of ceremonies, announces that all will introduce themselves individually in song. A young lady next offers a good rendition of "Couldn't Say Goodby," with the band playing a special arrangement with interpolations. Solo numbers by members, intepretative and acrobatic dancing and comedy by Leon and Dawn, together with some well played instrumental numbers by the band, comprise the remainder of this entertaining act. Running time is 60 minutes.—E. D.

Abe Lyman and Orchestra
New York Capitol

Rebooked here after a sensational record-breaking stay several weeks ago, Abe Lyman opens the music with a hot introduction, followed by "Dinah," to which one of the band offers an eccentric dance. The orchestra then shows its versatility by playing a medley of operatic airs including "Miserere," "Tales of Hoffman," the 'Quartette' from "Rigoletto," "Celeste Aida" and "Faust," the audience sounding marked enthusiasm. A vocalist with a pleasing baritone sings "That's Why Darkies Were Born," and Lyman finales with "Tiger Rag" to a fine response.—H. P.

SINGERS

Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink
New York Roxy

Celebrating her Golden Anniversary, Mme. Schumann-Heink sings a special program to an enthusiastic audience. She is assisted in a special "Armistice" number by the Roxy Male Chorus and closes with the inevitable but beloved "Heilige Nacht."—E. D.

Tito Coral
Buffalo Buffalo

Coral received generous applause from this traditionally cold audience. Perhaps his judicious admixture of semi-classics and popular numbers, a welcome relief from the high-hat attitude often affected by opera stars, had something to do with it.

Rudy Kaye
Philadelphia Fox

This tenor sang the beautiful "sob solo" from "Pagliacci," with orchestra accompaniment. In the fortissimo passages he forced his tones, sacrificing some of the dramatic tone quality to gain volume, but his number was well received.

N. Y. Hippodrome Reopens Nov. 19

The Hippodrome, New York house dark since last summer, is being renovated and will open November 19, under the management of C. & C. Amusement Corporation, formed by A. J. Cooper and William A. Carroll, operators of a circuit of theatres in the Middlewest, with headquarters at Youngstown, Ohio.

Plans call for a stage band, probably the pit orchestra now at the RKO Palace, and a vaudeville-film combination policy. Admission will range from 10 to 25 cents.

NOVELTY

Miss Diana and Her Haunted Violin
Brooklyn Prospect

This is one of the most mystifying of novelty acts. Miss Diana, an accomplished violinist, opens with a good rendition of a classical number, at the close of which she announces that the violin will play of its own accord any number asked for by the audience. The patrons were not reluctant to call out numbers, and, surprisingly, bits of each of these numbers seemed to come from the violin without the aid of Diana, who held it. Those who were skeptical had even more to think about when Miss Diana walked through the audience and the instrument apparently played their requests as different persons held it in their hands. This is an act that is sure to draw crowds and entertain them. It was great here.—E. D.

Stuart and Lash (3)
New York Palace

Harry Lash is a laugh-getting M. C., and when joined by his partner, the pair offer a round of hokum which ties up the show. Lash scores with a novelty song embodying titles of popular songs and the pair continue the hearty laughs with their Scotch bit. A clever imitation of the Mills Brothers is followed by a fast finish with Lash offering guitar accompaniment to Stuart's acrobatics. It's an ace-high novelty.—H. P.

Georgia Crackers
Buffalo Buffalo

Annie, Judy and Zeke, two girls and a boy, offer hillbilly songs, arousing interest at once by their back country costumes. Zeke does animal and bird imitations, while Annie (or is it Judy) proves surprisingly adept on piano and xylophone. Decidedly a novelty.

Three Cossacks
Buffalo Hippodrome

This sensational roller skating act builds to an exciting finish with the understander swinging his two partners.

DANCERS

The DeRues and Howe (3)
Detroit Fox

To start this act, the DeRues and Howe have the assistance of the chorus who, dressed as big-lipped Ubangi women, add the necessary "jungle atmosphere." To the accompaniment of weird voodoo music, the DeRues and Howe, dressed as savage medicine men, cavort upon the stage and go through a series of double-jointed, contortionistic feats that would shame the most sinuous serpent.

Vivian Fay
New York Roxy

Miss Fay, who is here for her third return engagement in two months, appears in two separate dances, one in the first scene and one in the finale. Her first dance gives her little opportunity to prove her versatility, but her last, an interpretative oriental number, did, though that too was short. An appreciative audience applauded her efforts.—E. D.

Patricia Bowman Ballet (24)
Philadelphia Mastbaum

Patricia Bowman and her ballet of 24 give a beautifully-staged gold and silver ballet. At the conclusion of this dance the curtains at the rear of the stage are lifted and Patricia Bowman, in white tulle and rhinestones, dances a solo of such fairylike grace and delicacy of motion that she seems to float among the girls like thistledtown.

Harold and Lola
New York Roxy

A newly imported dancing act that will meet with the instant approval of most audiences, as they did here. The act is entitled "The Cobra and the Snake Charmer," and for a distinctive novelty it cannot be beaten.—E. D.

COMEDY

Ken Murray (4)
New York Capitol

Ken opens with several timely gags on politics and then clicks strongly with his "Advice to the Lovelorn" bit. Milton Charleston lends a hand in keeping the audience in laugter, proving an able comedian in his own right. All Ricker, lanky dead-pan, then offers an amusing eccentric dance. Throughout the act, Murray is a constant factor, timing the routine for a succession of laughs.—H. P.

Al Trahan and Miss Cameron
Omaha Orpheum

Al Trahan goes over in a large way with his piano fooleries, ably assisted by a blonde associate. Interspersed with a lot of nonsense, he manages to cause his house to feel that he really can play and that Miss Cameron can sing. Her songs are "Kiss Me Again," "If I Were the Only Girl in the World" and the "Livery Stable Blues."

STAGE ATTRACTIONS

REVIEWS OF ACTS FOR PICTURE THEATRES

SINGERS

Baby Rose Marie
Baltimore Hippodrome

In her usual attractive fashion Baby Rose Marie offers a cycle of songs and puts them over effectively. Included were a smile song, "I Wouldn't Trade The Silver In My Mother's Hair For All the Gold In this World," "How Am I Doin'," and "Shanty in Shanty Town." Good applause and encored.

Mata Cora
New York Roxy

Miss Cora, coloratura soprano, whose appearance this week marks her fourth return engagement here, appears in the first and last scenes of the current Frank Cambria production. "Rhapsody in Color." Her voice is beautiful. She is featured in two numbers, but the audience would have liked to hear her sing more.—E. D.

Little Jack Little
Cincinnati Albee

This pianist, who has entertained over numerous radio stations, again demonstrates his ability. He also offers a series of vocal numbers, using a microphone and loud speaker system. His imitation of a barroom piano, given as an encore, is really the high spot.

ORGAN SOLOS

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) offered for his solo selections from Mascagni's "Rustic Chivalry," with explanatory remarks flashed on an Italian street scene drop. In order Crawford played "Siciliana," "The Valse," "Alfio's Song," a difficult key-changing passage, and finally "The Intermezzo," which is the best known of the opera. This cosmopolitan audience was not enthusiastic, however, due no doubt to unfamiliarity with the theme.

MRS. HERBIE KOCH (Buffalo Buffalo), wife of Herbie, eschewed her duet role to blossom forth as featured soloist. At the console on the stage, with an attractive back drape suggesting the foyer, Mrs. Koch opened with "Moonlight and Roses." She then swung into "Shanty in Old Shantytown" and "Love Me Tonight," which were sung into the microphone by Lester Cole, musical comedy tenor. "Nightfall" followed the vocal interludes, with four ballet girls, who hitherto had appeared to be statues in the theatre, dancing the accompaniment.

FLOYD WRIGHT (Berkeley United Artists) finds that his audiences have a leaning for the semi-classics, or the best of the popular music of the day. A late offering was made up of Romberg selections, including "Stout-hearted Men" and "Lover Come Back," from "The New Moon"; "One Alone" and "The Desert Song," from "The Desert Song," and "The Drinking Song" from "The Student Prince." He finds that his auditors like to read the names of selections played, so these are dimly flashed on the curtain.

MILTON CHARLES (Philadelphia Mastbaum), this city's most popular singing organist, delighted his admirers with two songs, "Say It Isn't So" and the original humorous ditty, "No More Company."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Thousands and thousands of vaudeville performers throughout the world will shed a tear today for the passing of vaudeville from their throne-room, the Palace theatre, New York City. . . . Starting today, the two-a-day picture policy is inaugurated with the Eddie Cantor picture, "The Kid From Spain," which goes in for a run. . . .

Frank Cambria, managing director of the Roxy, introduced an interesting innovation in the condensed version of the opera "Carmen," which is currently playing the "Cathedral." . . . The musical gems of this exquisite opera by Bizet, are being given by an all-star cast which includes Dreda Aves in the title role; Nicholas Vassilieff as Don Jose; Herbert Gould as Escamillo, and Greta Alden as Micaela. . . . In addition, the complete Roxy Singing Ensemble and corps de ballet is being utilized, with David Ross directing the orchestra. . . .

Paul Ash and Johnny Perkins, who headlined at the Brooklyn Metropolitan last week, were out for a stroll between shows the other day. . . . In passing by the old Bijou (which has been closed for a number of years) Johnny remarked to Paul: "That old shooting gallery is grossing more right now than some other houses I could name. . . . Paul remarked: "It wouldn't be hard to name the house either."

Harold Ramsay, who has made a big name for himself on this side of the world as an organist, is back at the Granada Cinema, Tooting, London, where he again will take up his duties as organist. . . . Ramsay was featured at this house for 18 weeks last year and returned to America only to take his wife, Mary Ramsay, who has been appearing in pictures in Hollywood, back with him. . . . In addition to being organist at the Granada, he will also be the general music director for the entire Bernstein Circuit, while his wife undoubtedly will be cast in British motion pictures (for which she has had offers). . . .

COMEDY

Si Wills and Joan Davis
Buffalo Hippodrome

"A Youthful Fit of Wit" is the title of this nut offering, which got more laughs than applause, and the latter was generous. Miss Davis' unusual voice and delivery, plus her contortions and dance reminiscent of Will Mahoney, won honors. Wills' crystal gazing answers were familiar to those who had heard Ed Wynn on the air, but still funny.

Charlie Foy
Buffalo Buffalo

Acting as master of ceremonies for his own "Bughouse" revue, one of the late Eddy Foy's numerous sons illustrates the family shrewdness in welding a show together, although his attempt at an imitation of his noted parent falls short. Foy's dancing and mad clowning aided by a stageful of stooges, drew warm applause.

Nina Olivette
Buffalo Buffalo

Co-featured in the "Rookies" unit, the musical comedy madcap mixed singing, dancing and knockabout comedy in generous doses, the highlight of her act being the burlesque on an adagio dance with two male partners.

Eddie Bruce
Detroit Fox

Bruce m. c.'s the "Radio" Idea. With a battered hat, a smoky cigar and a battery of telephones, he handles the job to perfection.

OVERTURES

FONTANA (New Orleans Saenger), scores a hit with an overture of Italian airs, opening with the swaggering "General," and going into "Mari, Mari" without which no program of Italian airs seems possible. Other popular melodies follow: "Santa Lucia" and "O Sole Mio," this featuring the string section and getting the most applause. The closing was "Finiculi finicula." The orchestra is working much better together than it did the first week.

GIUSEPPE CREATORE (Philadelphia Mastbaum), guest conductor, demonstrated to what artistic heights the Mastbaum orchestra can attain under his leadership, for the overture from "Thanhauser," with its beautiful chorus, was a veritable musical gem under his direction. The tonal balances and contrasting instrumentation and shadings made this a notable performance of the orchestra and the audience was generous in its applause.

WALT ROESNER (Oakland Fox) and an augmented orchestra offer a spectacular "Armistice" overture in which wartime music is mingled with the airs of many nations. The University of California Glee Club of thirty voices, with special effects on the stage, make the offering especially attractive. This director returns to Oakland after more than three years as director of the Fox theatre orchestra in San Francisco.

FRED SCHMITT (Buffalo Buffalo) introduced a decided novelty with his musical interpretation of "A Day at Coney Island," a skillfully blended medley of numerous tunes, which found a ready response.

THE OLD ERA WENT OUT WHEN THIS FILM CAME IN!

HERE are some of the contributions which Eastman Super-sensitive Panchromatic Negative has made to the motion picture industry: greater artistic opportunities for the cameraman . . . adaptability to any kind of light . . . lowered lighting costs on the lot and in the studio . . . lessened strain for director and actor . . . greater latitude for the laboratory . . . better prints for the exhibitor . . . All along the line there have been changes in procedure and improvement in results. In fact, the old motion picture era definitely went out when this film came in. Eastman Kodak Company. (J. E. Brulatour, Inc., Distributors, New York, Chicago, Hollywood.)

ALEXANDER SMITH CARPET

WESTMINSTER is an Alexander Smith Carpet that is becoming increasingly popular with theatre owners because of the way it stands up under heavy traffic. There is no finer heavy-traffic carpet made. Long life, distinctive patterns, brilliant, clean-cut colors, luxurious "feel" and moderate price make WESTMINSTER an excellent value. Let us send you samples and reproductions of best-selling patterns. W. & J Sloane, sole selling agents, 577 Fifth Avenue, New York.

Deluxe Seating... Acoustically Correct

THE chair shown above typifies the class, comfort, and box-office appeal of the new Heywood-Wakefield Theatre Seating. From every angle the new H-W Chairs have that class, comfort, and style which lend prestige and build profits for any theatre, regardless of size.

Most of the new H-W Chairs have been designed for use in sound houses. Several of them were developed in cooperation with Publix engineers who have made exhaustive studies of acoustical requirements in theatre equipment. The chair shown above is particularly adapted to sound use. Its soft, luxurious, sound absorbing upholstery; its custom type of tailoring on the seat and back; and its refreshingly modern aisle standard make this seat one of the most beautiful and practical designs ever built.

Publix has installed more than a quarter million H-W Theatre Seats. Many other leading chains and independents have also specified H-W Seats because of their fine workmanship, smart design, unusual comfort, and long wear. If you are planning to seat a new house or reseat an old one, it will pay you to get all the facts on H-W Theatre Seating. A note to the nearest H-W Sales Office will bring complete information.

"Will it wear?"

THAT'S a question which every Mohawk carpet salesman welcomes, because he can give you an answer based on facts—on proved, definite, convincing evidence.

First he will tell you: "This Mohawk carpet is woven of the finest virgin wools, imported from 35 far countries, where our expert wool buyers select only the best. Then these wools are carefully blended and spun by Mohawk with scientific accuracy to assure the utmost durability. After being woven by master craftsmen on the world's most modern looms, every yard is minutely inspected to guard against defects.

"Secondly, Mohawk carpets are tested regularly both by actual use under the most severe conditions and by laboratory wear-test machines. We know they will stand up."

Finally, he will mention any number of leading theatres where Mohawk carpets, after years of hard wear, are still defying the terrific wear which theatre carpets must stand.

Not all Mohawk carpets are made for theatre use. But some of them are and when you select one that a Mohawk carpet specialist recommends for your theatre, your carpet problem is solved.

The RCA Victor Company
ANNOUNCES
HIGHEST FIDELITY SOUND

The supreme achievement in the field of sound reproducing equipment for theatres of all sizes

Assuring accurate reproduction of the widest ranges in sound recording attained in the production of any sound-on-film motion picture at any studio

NOW AVAILABLE IN FOUR TYPES:

STANDARD SUPER SIZE
For Theatres having 2,500 to 4,000 seats.

STANDARD LARGE SIZE
For Theatres having 1,400 to 2,500 seats.

STANDARD SMALL SIZE
For Theatres having 600 to 1,400 seats.

SPECIAL SIZE
For Theatres up to 600 seats.

LEASE FOR CASH or DEFERRED PAYMENTS

The only all AC Operated Equipment for both large and small theatres.

NEW FEATURES OF STANDARD SUPER, LARGE and SMALL SIZES

1. New "rotary stabilizer" soundheads—no sound gate—no flutter—no "wow"—free running drum.
2. Direct drive soundheads—no chains—no belts—few parts requiring replacement—simplest possible design.
3. Improved AC operated amplifier—extended frequency—richer tone—more natural sound.
4. Remote Volume Control at projector station and auditorium on larger equipments.
5. Ten-foot loudspeakers for De Luxe theatres to give reproduction of maximum frequency range—particularly low frequencies.

SPECIAL SIZE

1. Greatly improved AC operated amplifier—highest fidelity sound—flat characteristics—greater power.
2. DC exciter lamp—more low frequencies.
3. New monitor amplifier speaker—no power diverted from main amplifier.
4. Belt drive soundheads—no noise—smooth operation.
5. Separate fader switch for wall mounting.

Orders now being accepted for December delivery.

RE-EVALUATIONS THAT SPELL OBSOLESCENCE

an editorial

¶ Further exploitation of the motion picture confronts the industry. In the very early days of the art, the theatre building served as a mere physical enclosure to guard against the elements. Then as the film show developed into a widely accepted form of public entertainment, architectural splendor, tremendous seating capacities and large orchestras surrounded the motion picture, expressing a new importance in the theatre that exploited it. Even the small town theatre and the local neighborhood later imitated these "palaces," regardless of the overhead it caused. A great number of theatres were built according to this formula.

¶ The combined effect of the new technical developments of the motion picture, and the economic depression have served to minimize any further advantage to be derived from architectural exhibition halls as an advertising medium for the motion picture. But a large number of theatres cannot be termed as being immediately obsolete just because they don't function as they might. Too much private property is involved to permit the discarding of the old and the building up of the new in a short time. Still, the motion picture is no longer a novelty. It is sufficient unto itself as entertainment without the aid of entirely extraneous trappings. If a new type of theatre structure can bring screen entertainment more effectively to the public, we should pursue it actively.

¶ The present finds numerous definite indications pointing to the building of theatres seating about 600 persons. Unfortunately, these theatres may be built by speculative builders anxious to close a deal for a lease. Under such circumstances, lack of knowledge of the special requirements of the motion picture theatre could in a large measure hold up real progress. It can be said now that there can be no better exploitation of the motion picture than the proper exhibition of the picture itself. The theatre is no longer merely a building finished off with stylistic ornamentation. It is, rather, an instrument, to be built with precision just like the projector that creates the picture, having an optical and auditory system.

¶ It must be fully appreciated that the smaller number of seats in a theatre, or the rigid economies that must be effected in its erection, in no way need necessarily limit the perfection with which the technical correctness of the theatre may be achieved. The greatest saving in the cost of the new theatre is accomplished by the elimination of the sheer architectural decoration, which is today superfluous and no longer the novelty with exploitation value. Sheer architecture is therefore to be subordinated to the technical correctness, which will insure proper vision, hearing, comfort and healthful ventilation. The aesthetic effect of sheer architecture is at best short-lived. Technical adaptability to the mechanisms of the motion picture needs only simple forms of decoration.

¶ The powers of the motion picture to entertain cannot be fully realized until the medium of exhibition—the theatre—is at its best. The obsolescence that may be forced in many instances will be more than balanced by new, fitting and economical structures. No doubt many theatres could be remodeled to be fit for use for a period long enough to amortize their original cost. Ultimately, all those theatres designed principally for exploitation through the instruments of sheer architecture, must pass away. As financial stringency relaxes we may expect the beginning of that end.

LOOKING TOWARD A BETTER THEATRE

By BEN SCHLANGER

An inquiry into what technical progress and changed exhibition conditions are demanding of motion picture theatre design

IN THE FEBRUARY, 1931, issue of BETTER THEATRES, appeared an article by me entitled "The Theatre of Tomorrow." In this article I asked many questions and ventured to make a few predictions about the future of theatre structures. The questions I asked then are today no longer mere speculative questions, but rather have they become some of the outstanding problems to be dealt with.

In this article, as well as in previous writings, I stated that theatres could and should be designed for the sole purpose of exhibiting the motion picture. I also said that theatres as they were being built, were fashioned after the stage theatre form, even though in many cases the motion picture alone would be the source of entertainment. I tried to show that not only was considerable money being wasted in new structures to provide for stage performances wherein a stage performance would probably never take place, but also that the motion picture itself would be exhibited under undesirable physical conditions in these structures.

In reaction to this, the average comment was, "You cannot build a theatre for the movie alone—the stage performance must be taken care of."

This attitude is now changed. Despite the fact that the motion picture has not developed technically and aesthetically to the heights it is yet to attain, yet it has already brought about the last days of vaudeville. It is needless to point out the number of theatres in which the policy today is that of motion picture entertainment only, and whose former policy included vaudeville. An outstanding example of this is the Palace theatre in New York City, the former shrine of vaudeville.

Three years ago I asserted in an article that the new technical developments of the motion picture would present an entirely different problem in determining suitable locations and the proper seating capacity for motion picture theatres. I suggested that smaller theatres in close proximity to the communities they serve (walking distance being preferable), built extremely economically, would be popular. I made this contention without cognizance of the new social and economic conditions which are now presenting themselves. I considered the large, deluxe theatre, over-ornamented and costly, a misfit for motion picture entertainment, even in prosperous times. The present economic conditions amplify the need of extremely economically built and maintained theatres—scientifically designed and constructed, in spite of limited expenditures. Lavish planning and ornamentation in no way helps the proper functioning of motion picture exhibition.

ASSERTIONS made a few years ago are no longer premature considerations. We now have a definite set of facts to work with, and a goal to look to. That goal is to have a sufficiency of good film product to be exhibited most effectively in convenient locations, in theatres built to function purely and effectively for the motion picture, and above all, to maintain admission prices that will draw a greater percentage of the populace regularly to motion picture entertainment.

Certainly the conditions under which theatres have been built to date have not in any way helped to minimize admission prices. The cost of theatre property, of theatre construction, and the resultant costs of maintenance and management and taxes of most existing theatres prove to be a great handicap by causing admission prices too high to permit both large attendance and profit.

Although there has been in the last five years a siege of theatre building which has supposedly caused a condition of over-seating, actually, it can be shown that there is really a potential demand for a great many new theatres.

This view is based on the fact that the present surplus of seating is most inefficiently distributed in relation to the people they serve, while the theatres themselves are actually unsuitable for favorable screen exhibition. The theatres built during the prosperity hysteria should not be allowed to stagnate progress in motion picture exhibition. The success of the motion picture as entertainment is far more important than any one loss in theatre real estate due to hasty obsolescence of poorly conceived structures.

It is interesting to note that the existing theatres which have unfavorable conditions in them for motion picture exhibition have cost, to build and equip, as much as $130 to $160 per seat. Compare this with the possibility today of building and equipping a theatre highly suitable for motion picture exhibition at a cost of $60 per seat. This difference in cost is only partially due to the present lower building costs. A good part of this difference in cost is due purely to more efficient planning of the theatre to accommodate the motion picture only.

The accompanying table presents a comparison of the elements of the obsolete, oversized theatre (A), with those of the modern, efficient, moderately sized theatre (B). [See following page]

THE PUBLIC is sure to look for its entertainment where it can be found with the least amount of effort and expenditure. At the present time it is not easy enough to "go around the corner to see a movie." It costs too much, or else it is too far to the nearest attractive theatre. "Going to a movie" should not ordinarily imitate the formality of attending a concert or similar affair. It should not require more than a moment's decision, sometimes quite casual. The motion picture used to be just that not so long ago, and it prospered. As a matter of fact, this was the very foundation of the industry.

To put it most simply, we now have a flimsy construction on a solid and substantial foundation. The overdressed deluxe theatre is a symbol only of the days of the prosperity hysteria, when the demand for things "bigger and better" was the vogue. We are left with bigger theatres, but certainly not better theatres.

In the beginning, the production and exhibition phases of the motion picture industry were separate. Gradually, they merged more and more, and now the cycle finds that exhibition is becoming a separate institution again. This is a healthy sign, but it does not entirely exempt the producer from assisting in solving certain problems of the exhibitor. Co-operation by exchange of helpful data between the exhibitor and the producer must be carried on more strongly than ever. By being cognizant of the problems encountered in obtaining effective and efficient exhibition, the producer in turn can modify and improve the technique of the picture.

Effective screen entertainment offered to the patron in sensibly styled and highly comfortable surroundings, for a minimum admission price, paves the way for a very successful period of motion picture exhibition. The length of this period is limited only by the comparative amount of comfort for the patron, and the screen effectiveness that the theatre will offer in competition with the promised living-room television. Small screens used in the home, depicting unnatural sizes of images and forms, besides having an unbalanced proportion of the volume of sound in relation to the image sizes, can never be as effective as the large screen placed before a public assembly.

CHANGES IN THEATRE PLANNING FACTORS

(A) THE OLD	(B) THE NEW
1. Expensive land.	1. Less expensive land.
2. Excessive costly and useless cubic contents of structure.	2. Minimum useful cubic contents of structure, also reducing amount of mechanical heat and ventilation.
3. Costly special structural framing due to excessive spans and large balcony overhangs.	3. Simplified and economical structural framing, using standard structural shapes.
4. Costly overornamentation, affording poor aesthetic environment, besides being disturbing to restful screen exhibition.	4. Simplicity in decoration, accented by effective lighting complementing the screen performance.
5. Poor vision of screen due to seating arrangement inherited from the stage theatre form. (Seats placed too much to one side of or too high above screen and full view of screen prevented by preceding heads.)	5. Full vision of screen highly improved by placing seats within physical areas best adapted for screen vision. (The valuable area charts and the Parabolic Reversed
6. Lack of bodily and ocular comfort due to seating positions in poor relation to position of screen and inadequate study of physical comfort in chair design.	6. Scientifically fixed angles and placing of seats, as provided for in Parabolic Reverse Floor design, as well as scientifically designed chair.
7. Different admission prices for different portions of theatre (necessary only because of inferior seat locations common in most existing theatres).	7. Single admission price possible, all seats having practically the same degree of desirability in well designed structural form.
8. High admission prices.	8. Reduced admission prices.
9. Excessive walking and stair climbing to seats.	9. Minimum of effort expended in reaching seats.
10. Costly stage construction and rigging (in most cases never made use of).	10. Complete elimination of all traces and influences of a stage.
11. Elaborate equipment, costly draperies and other furnishings.	11. Simplified equipment and elimination of dust-collecting draperies.
12. Ornamental proscenium frame, hangover from stage theatre. (Poor transition from audience to screen.)	12. Elimination of obvious proscenium frame. Side walls of auditorium made to blend towards screen.
13. Faulty screen masking and poor screen lighting.	13. Recessed screen masking, eliminating fuzzy and moving edges of picture. More scientific study of screen lighting.
14. Poor shape and size of present screen.	14. Much study is yet needed along these lines. (This is the producer's problem.)
15. Excessive projection angles, causing distorted images on screen. This is due to poor locations of booth caused by unadaptable form of stage theatre.	15. Diminished projection angles, made possible by scientific study of motion picture theatre form.
16. Poor acoustical quality due to makeshift acoustical correction and unscientific study of theatre form.	16. Exacting acoustical quality. Obtaining proper response to broad range of frequencies.
17. Costly film booking.	17. Greater film buying power for small exhibitor.
18. Theatre construction by speculative builder insufficiently interested in functioning of theatre.	18. Low construction costs, enabling exhibitor to build for himself, assuring proper function of theatre.
19. Maximum expenditure for advertising exploitation and house staff.	19. Minimum advertising for neighborhood house and minimum staff required.

CONTRACTS: AN ANALYSIS FOR EXHIBITORS

By LEO T. PARKER

A special discussion of contract law, its theory and as represented by recent cases, addressed to theatre operators

IT IS ADMITTED THAT A majority of theatre legal controversies involve contract law. For this reason theatre owners, operators and managers may well afford to devote a little time in reviewing the important principles of contract law.

It is well known by all that litigations involving theatres are expensive and always unprofitable. Obviously, dependable and authentic information based upon higher court cases may be advantageously utilized by theatre owners and employes for the purpose of conducting the theatre in a manner adapted to eliminate legal controversy. Moreover, when litigation is unavoidable accurate legal knowledge may assist the counsel to win a favorable decision.

Therefore, the object of this article is to discuss the most recent higher court cases involving unusually interesting and important phases of contract law involving the operation of theatres. So that the value of the article will be enhanced the general law of various treated subjects will be explained, together with the cause and outcome of each litigation. Also, parts of the courts' opinions will be cited so that readers may readily comprehend the authenticness and the reason of each decision.

What Is Legal Contract?

FIRST, it is important to know that a legal contract is an agreement between two or more parties by which each party is expressly or impliedly obligated to do something, not prohibited by law, within a specified period. It is not necessary that a valid contract be in writing. An expressed contract is one where the terms of the agreement are stated in so many words, and an implied contract is where the law presumes a promise on the part of one party to perform a service for the other party.

An invalid contract may not be enforced by either party, and therefore litigation of it always is unprofitable. Consequently, considerable trouble and expense can be eliminated by those who are able, by reference to a definite legal rule, to distinguish an invalid from a valid contract.

Various courts have held that a contract is valid and enforceable if (a) one party submitted an offer which the other party unconditionally accepted in detail; (b) neither party deceived, misrepresented, or exerted unlawful influence with respect to the other party to obtain the contract; (c) both parties agreed absolutely to perform a definite act; (d) both parties were of legal age and of sound mind when the contract was made; (e) both parties had proper authority to make the contract; and (f) the objects of the contract were lawful and not against public policy.

The law is well settled that either party may legally cancel any contract obtained by the other as a result of direct or indirect fraud, misrepresentation, coercion, undue influence, duress, threats, or where the contract is made without proper authority of the employer's employe, or while the latter is mentally deficient, intoxicated, under influence of drugs, or under legal age.

Moreover, there are certain kinds of contracts which are void, such as those that are against public policy, prohibited by a statute, tending to effect immorality and having an illegal object. The distinction between void and voidable contracts is that in the former neither party may compel the other to fulfill his obligations, whereas in the latter class the complaining party may use his pleasure in either declaring the contract void or he may require the other party to fulfill his obligations.

Written and Oral Contracts

A VALID contract may be in writing or by verbal agreement. The conceded distinction between a written and a verbal contract is that in court the obligations of a written contract are proved by the contents of the written instrument, whereas competent testimony of witnesses may be required to prove the intended meaning of a verbal agreement, if one party to the contract denies obligations.

The principle of the law is firmly established that all parties to a valid contract are bound to fulfill the precise terms of the agreement. The instant one party fails in this respect he performs a legal breach, and the other party has choice of doing either of these three things: (1) He may refuse to continue on with the contract and sue the other party for damages and profits equal to his financial loss resulting from the breach; or (2) he may file suit and compel the other party to fulfill the exact terms of the agreement; or (3) the parties may enter into negotiations and make a supplementary contract.

Since it is well established that a written contract cannot be varied or contradicted by verbal or side agreements, it is interesting to review cases involving this point of the law.

In a leading case, Horner v. Esserman (157 S. E. 237), a written contract was before the court in which an agent agreed to furnish a theatrical performance for one evening at a named theatre. The date of the performance was inserted in the margin of the contract, and later discussion arose over whether it was permissible to introduce verbal evidence to show that the date notation as written on the margin of the contract was intended to indicate the night on which the performance was to be given.

Since the date written on the margin of the contract was not merely a verbal statement, the court held that the jury was entitled to consider it in rendering its decision.

Obviously, however, if the date had been written in the proper location in the contract, testimony could not be used to prove that another date had been verbally agreed on between agent and theatre owner.

On the other hand, a theatre owner always is permitted to introduce testimony relating to verbal statements made by the other contracting party or his employe expressly for the purpose of proving fraud or deceit. This is true because such verbal statements do not in any manner contradict the written contract, but tend to prove bad faith.

For example, in the case of Artists v. Grand Rapids (210 N. W. 243), it was shown that the owner of a motion picture theatre signed a written contract with a salesman of a film distributor to exhibit a picture at the rental price of $3,500. Later the owner of the theatre refused to exhibit the picture and also refused to pay any part of the contract price on the grounds that the film salesman had induced him to make the contract because the film salesman had stated that a competitor was willing to pay $3,000 for the picture. Since testimony indicated that this statement made by the salesman was untrue the court held the theatre owner not liable on the contract.

This case is important because it established law that where a theatre owner is induced to sign a contract by misrepresentation on the part of a salesman, the former is relieved of liability for failure to fulfill the contract. In other words, a theatre owner may rescind a contract where he has proof that either the other party or his employe practiced fraud before or at the time the contract was signed.

PRESENTING a group of studies by the camera—itself a mechanistic art medium—expressing the organic nature of the motion picture theatre. The subjects are major constituents of motion picture theatre equipment, the machines through which the cinema functions, the essential mechanisms by which the arts of the theatre are given, according to the genius of this age, a new, a broader and a more accessible form. A chemical pattern becomes action, voice, emotion, life, beheld in an environment of shrewdly prepared comfort and healthfulness—this is Cinema, creation of the Machine. . . . LIGHTING EFFECTS THAT REFLECT THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

Offering a variety of ideas for illuminated devices that can be easily and economically made in the theatre workshop out of materials that are readily accessible

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

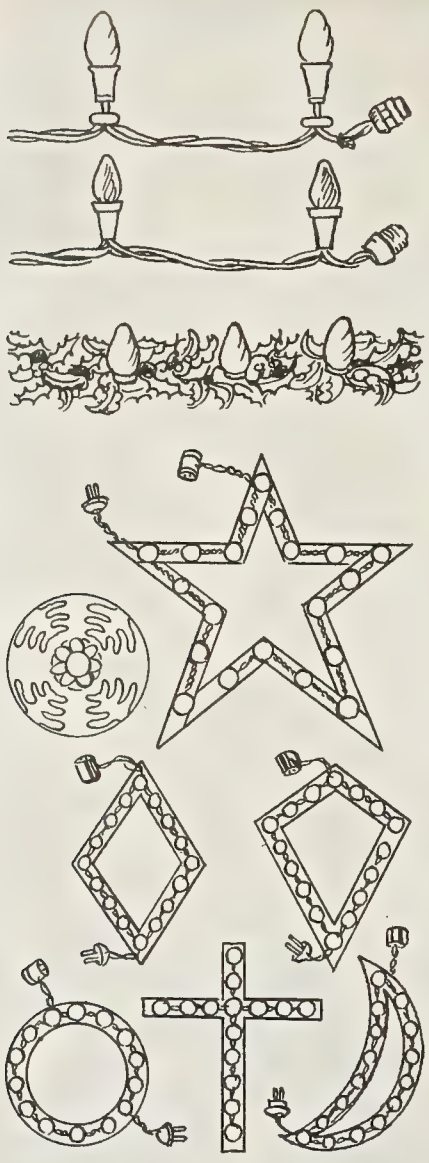
THE ART of decoration is not a new one to the theatre. Each new picture calls for the exercise of new display ideas to attract the people. The Christmas season, however, adds additional interest and presents an unusual number of significant motifs, while its colorful illumination adds life and gayety.

The possibilities for illuminated displays inside and outside the theatre are limited only by the imagination. Even a limited budget need be no bar, because with a little thoughtful planning and by pressing into service materials which are usually in the storeroom, simple yet novel displays may be produced.

This year, more than in previous years, ready-made materials for decorating purposes are available at reduced cost. New materials of this kind will be found handy for other displays, and the manager can be assured they will be in constant use once they are on hand. Provisions on the building for mounting displays and for convenient electrical outlets will make it easier to install future displays with less bother and less expense. This should be borne in mind when any exterior revamping is being done.

The theatre, by virtue of its position in the display field and the theatrical equipment usually available, can easily be made the centerpiece of any community Christmas decoration.

From the standpoint of sparkle and life and interest, Christmas decorations perhaps excel all others, with the possible exception of those for the Fourth of July. Traditional Christmas colors are red and green. Modern effects are obtained with silver and gold tinsel and black. Besides the usual cutouts, appropriately painted, there are many new electrical devices and tricks available to appropriately lighted displays, giving them sparkle and contributing to the gayety of the occasion. Included on the list of ready-made materials are wreaths of all kinds, with or without candles and lamps; bells, candle-sticks, stars, and decorative shapes made with heavy wire and equipped with lamp sockets.



Unusual and attractive conventional tree designs may be made by draping lamp strings with green lamps in the shape of a tree.

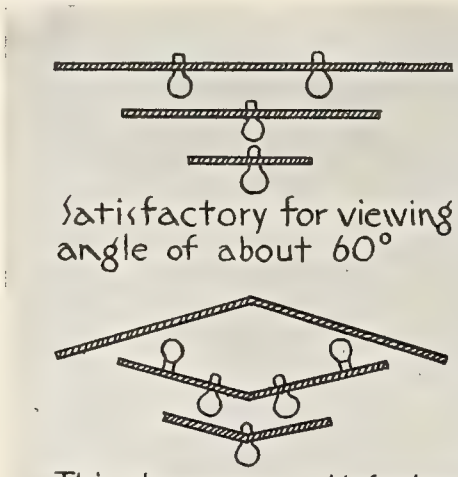
Marquee Decoration

TO CHANGE the appearance of the marquee in keeping with the occasion, the opal-glass attraction letters may be removed from the marquee face. Over this may then be placed cardboard with cutout letters and Christmas symbols, covered with a lacquered muslin or other appropriate diffusing material to form an attractive translucency.

A different effect is created by covering the box entirely with lacquered muslin appropriately decorated. Translucencies of this same character may be applied equally well to smaller shadow boxes inside the theatre and in the lobby.

The design at the top of the page is a poinsettia, devised in two planes. The 18-inch circle is lighted with a 15-watt inside-frosted lamp, while the red and black petals (set 4 inches in front) is lighted with a 40-watt red lamp. The middle design shows one of many conventionalized designs which may be easily made by draping festoons or projecting the lamps through holes in a composition board background. The other design is for a three-plane conventionalized tree. Lamps of a Christmas tree string project through holes in each plane. Scraping the coating here and there helps the effect.

The sketches at left and right show some of the available aids to Christmas decorating with light. Small handy floodlights are useful in employing these designs. Ready-made festoons with various types of sockets and almost any desired spacing simplify the problem of illumination considerably.

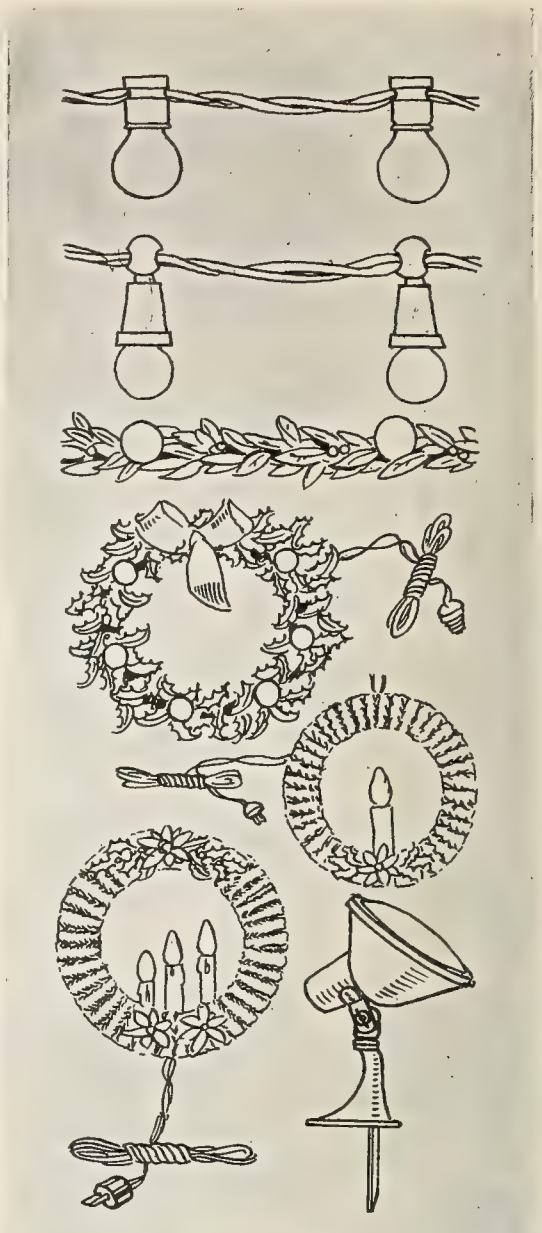


Inside and outside the theatre new asmosphere and mood can be obtained simply by relamping with a different color or tint in the lamp.

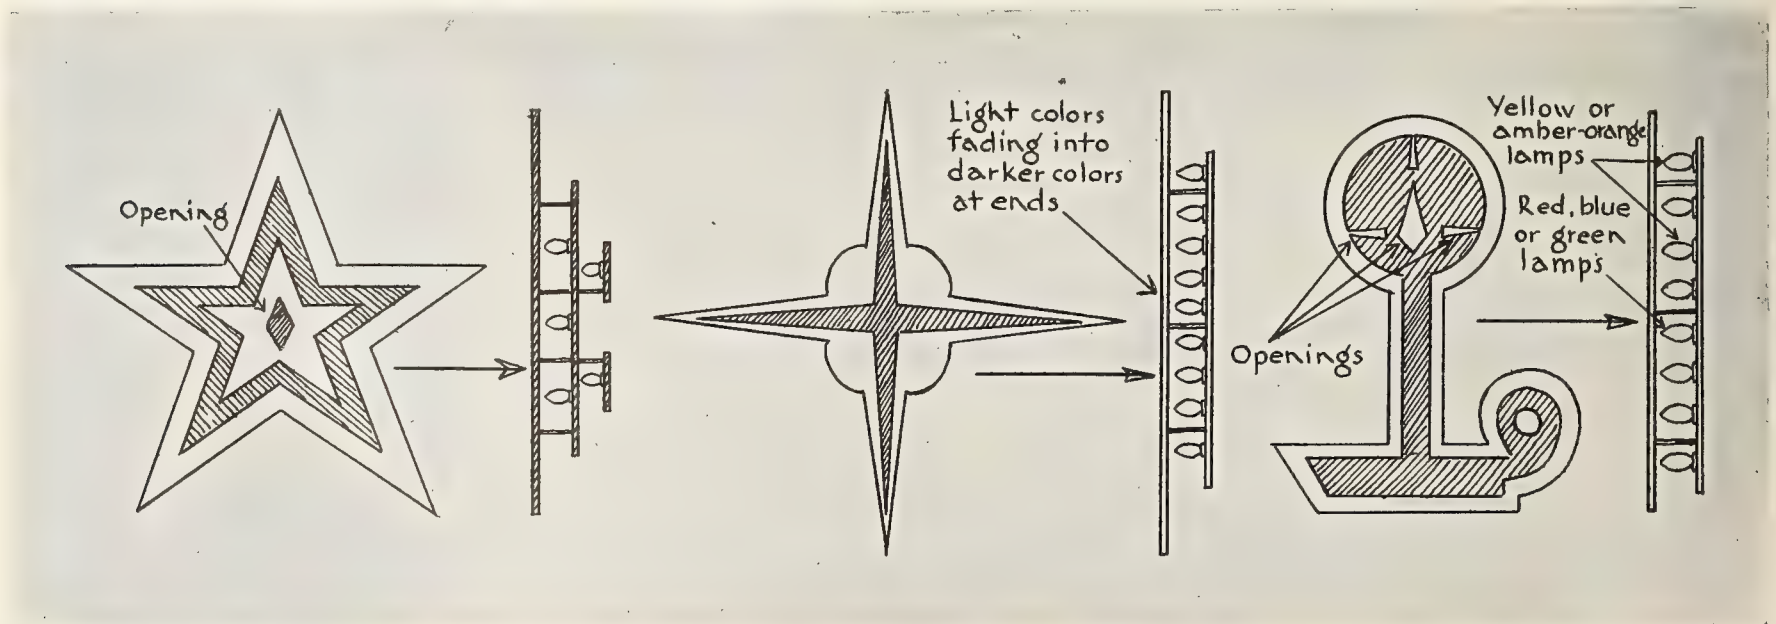
Christmas Scenes

SCENES APPROPRIATE to Christmas may be simply and inexpensively created. They are always interesting. If a few "effect" machines are added, the display is sure to cause much comment. Snow, clouds, an aurora borealis, moonlight rippling on the water, and flying angels are a few of the many effects available, and which may be accomplished with an ordinary spotlight plus lenses and effect head.

A new idea makes use of two or more surfaces offset in layers in contrasting color and brightness values and this opens up a vast range of new effects for theatre decoration. Variations of the texture and color of the surfaces intensify the contrasts produced by the concealed lamps so that the impression of great depth or of translucency may be readily created. Although white surfaces or those of neutral tone provide complete flexibility of light coloration, pigment may be applied in poster fashion.



Accompanying illustrations show decorations using this principle. In the case of the tree, lamps project through holes in the flat surface. Scratching the colored coating on the bulb results in interesting star-like streaks. The poinsettia has only two planes, the red flower standing out vividly from the white background. Other possibilities are suggested by the sketches.



Above and below are shown suggestions for multi-plane decorations. Unusual contrasts and interesting color variations produce the effect of great depth or of attractive translucency.

Small floodlights, theatre bunchlights or spotlights will find many uses at Christmas time. Covered with a light green gelatin and directed on the decorated trees they add much charm and beauty to the trees. With such colored floodlighting, cutout and painted displays of all kinds take on a new life to attract the eyes of passersby and patrons.

Interesting effects from "fleurettes" are created by using a colored lamp behind a metal stencil covering a small polished reflector. The pattern may be changed at will by changing the stencil.

SMALL THEATRES OF VARIED LOCATION

TWO RECENT examples of small motion picture theatre design are the Texas in Sherman, Tex.; and the Melrose in Dallas. They are coupled in this description because both are the creations of W. Scott Dunne, Dallas architect who has designed many theatres in the Southwest

The Melrose, which is a neighborhood house, seats 1,080. It is owned by C. E. Kennemer of Dallas, and is operated by P. G. Cameron of the same city. The building, in which the theatre space is augmented by several stores, has overall dimensions of 60 x 140 feet. It is of semi-fireproof construction, built of brick with stone facing. The investment, exclusive of land and equipment, amounts to $60,000, while the equipment cost $25,000. It was erected under a general contract.

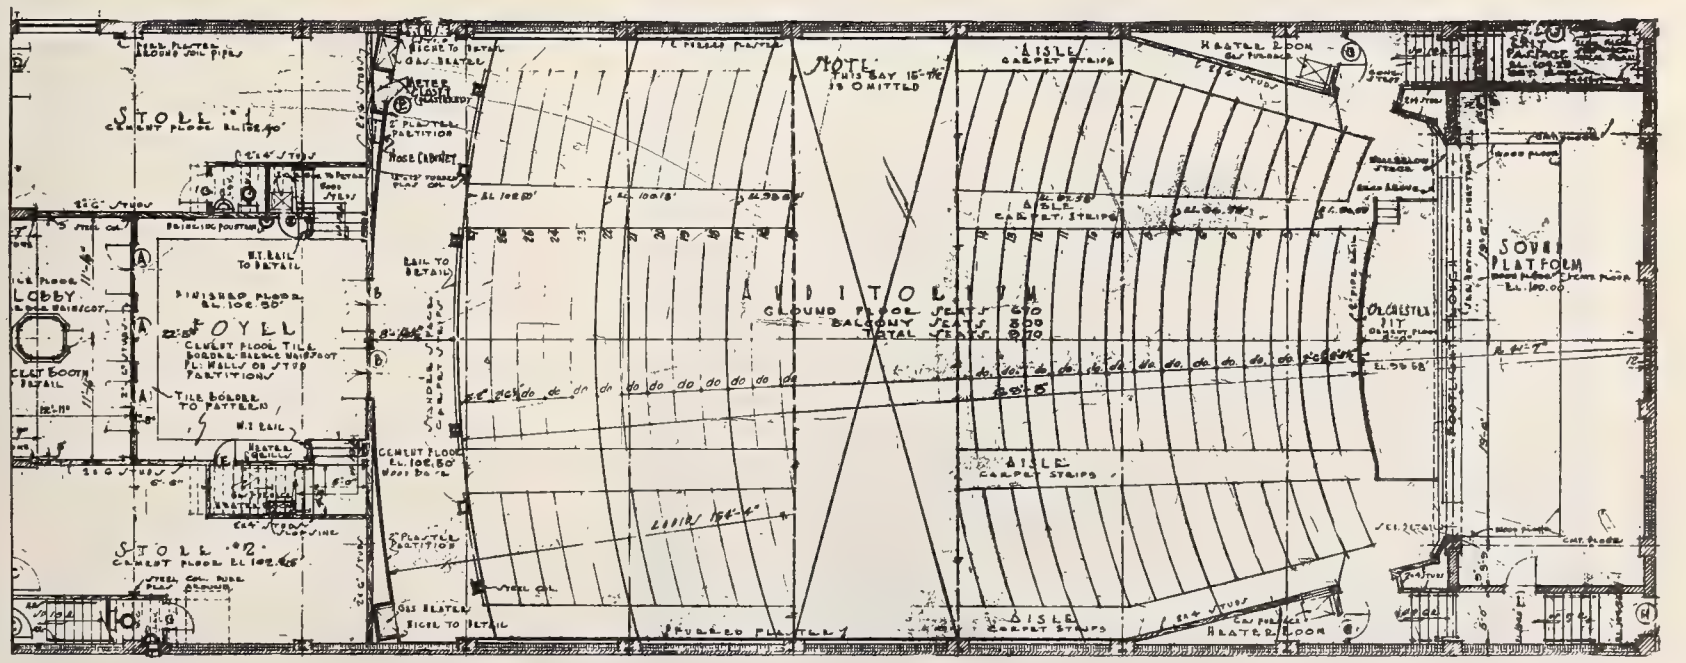
Seating is on a two-floor plan, with 27 rows on the main floor, containing 780 chairs; and 13 rows in a balcony, having 300 chairs. The chairs, which are by Heywood-Wakefield, have upholstered seats with veneer backs.

The projection room measures 12 x 18 feet, and the auxiliary rooms adjoin it. The walls are painted green. Equipment consists in two Simplex projectors, one spot and one effect machine. The sound system is RCA Photophone. The distance of the screen from the first row of seats is 22 feet, and the angle of projection is 12°.

Air conditioning is by a plenum system, with refrigerated spray chambers for cooling. Heating is by this ventilation system, with gas as the fuel. This system of air conditioning is carried outside the auditorium to the toilet rooms, lounges and foyers.

Section of the lobby of the Melrose. The base, surrounding a full-carpeted floor, is of marble, and the walls above, as well as the ceiling, are finished in tinted plaster.

Special illumination facilities provide color effects on a dimmer system in the auditorium, and floodlighting of the exterior.



The design in general is of modern rather than period style, with semi-atmospheric treatment of the auditorium. The facade is faced in stone and has steel casements, ornamental iron grilles, an attraction board marquee and a flasher electric sign. Entrance is through a vestibule, which has a marble floor and wainscot, stucco walls and ceiling and ornamental poster frames and lighting fixtures. The box office is located here, fronting on the sidewalk.

The lobby is full-carpeted, around which runs a marble base. The walls, and also the ceiling, which has a step formation, are finished in plaster. These surfaces are metalized, sponged and stenciled. Lighting units are of ornamental glass.

Entrance to the upper level is through a mezzanine reached by two staircases from the lobby. The mezzanine has full-carpeted floors, pulled plaster walls and stenciled plaster ceilings. Toilet rooms have tile floors and wainscots and steel partitions. These rooms are associated with lounging area treated in the same manner.

The auditorium is encircled at the rear by a promenade or standee area. The walls are done in plaster, incorporating acoustical treatment in "Kaylite," and decorative features consisting in florally decorated recesses between pilasters. Floors and base are of cement, with carpeted aisles. At the base of the pilasters are pockets holding special flood fixtures, and further sources of illumination—all functioning under dimmer control and equipped for color effects —are concealed in coves above the pilasters. Only a screen and speaker platform is provided, there being, however a conventional proscenium arch, which measures 37 x 24 feet.

THE TEXAS theatre in Sherman was built and is operated by the R & R circuit. Incorporating several stores, the building has overall dimensions of 50 x 129 feet. It is of mill brick construction, with facing in stone. Exclusive of land and equipment, the Texas represents an investment of $45,000. Equipment and furnishings cost $22,000. It is located in the main business section of Sherman, which is an industrial city with a population of 35,000.

MAIN FLOOR PLAN, MELROSE THEATRE, DALLAS, TEX. W. SCOTT DUNNE, Architect

The two views on this page are of the Melrose. The auditorium is treated semi-atmospherically, with the walls carrying a series of stepped motifs in relief and worked out in plaster, with which is incorporated acoustical treatment. The facade, shown at left, is of brick and stone construction. The marquee extends entirely across the frontage.

The Texas has 900 seats, 600 being on the main level, arranged in 29 rows; and 300 being in a balcony, which has 14 rows. Chairs are of full-upholstered type by the American Seating Company.

The projection room is 12 x 25 feet, accommodating two projectors (Simplex), one effect machine and one spot. Walls and ceiling are painted green. The sound system is Western Electric. Auxiliary rooms are located on the same level. The first row of seats is 15 feet from the screen, and the angle of projection is 8°.

Ventilation equipment consists in blowers and air washers. Heating is by gas.

The architecture of the Texas is of an Italian pattern, and the auditorium is treated atmospherically. The facade is faced in stone and trimmed in ornamental tile. It has steel casements, ornamental iron grilles, an attraction board marquee and a flasher sign.

The vestibule is finished in tile flooring and wainscoting, tinted plaster walls and ceiling, ornamental iron poster frames and lighting fixtures. The lobby also has a tile floor and wainscot, but the walls are of travertine. The ceiling is of tinted plaster and has a domed ceiling. Rails and lighting fixtures are of wrought iron. Illumination fixtures are set in coves at various locations along the ceiling.

Two staircases lead from the lobby to a mezzanine floor. This level is full-carpeted and has plain tinted plaster walls and ceiling. Retiring rooms have tile floors and high tile wainscots.

The auditorium is treated quite elaborately in Italian motifs executed in ornamental plaster and travertine. Dados are of travertine, and the walls, with a sequence of relief effects, are done in plaster. The ceiling is vaulted and serves as a sky-like background for star and cloud effects. Acoustical treatment is incorporated in the decorative materials, consisting in a mixed lime plaster (Crowe process). Like the Melrose, the Texas has but a screen and speaker platform, behind a proscenium arch measuring 30 x 22 feet.

MODERN PROJECTION

PROJECTION • SOUND REPRODUCTION • ACOUSTICS

MEASURING THE QUALITY OF YOUR SOUND

By S. K. WOLF

A restatement of acoustic values as determinable today, in terms the exhibitor can apply to his own theatre

THERE WILL always be considerable controversy between showmen of different countries as to which offer the most finished entertainment to their fellow citizens. The writer has recently completed a tour of several European countries and is in a position to comment on one aspect of this age-old rivalry. That aspect concerns the architecture and also the acoustics of European theatres.

Generally speaking, theatres in Europe vary in nature to the same extent as do their American counterparts. In large cities like London, Berlin, Vienna and Budapest there exist large motion picture palaces such as we find in our own metropolises. But these are in the way of exceptions to the general rule.

During my trip, especially in Central Europe, I was impressed by the almost universal prevalence of small, intimate houses equivalent to our neighborhood theatres. Again, occasionally one would find such oddities as centuries-old convention halls made over into theatres for projecting sound motion pictures. In Venice, Italy, for example, a medieval legitimate theatre frequented by Lucrezia Borgia, was remodeled and adapted to motion pictures!

In one respect the European exhibitors seem to have the advantage over their American confreres: Either by chance or by design, the acoustics of their theatres are generally more satisfactory. The result is that while Europeans may not have the variety of entertainment that is available on this side of the water, they are able to present with full mechanical fidelity the material that is at their disposal.

One reason why I am led to such a conclusion is the prevalence of small, intimate theatres. Even without elaborate treatment, these are more nearly inherently good in their acoustics. Small theatres are free from "wide open spaces," since they possess a low volume per auditor. As a general rule, the larger the theatre the greater its relative volume. We all know that seating capacity does not increase in proportion to volume, so that our large palatial theatres pay a price for the privilege of being magnificent: they are handicapped by excessive volume.

In small theatres the sound is subject to many quick reflections causing rapid dissipation of sound energy. In this way reverberation is reduced. Furthermore, the distances involved are so small that there is less possibility for echoes to interfere with their performance. Large theatres must be designed properly so as to overcome these natural disadvantages.

IN EUROPE the small theatre exhibitor, however, is not usually content to rest upon the laurels of the advantages inherent in this type of house. So anxious is he to achieve the utmost in mechanical perfection that one finds the widespread use of velour drapes and other methods of securing good acoustics. They are not satisfied with seeking the best types of sound reproducing equipment, but are willing to take the next step: insuring that the theatre will be an effective acoustic receptor for its entertainment.

At the risk of it being considered moralizing, I am adding to these few comments on the situation in Europe a brief discussion on sound and acoustics. They are old subjects, but are worth repeating until all of us know how to evaluate the quality of a sound picture performance.

There are three elements involved in the phenomenon of sound: a source of vibrations; a medium, like air to transmit the vibrations to listeners; and our ears to respond to them and register them on the brain. The elasticity of the air enables it to transmit sound waves, which are a train of alternate compressions and expansions, actual to and fro vibration of the air particles. The number of vibrations per second fixes the pitch; the intensity of vibration fixes the loudness. The type of motion of the air particles determines the character of the sound.

In general, sounds may be classified as speech, music and noise. Sounds are recognized as musical when they are composed of tones that have a harmonic relation among themselves. Speech consists of sounds with meaning attached to them. Noise is sound lacking definite musical quality—in fact, usually characterized by disagreeable quality.

Sound is a comprehensive term; it applies to anything that is audible. Since in the theatre we strive for something more than mere audibility, we must differentiate between good and bad sound.

Speech and music differ in aim as well as in character. Speech is a means of communication, while music satisfies a less obvious need; one is practical, the other an art. Accordingly one must be examined on the basis of efficiency, the other for its pleasing quality. The primary consideration with speech is understandability, with tonal quality important though secondary. With music, tonal quality is paramount: it is the reason for different types of instruments—it constitutes what is known as tone color.

It is small wonder that sound reproducing equipment must be designed and manufactured with more care than most musical instruments. The equipment must be capable of giving faithful transcriptions of all types of music, from the bass tones of the cello to the high notes of the flute. In one sense, the equipment is all musical instruments. Furthermore, it must act not as a source of all type of music, but of speech and other sounds as well. It must be a faithful, impersonal transcriber, one that does not impose its own idiosyncrasies upon the music it yields. And as a good artist cannot produce the best results with an instrument incapable of matching his art, so do sound pictures depend on the reproducing apparatus.

The broadest criterion of good music is that it be easy to listen to.

BAD SOUND may be said to be that which fatigues the listener. In the case of speech, if a listener must even slightly strain his nerves to understand, or is made uncomfortable by excessive loudness, or reverberation, the sound is obviously bad. In the case of music, if the listener is constantly hearing a certain group of tones accentuated more than the rest, the reproduction is not a true one.

The theatre itself must be considered in relation to sound: its acoustics are the last link in the chain. The same music may be heard very differently in two theatres with differing acoustic properties.

The acoustic factors in sound projection are noise, echo, reverberation and distribution. All are factors to be considered if sound that is good at the horns is to remain good in the auditorium. Noise, whether from inside or outside sources, reduces the intelligibility of reproduced sound in addition to being distracting. Care should be exercised to keep down noise intensity in every way. Its effect on sound is similar to the effect on pictures of excess: one doesn't attempt to project motion pictures in well illuminated surroundings.

Echoes are a rarer source of disturbance. With echoes the sound appears not only to be delayed, but to issue from some point behind the auditor while the action accompanying it appears on the stage. They annoy and confuse in the theatre. They usually consist of reflections from hard curved surfaces in the ceiling, or back wall which may be treated with sound absorbing material.

Reverberation is the name given the sound heard in a room after the source which produced it has stopped. It is due to random reflection of sound between the room walls as it gradually decays. It differs from echo in that it appears as a continuation of the original sound rather than a repetition after an interval. Sounds do not disappear instantaneously but have to be absorbed in some manner. Now some reverberation is desirable to impart a "live" quality to music, so that it is troublesome when in excess of a certain known optimum amount. The remedy is to make the auditorium walls more absorbing by applying materials designed for this purpose according to the result of an analysis.

The last item is distribution, the business of having sufficient intensity at every seat. There is a range of intensities which are most suitable for audition. Sound must not be too loud for comfort at one point and too weak to be intelligible at some other. The matter should not be left to chance when everything else has been scientifically designed. Proper arrangement of the sound sources is essential. Directional sources are a great help. Balcony and orchestra slopes may be designed so as to simplify the problem.

Broadly speaking, the acoustic quality of a theatre is determined by the naturalness with which sound is conveyed from the sound source to the listeners. It must not be jumbled by excessive reverberation or by echoes; it must not be masked by the noise of ventilators and projection room machinery; and it must not be too loud or too soft for comfortable hearing. These factors need constitute atention.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

• • AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES •

AN INVESTIGATION OF FILM MUTILATION

THE ACADEMY of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences announces that through one of its committees it will proceed to "investigate exchange and theatre projection practices to eliminate the present mutilation of release prints." In the first place, so far as appears on the surface, the Academy committee is composed wholly of Hollywood studio technicians. So far as one can observe it contains not one representative of either the exchanges or of theatre projectionists. Surely, if there is to be an investigation, those investigated have every right to expect representation.

The matter of unnecessary film mutilation has long been very thoroughly understood; also, the one method by means of which it may be stopped. Many years before the Academy was organized, I investigated the matter and I have told many times how the trouble can be stopped. The thing is simple, insofar as has to do with procedure, but it is dependent upon cooperation and the exercise of ordinary common sense on the part of exchanges.

Unnecessary film mutilation has its basis in two things; namely, failure or refusal to keep projectors in a fit state of repair or adjustment, and the almost total failure of exchanges to discipline theatres in which such mutilation occurs.

When all exchanges agree to, and do, act in unison and honestly in the matter of compelling theatres to pay for unnecessary damage to film, such as ripped sprocket holes, for example, caused for the most part by worn sprocket teeth coupled with excessive aperture or take-up tension; film indented by sprocket teeth, caused usually by wrongly adjusted or badly worn sprocket idlers; scratched film, usually (though not always) due to carelessness on the part of the projectionist; changeover signal marks of various sorts, the reason for the affixing of which we all know—when the exchanges rise against these, such mutilations will cease. They will not cease until this is done.

The reason why damage for film outrage, save in an occasional instance, is not assessed against the theatre is twofold. First, the exchange seldom knows what theatre outraged the film, and when it does, it is in no position to prove it for the simple reason that in a large percentage of exchanges there is no real inspection of film, and only the most sketchy sort of report, as to its condition. An inspector is required to "chase through" something like three times the number of reels each day that could be thoroughly inspected and repaired, and on top of that the inspector makes no detailed, written report of damages found.

If when an exchange receives a new print it will, each time it is returned from a theatre, have it thoroughly inspected, and have a written report made of every item of apparently unnecessary damage inflicted on the film while at the theatre, and will send a copy of his report to the theatre, together with a bill for all unnecessary damage found, just as soon as the exhibitor discovers that he cannot get film from any other exchange until that damage has been settled for, or the matter has been otherwise cleared up, you may take it from me that unnecessary damage will cease.

The Academy of course has the right to do all the investigating it chooses to. It may even have studio technicians investigate projection practices. However, this is not a technical matter. It is one of practical work, and until some line of action along the lines I have laid down is adopted, neither the Academy nor any one else will get very far in stopping film abuses.

WANTS TO KNOW HIS LIGHT LOSS

J. L. BOWEN of Seattle, Wash., asks, "Can you tell me exactly what the light loss would be in a bi-convex lens three-fourths of an inch thick at its thickest point, assuming the surfaces to be well polished and kept perfectly clean? I will appreciate the information, which must be precise if it is to be of value. If you cannot supply it, will you be kind enough to cite me to some authority who can."

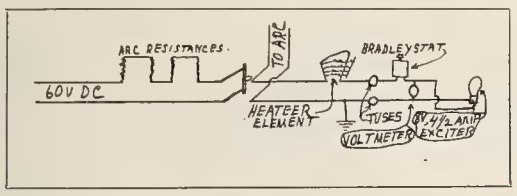
No one can, Friend Bowen, unless further information is forthcoming. Light losses in a lens depend (a) upon the thickness and quality of the glass, (b) upon the refractive indices, and (c) upon the angles at which the light meets its surfaces.

If you will examine Pages 141 to 146, together with Figures 35, 36, 36A and 36B, and Table 6A, in the Bluebook of Projection (which you probably can find in projection rooms of your city, if you do not yourself own it) you will find the answer to your question, so far as it can be answered without knowing the curvature and diameter of the lens, its refractive index and the quality (clearness) of its glass. Provided you are able to supply the above added information, or forward the lens for examination, the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, Rochester, N. Y., can give you an exact statement of the losses that may be involved.

ELIMINATION OF STORAGE BATTERIES

FROM A. P. Sitton, Jr., proprietor of the Muse-u theatre in Tularosa, N. M., comes the following:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: It has been sometime since I told you of a few of the things I have done in the projection room of my theatre. Now I have a new one for you, though the idea itself may or may not be new. Anyhow it is new to me and is working just fine.



"Storage batteries are more or less a source of trouble and worry at the best. I therefore wanted to get them out of the way forever, but the feat could, in my case, only be accomplished at little or no expense. I, like many others, am forced to keep expenses in the back-ground, at least at present. Am using a 60-volt d.c. generator to supply current to the arcs. Other than possible brush disturbances, this should be fairly pure d.c. Anyhow, I figured it would be good enough to serve my purpose, and that the brush disturbances would have no effect on the exciter lamp filament. I also have an 800-watt electric heater, with screw type of heater element. There were Allen Bradley resistances on each of the exciter lamps, by means of which voltage was controlled.

"The 800-watt heater element was connected in series with the Bradley resistance.

and connected directly to the 60-volt direct current, and of course all battery connections to the exciter lamp were removed.

"By cutting down resistance of the heater element by taking off pieces of the coil, I was able to get exactly the right amperage and control, the same as with the resistance. And now for the good news: It works! And the results are just as good as when using storage batteries.

"I therefore fixed the other projector in like fashion, placing the heater element in the rear part of the projector lamphouse, connecting it behind the projector main switch. In this fashion I get both the resistance of the heater element and the resistance of the arc itself; also, when the main switch is pulled, both the arc and the exciter lamp are cut out.

"Of course when the incoming projector arc is lighted the exciter lamp is lighted at the same time. I have been using this for some time and find it to be okay. However, I still must use the storage batteries with the pre-amplifiers, as they are using the 112-A tubes. I am going to make the necessary changes in the pre-amplifiers, use another heater element to cut down the 60 volts to about 7 or 8 volts, put the tubes in both pre-amplifiers on one circuit, with the Bradley resistance to control same, and replace the 112-A tubes with No. 37, such as they are using in auto radio sets. The 37-tube is nearly 100% non-michrophonic. It is of the heater type, hence should give no trouble from the brush disturbance of the generator. To date I have not been able to make this change, due to lack of time, business being so 'good' that I am working out to make both ends meet. However, I am sure it will cut out the storage battery completely."

I am publishing this with an emphatic warning to proceed carefully. So far as I can dope the matter out mentally, provided the generator be a good one and the commutator be kept in first class condition, with proper brush contact and brush pressure, it would work, though I would not care to say how well. Friend Sitton says it works well, but it seems to me there would have to be very close arc regulation, or there would be heavy and constant variation in the exciter lamp current, hence in its light producing power, with of course variation in the sound. Mark you well I'm not saying it will not work just as well as Sitton says it will, but I cannot help having doubts.

Anyhow, the thing certainly is worthy of serious examination and consideration, if for no other reason than that if such a stunt really can be pulled without injury to the sound, it would eliminate a lot of trouble and expense, and that is an important thing, at least for the smaller theatres.

Anyhow, it seems to me it is a thing which may be tried out with very little trouble and expense, and without risk, as the wiring may be so done that if the result is not satisfactory the batteries may be instantly cut in and the new device cut out.

I should appreciate an expression of opinion from readers as to their view of the possibilities of this method

A TREATISE ON PROJECTION CARBONS

THE NATIONAL Carbon Company has issued a new book dealing with projector carbons. A copy of this book may be had by addressing the National Carbon Company, Carbon Sales Department, Cleveland, Ohio, and I strongly advise every progressive projectionist to send for one immediately, because the book (92 pages) contains much matter which will be found helpful in enabling projectionists to secure better results. Just address the company as above and print your name and address, together with the name of the theatre you are with.

Some of the subjects dealt with are (a) carbon, in a discussion of the basic materials from which projection carbons are formed; (b) carbon manufacture; (c) the carbon arc; (d) different types of projection lamps and the carbons they use; (e) SRA projection carbons; (f) carbon arc flood and spot lamps and effect projectors; and (g) brushes.

The foregoing does not by any means exhaust the many interesting and helpful subjects treated of in this book.

AUDITORIUM LIGHTS CAUSING GLARE

FROM A projectionist, whose name and location it seems best not to publish, comes a letter, from which this excerpt is taken:

"Our auditorium is so brightly lighted at the front that the picture contrast is badly injured; also, on either side, well down front, are two ceiling lights under frosted porcelain globes. These lights form glare spots and I believe hurt the eyes of the audience, or such part of it as sits in position so that they meet their eyes more or less directly. I have spoken to the manager about these matters, only to be told to 'Attend to my own business.'

"Now, Brother Richardson, perhaps I am wrong, but it seems to me that since these errors in lighting have a direct and very bad effect upon the results of my work, it is my business, at least as much as it is the business of the manager, and I am going to ask you, if you will do me that favor to write our manager about the matter. Possibly I may get fired over it, but I would rather have even that happen than to have this go on.

"You see, I feel very real pride in, and love for, my work, and to have its finer points thus all ruined by such unnecessary foolishness is to me intolerable. I am very willing to leave it to you how to handle the matter. If you want to bawl him out when, or if, you write, all right. Just proceed as you think best."

There was much more to the letter, all of which gave me the impression that this man is a real projectionist. Moreover, he is an educated man, and unless I am in error, a man of brains and intelligence.

The manager who took such a position acted just about as unwisely as one well could act. The least he could have done would have been to listen carefully to what explanations his projectionist wished to make as to the damage being done, and to any suggestions as to the application of a remedy, or of remedial measures.

Beyond any possible question of doubt the projectionist is right, always assuming him to have set forth the condition correctly, as I have no doubt he has. Poorly judged lighting at the screen end of theatre auditoriums may and often does do exactly what this projectionist says is being done in his case; namely, injure or even pretty well kill the contrast values of the picture. A glare spot on either side, as described, is worse than bad. It is (pardon the candor) just plain stupid. It is hard on the eyes of the audience, highly injurious to the appearance of the picture as viewed by that portion of the audience seated where such light is more or less in their line of vision.

And here is the queer part. If these same persons were asked whether or no the lights (glare spots) were objectionable, many of them, or possibly even all of them would answer no. Why is this? The answer is simple. They have no knowledge of such matters and attribute the strain set up by the lights to the picture itself. But if, while the picture is being projected, these lights were extinguished they would, without exception, promptly declare: "There, that's better," though probably not one of them would be able to offer a lucid explanation as to just why it is better.

Managers should recognize that in the very nature of things, anything which affects the results in sound or picture is a direct concern of the projectionist. The theatre manager has many things to take up his time other than those affecting projection. He should therefore most heartily welcome any inclination on the part of the projectionist to make a real study of all things affecting sound and picture as viewed by the patrons of his theatre, including auditorium lighting and screen surroundings. Wise theatre managers will, so far as possible, give preference in employment to projectionists who can convince them that they have really studied all phases of their profession. I might add that unions would benefit both themselves and the motion picture industry vastly if they took steps to oblige their members, seniority or no seniority, to provide tangible evidence of their knowledge.

A LETTER ABOUT PROJECTION TODAY

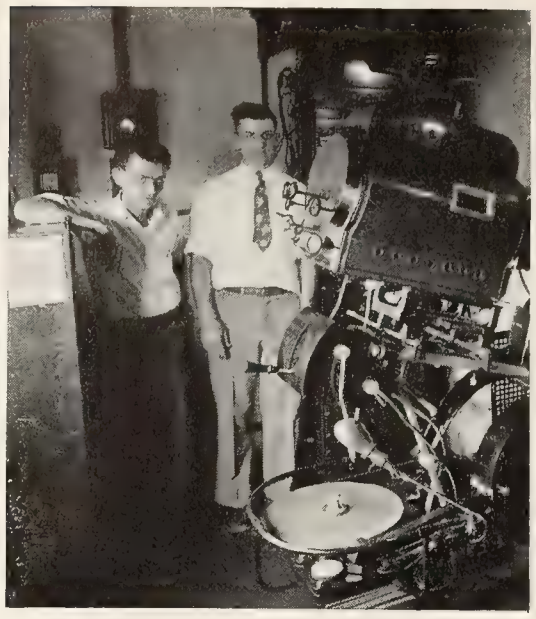
FROM F. W. Hamilton, chief projectionist of the Fox-Kennedy theatre in Kirksville, Mo., comes the following very interesting letter:

"I have followed your writings very closely in the HERALD and BETTER THEATRES for a long time. You are one I like to write to. We projectionists are, as you know, usually stuck up near the roof and have very few visitors. People have the idea that the projection room is the least important place in the theatre.

"I have been throwing light rays at the screen for more than 16 years, but am still looking for new ideas, believing that one never gets too old or too experienced to improve his work by assimilating new ideas.

"We have a modern outfit of Simplex projectors, Western Electric sound equipment, and we have a record we are rather proud of. We have gone three years without the necessity of making a trouble call. That means 13,000 hours of operation. Our service man, Mr. H. M. Danner, located at Columbia, Mo. (Kansas City Division), makes a regular call every two weeks. I would like to impress upon projectionists the fact that co-operation between service men, projectionists and managers makes for good results on the screen and through the horns at all times.

"I keep a 'question and want sheet.' If anything comes up that I want to bring to the attention of the service man, I make a memo of it, and when he arrives we thrash it out together. If parts are needed, I inform the manager, and if possible we get the part. I have a manager who will get me replacement parts, even if he has to slight some other important element in the house to do so. He says the projection room must function properly since its proper functioning means a lot to the theatre of today.



"Erpi service, plus co-operation of the projectionist and manager means splendid results at all times, if all three are on the job and do their duty.

"I do all the repair work it is possible for me to do, and have all necessary parts ready for use when needed. The projectors have been in use for seven years. They have never been sent out for repairs.

"The Standard Release Print is a long step forward. It amounts to just exactly what the projectionist and exhibitors make it amount to. Doubling up is the thing that makes it non-standard. We run single reels and like them. I know my tensions are set so that there is no excessive pull on any part of the print. [Some of you chaps read that last sentence over about twelve times. Correct tension makes a great big difference in economy, both in print life and projection mechanism.—F. H. R.]

"I get good, bad and new prints. If they are bad, I repair them as much as possible. If new, I take care of oil, tensions, bad rollers, etc., in order to preserve the newness as long as possible, as you have so many, many times suggested in your articles.

"I hand you herewith a photograph.

F. W. Hamilton (left) and his former associate, Kenneth Shipman, in the projection room of the Fox-Kennedy theatre in Kirksville, Mo. The projectors are Simplex, and the sound system Western Electric.

Thought it might be worth printing, though maybe not. That is up to you. Thought it worth a try, anyway. I have taken some of your time, but as I have said, I am away up here in the dark and do not get a chance to talk much. We are members of Local 573, Moberly, Mo. We like our work and try to beat our own record each day.

"The one idea I really wanted to put over with you is the advantage of the service engineer, projectionist and manager working together, which in this case has resulted in 13,000 hours of service without the necessity of yelling for help. The men at the Missouri theatre in St. Joseph, got quite a send-off because they made 11,000 hours, but they had a larger house and more men to take care of the equipment."

I like the way Brother Hamilton talks, particularly when he says that they try each day to beat their own record. That sounds mighty good. It is the frame of mind that produces real results. No man can possibly try continuously to improve his work without doing it and the man who has this viewpoint may almost invariably be depended upon to produce good results.

The 13,000 hours without trouble is, so far as I know, a record—and a mighty good one, too. I am not quite sure about Friend Shipman. Brother Hamilton mixed this matter up a little. I think, however, Shipman was the second projectionist, and the house now has been reduced to a one man job—a thing I most thoroughly do not believe in.

What Brother Hamilton says about co-operation betwen projectionist, service man and manager is absolutely true. It is the only way to get really good results.

The memo sheet Brother Hamilton speaks of is a mighty good stunt. It prevents forgetting of minor, and possibly some major, things when the service man arrives.

Kirksville, by the way is where my mother's sister came mighty near an accidental death. Illuminating gas then was an almost unknown quantity to country people. She was a school teacher, and went down to Kirksville to attend teachers' normal school. The first night she tried to blow out the gas, but fortunately without success, and being unable to sleep with all that waste going on, she dressed and went down to the office and discovered that blowing out the gas was regarded as bad form.

WASP-BUZZ AND THE S. R. P.

IN A Fairmont, W. Va., daily paper we learn that our old friend Frank Dudiak, long known to us all as an intermittent correspondent, has adopted a family—or has the family adopted him? In his mature years, however, Frank seems to have become hard-boiled, and maybe a bit cruel, for not one of his numerous adopted "children" will he permit to climb up and sit on his lap, as children are wont to do. As a matter of fact, we are advised that he slaps, or slaps vigorously, at any "child" that attempts the least bit of familiarity. Moreover, he keeps the whole kit and caboodle of them in the projection room both day and night, even compelling them to forage for their own food.

What is this all about, do you ask? Well, one day when Dudiak, or his sidekick, chanced to glance up, a small round object was observed near the projection room ventilator, on and around which several vigorous looking wasps were busily busy. Since that time the new wasp's domicile has grown in proportions and inhabitants until now there is danger that the buzz is heard out in the auditorium, possibly causing the audience to seek the exits with vigor.

Dudiak, who sent the clipping, says "Referring to the discussion of the Standard Release Print, while every self-respecting projectionist who has proper respect for his profession tries to commit no outrage, either upon the S.R.P. or his audiences, it is a fact that machine operators still insist upon 'engraving' their own individual trade mark in the film emulsion in the form of scratch marks, not infrequently obliterating one or more whole frames of the picture.

"Of course when the print reaches the next self-respecting projectionist, if the exchange has not cut out the shameful outrage, he (the projectionist) does, which process several times repeated finally entirely destroys the whole end of the reel, and of course entirely eliminates the S.R.P. markings. Such abuses are nothing less than impertinence on the part of the machine operator—I say "machine operator," because of the fact that no man worthy of the title of projectionist would commit such an abuse.

"Now that we have the S.R.P., the mutilation of film by affixing changeover signals, by scratching the emulsion or otherwise, should be only a memory, but it is not so. We have very often received prints in otherwise excellent condition, but with scratch marks over or near the S.R.P. marks. Conceiving that we are under certain obligations to our profession and to our audiences, we cut out the outrages and replace the black circle S.R.P. marks, if necessary, with black lacquer, whereupon we can project the prints at least knowing that our audiences will not be bombarded with unsightly flashes of white light on the screen before each changeover. Surely it would seem to be the duty of the Powers-That-Be to put a stop to such outrages."

Dudiak is entirely right. It most emphatically is the duty of the exchange to do that little thing. I have times almost without number pointed out the simple fact that if the exchange, immediately upon inspecting a film and finding scratch or other changeover marks, will make vigorous protest to the theatre, advising its manager that any future outrages of that sort by their projectionist will be charged against the theatre, very soon Mr. Machine Operator will be advised by the manager, in plain language, that he must himself pay the damage, and one or two such payments will cause him to put an end to his film butchery. First, however, the exchange inspector must be given emphatic instructions to eliminate all such marks on all prints, and thereafter to keep a written record, after looking carefully at each inspection, as to there being no such abuses present. Then if the print comes back with a set of them, the exchange manager is in a position to speak emphatically and with certainty. It might be well to inclose with each print a card reading something like this:

This print carries the Standard Release Print changeover signal marks. If it is returned with other changeover marks of any sort affixed, the damage will be charged against the theatre.

It might also be well, upon the installation of such a policy, to write the theatre manager, setting forth the fact that the charge will be made, suggesting that if he receives a bill, it should be charged against the projectionist, he being the one who deliberately committed the outrage. The plan, however, implies that the exchange inspector will look carefully for marks in each reel of each production, making a written record of their presence or absence. Otherwise, bills may be sent to the wrong theatre, which would mean trouble and confusion.

Equipment News and Comment

NEW RCA SYSTEM

● RCA Photophone has introduced to the market its equipment designed to reproduce a greater range of frequencies.

Four types of equipment have been designed, a Super-Size, for theatres having from 2,500 to 4,000 seats; a small size for theatres having from 1,400 to 2,500 seats; another small size, for theatres having from 600 to 1,400 seats; and the special size, for theatres having up to 600 seats. All types are a.c.-operated, with newly developed and designed voltage amplifiers that are identical for each type. The first major installations of this new equipment are now being made in the new Cinema and the Radio City Music Hall at Rockefeller Center.

Features of the new apparatus include a sound head of the drum type, quiet a.c. amplifiers, the extended frequency range, directional baffle and improved cone speaker.

The new sound head is to be standard with these equipments. The constant speed arrangement consists of a smooth drum pulled by the film, mounted on a shaft having a very light hollow case on the outer end of the shaft. The shaft runs in ball bearings. Inside the hollow cylindrical case is a fly wheel concentric with the shaft but running on a ball bearing so that it is entirely free to rotate about the shaft. The remaining space inside the case is filled with a suitable oil which acts to damp out oscillations which would occur in the motion of the drum, were the fly wheel connected to the shaft.

A ball bearing pressure and guide roller holds the film in contact with the drum at the point where it is fed on. Since the drum and guide roller turn freely, the film is quite slack between the drum and feed sprocket. The drum runs at a very uniform speed regardless of the accuracy of driving gears, eccentricity of the sprocket or other variables that on other designs have been troublesome. The drum runs with little friction. Ball bearings are used throughout. The motor is built into the sound head casting. A worm gear on the end of the armature shaft drives the gear train. The worm runs in an oil bath. D.c.-synchronous induction, or selsyn motors, can be provided.

An improved exciter lamp socket is used. The lamp base is clamped in a chuck exerting pressure evenly so as to prevent cracking lamp bulbs. A vertical adjustment is made by means of a knurled ring after the lamp is clamped in the socket.

The loud speakers are essentially the same as have been used on the existing equipment. The best results are obtained from a baffle 10 feet long. This large baffle reproduces low frequencies with about the same output as the higher frequencies and is much more directional than the shorter baffles for low frequencies. This results in the reproduction being less dependent on the acoustical characteristics of the auditorium. The 10-foot baffle should be installed wherever possible. A baffle of this size which can be quickly collapsed into a space about 36 inches deep for use in theatres having stage shows is being designed. The 50-inch baffle is satisfactory when the auditorium is slightly reverberant at low frequencies which usually is the case.

CHANGEOVER, FADER

● A new changeover and a new fader stop for Western Electric equipment have been developed by the E. W. Hulett Manufacturing Company of Chicago. The changeover is of the mechanical type and is installed on the wall in front of the port holes. It can be used with any make projector and is designed to sell at a price within reach of smaller houses.

The new fader serves the purpose of stopping the fader at the same place when a changeover is made as it was before the change. This, the manufacturer declares, assures the correct amount of volume instantly at changeover, thus eliminating any variation when changeovers are made.

EXCITER LAMPS

● Exciting lamps have been added to the line of sound accessories manufactured by The Sonolux Company of East Newark, N. J. The line includes a lamp for every type and make of sound equipment.

AUTOMATIC CHANGEOVER

● An automatic changeover device invented by a projectionist, Ben Garros of Los Angeles, has been brought out by the Apasco System of that city. The device is designed to fit all standard projectors. The principle of operation is based on gravity. Operation is said to be absolutely automatic, but projectionists are cautioned to be accurate as to the amount of tail or leader used.

LENSES AND PHOTOCELLS

● A line of projection lenses, and photo-electric cells marked under the name of Lumotron, have been added to the products of the General Scientific Corporation of Chicago. The lenses were developed by the Graf Lens Company, which recently became a division of the former concern.

Accounting Systems

BOOKKEEPING systems taking into consideration specific requirements of the theatre have been developed to care for the operation of motion picture houses. These may be had either in loose leaf form or in solid book form covering an entire year's operation. These systems are designed to cover fully receipts and disbursements, film used, tickets sold, etc., and enable the exhibitor to check with promptness and accuracy his daily, weekly business or the business for the year. Prices range from $1.50 to $3.50.

Acoustical Products and Engineering

PROPER acoustics is today a subject of outstanding importance in motion picture theatres. The introduction of sound films has necessitated the establishment of a more exact standard of acoustics than was necessary when motion picture theatres simply had the acoustical problem involved in orchestral and incidental music, because speech demands a more exact acoustical condition than music. In addition, the use of sound films made possible a range of volume never before possible, and made it necessary as well to reproduce carefully every shade and inflection of the human voice. New types of speakers, special sound screens, etc., add to the problem.

An auditorium that is faulty in acoustical properties is incapable of being used with any degree of satisfaction for sound films. Due also to the limitations of the recording and reproducing apparatus it is essential that the acoustical properties of the theatre in which sound films are reproduced shall aid in the quality of the reproduction rather than introduce added distortion and confusion. The problem of acoustics in auditoriums has been reduced to a science, and proper acoustics may be built into new theatres or provided in existing theatres through a proper study of theatre design and the use of interior finishes which have the qualities that control sound. Extensive research within the past few years has produced types of interior finish which combine the desirable acoustical characteristics with excellent decorative possibilities. These materials have an architectural flexibility of standard at least approximating that of interior finishes.

The problem of acoustics in theatres has resulted in special consideration of them by certain manufacturers who have established special departments, headed by experts, to cooperate with theatre owners and architects in the acoustical treatment of theatre buildings.

Act Announcers

THE prevalence of combination bills in both motion picture and vaudeville theatres gives added significance to the act announcer. Naturally, in new houses these should be installed during construction so that they will harmonize with the interior design. In remodeling, suitable designs may be obtained for the decorative scheme decided upon. Act announcers are either automatically or hand controlled, with the automatic ones controlled remotely or from the stage. The general principle of the act announcer may be successfully used in window display promotion for the announcing of current and forthcoming bills. Such mechanism must be automatically operated.

Addressing and Duplicating Machines

IN machines of this type for the automatic addressing of house organs, programs, special promotional letters and other literature, as well as sales letters, there are two methods employed in making stencils. One is known as the typewriteable address card system which may be prepared on a typewriter, and the other is the embossing of names and addresses on metal plates. Exhibitors will find that addressing machines may be purchased on time, and will be given demonstrations without cost or obligation. Addressing machines may be purchased as low as $20.

Advertising Films

THEATRE publicity assumes many forms and the alert exhibitor utilizes each at some time or other to suit the occasion. One of the most effective forms is the publicity film, which may be presented as a local news reel, a trailer, a presentation, a leader, a playlet, etc. In some cases as many as ten such films are run, giving the exhibitor advertising for his own business or an income from the charge he makes for thus advertising other businesses.

Advertising Novelties

THE thing to be accomplished through the use of advertising novelties, of one type or another is the chief consideration in their selection. Among the popular novelties, however, which have been used by theatres for stimulating matinee business, building up juvenile performances or bolstering business on week nights are balloons, thermometers on which are imprinted pictures of stars, buttons, badges, pennants, confections, toys, etc. A popular children's matinee stunt can be obtained by giving away a variety of novelty toys. These can be had in boxes containing 100 toys ranging in value from 5c to 15c at a cost of $3.00.

Air Conditioning and Cooling Equipment

AIR CONDITIONING in the theatre has already arrived at a degree of importance making it one of the necessary adjuncts of the modern motion picture theatre. Because in the theatre people are closely associated physically in great numbers, and for the purpose of realizing enjoyment, the atmospheric conditions of the auditorium especially must not be dependent upon the weather or on any other chance factor. Enjoyment of the entertainment is closely connected with comfort, and the popularity of the theatre is of course influenced by its effect upon health.

Air conditioning does not only mean facilities for cooling a theatre during the hot months, but involves distribution of fresh, clean air at proper temperatures and pressures, and without drafts in the breathing zone. This may mean that the system should be capable of functioning in connection with the heating apparatus as well as with the cooling facilities.

Local conditions influence to some extent the kind of an air conditioning system required in any specific theatre. Some could achieve some measure of good air conditions with equipment costing as low as a few thousand dollars. Others require more elaborate apparatus.

Included in equipment designed to provide better air conditions in the auditorium than would be the case were there no artificial means whatever, are simple ventilating systems, by which air from the outside is drawn into the theatre and given circulation through the agency of fans. At the other extreme are systems costing a great deal more which give the theatre operator entire control of the air conditions in his theatre, regardless of the weather or the season of the year.

The cooling method in the more elaborate apparatus requires a refrigeration chamber, in which the air is drawn through water vapor, the water having been cooled by means of a gas compressor, the refrigeration agent being carbon dioxide or other chemical of similar action.

Aisle Lights

AISLE lights should be installed on every sixth chair standard in zigzag fashion along aisle. Lights are placed at sufficient height from floor to properly illuminate same without disturbing reflection to screen or audience. 10-watt lamps are generally used. Practically all theatres today are installing aisle lights as a protection and convenience to patrons. In recent months a number of instances have been noted where aisle lights have been cast as part of the chair standard itself, the practice being carried out in the more elaborate theatres when the chairs are built to certain decorative specifications.

Anchors for Chairs

THESE ARE KNOWN as expansion bolts, theatre seating style. The new improved anchor consists of an especially long tapered fin head bolt, conical cup, lead sleeve, washer and hexagon nut. For best results these should be placed into a hole ½-inch in diameter. It is suggested that one use a 17/32-inch diameter drill to allow for wear. The bolt is set head downward into the hole. A setting tool, which is a hollow piece of rod, is slipped over the bolt against the washer, and when driven with a few blows of a hammer, expands the conical cup which spreads out, increasing the diameter of the head of the bolt to the absolute diameter of the hole and thereby allowing no lead to be driven past the head of the bolt, and at the same time expands the lead sleeve into every crevice in the concrete. This feature makes this new bolt hold more, even though the hold in the concrete has been drilled oversize to make up for drill wear.

These bolts come packed 100 to the box, and are completely assembled with the exception of the nuts which are placed in a separate envelope inside the box. Assembling the bolts in this fashion, without the nuts, saves considerable time in installation by eliminating the necessity of removing the nut from each bolt. After the bolt is securely set in the concrete, the hole in the chair leg, is placed over the bolt and the nuts screwed down tight.

These bolts are made in ¼-inch diameter, in 1½-inch or longer lengths. These expansion bolts will hold chairs tight to the floor up to the breaking strength of the bolt, which is in excess of 2,000 pounds direct pull.

Arc Regulators

AS THE NAME implies the arc regulator regulates the voltage at the arc through automatic feeding as the carbon is consumed and the gap between the carbons increases. The result of this automatic action is a steady light on the screen pronounced superior to that which it is possible to produce by hand. The arc control, as it is frequently called, feeds the carbons in an even manner. This equipment sells for about $125.

Artificial Flowers and Plants

MANY PLACES in the theatre may profitably be made beautiful through the use of art plants and flowers. The lobby, foyer, auditorium walls and organ grill offer excellent places for such use. Many theatres are capitalizing the seasonal rejuvenation it is possible to achieve in the house through the use of plants and flowers. Much progress has been made recently in the manufacture of beautiful art flowers, plants and trees of all kinds. Not only do art plants and flowers provide a natural beauty in the theatre but they may advantageously be used in brightening dark corners and barren spaces.

Banners and Posters (Hand-Painted)

DUE TO IMPROVED workmanship and quality of product theatre advertising by means of hand painted banners has gained renewed vogue in the past few years. Banners in many colors are now available on heavy poster paper, on muslin and in the form that is known as regular paper banners. The usual sizes of these banners are 32 or 36 inches wide by 10 feet. Muslin banners are made in the same width running any length the cost being around 25 cents per foot. The paper and heavy poster banners about 3x10 feet cost about 50 cents each. The banners are painted in oil color and are waterproof. A variety of colors may be included. All banners may be artistically air-brushed at no additional cost.

In addition to the straight lettered banners, illustrated banners are sometimes desired for big attractions. Banners range in cost from 25 cents per foot up.

Batteries

BATTERIES FORM important units of sound reproducers and are generally furnished by the manufacturer with the sound apparatus. Non-synchronous devices do not use them, but synchronous methods must have them in order to eliminate the hum of the alternating current. Any standard make of batteries can be used, but it is always best to use the make furnished or recommended by the manufacturer of the sound apparatus.

Another important use of batteries in motion picture theatres is in emergency lighting systems which augment the regular source of light power as a safeguard against breakdown of the local system. They are installed for instant service upon such a breakdown, being placed in operation automatically. Besides giving the necessary power for lighting, they are capable also of affording the projector motors power for some time. Prices depend on the nature of the installation.

Bell and Buzzer Signal Systems

PERFECT CONTINUITY of the performance depends upon bell, buzzers and signal systems. The projection room and the stage and the managers office keep in constant touch with each other by various systems of signaling, and only by these means can coordination exist. The ushers have means of signaling the doorman or director as to which part of the house to send patrons, and the ushers are informed by a seat indicating device where and how many seats are empty or filled.

Bronze and Iron Work, Ornamental

THE THEATRE today cannot be shoddy in appearance. Everything visible to the eye of the patron must be colorful and artistic—the organ grilles, all metal work on doors, railings, wickets, metal accoutrements in men's smoking rooms and women's rest rooms, etc. This bronze and iron work may be artistic in its plainness, or in the elaborateness of its design and mould, or again in the severity of the modernistic tone. Grilles can be made in any design or size, and one can also obtain bronze ticket booths and lobby frames.

Bulletin Boards, Changeable

CHANGEABLE BULLETIN boards, which come under this heading involve the use of a grooved board on which are placed white enameled brass letters, white enameled die cast aluminum letters or white or red celluloid letters of various sizes as may be desired to work out an attractive announcement. The background of the board is usually covered with a dark broadcloth surrounded by a frame in mahogany or extruded cast bronze. The letters are hung in the horizontal grooves of the board and the announcement accomplished through placing of the letters in their most advantageous manner. These changeable bulletin boards are made in various sizes ranging from 10 inches by 6 inches to large boards.

Many theatres have adopted signs of this type for use in the lobby in announcing coming and present attractions. In fact the ease with which announcements may be set up or changed gives these bulletin boards a wide range of use in the motion picture house.

Also used on bulletin boards, but particularly adapted also for marquise signs, to announce the current attraction, are letters of raised opal glass mounts in oxidized finished metal frames and illuminated from the inside by electric lamps.

Cable, Motion Picture

MOTION PICTURE cable and other asbestos insulated wires occupy an important place in theatres, being extensively used in the projection room for the projectors, for spot and flood lights, switchboards, motor and grid resistance leads and the like. The two important features of motion picture cable are flexibility and immunity to flame and heat. Owing to the intense heat and possible danger from fire in projection booths the conductor must have the finest kind of insulation. Because of the necessity for constant changes of position for floods and arcs the cable must be very flexible and tough enough to endure wear.

Canopies, Theatre

USE OF ARTISTIC canopies by motion picture theatres is growing in popularity among houses of all sizes. A canopy serves a number of practical purposes. They offer theatres an excellent advertising medium while giving to the house an attractive and inviting entrance. During inclement weather they offer protection to waiting patrons.

Canopies are usually constructed of sheet metal and may be obtained in a variety of designs. They are furnished with glass roof or with steel ceiling and metal roof. Numerous interesting standard designs have been developed by marquee manufacturers especially for theatre use. These are easily installed and are shipped to theatres in convenient sections. Suggestions for attractive designs are available. Inquiries should be accompanied by approximate measurements of the front of the building where the canopy is to be used.

Not only are practically all of the new theatres being erected installing marquees but they are being exclusively used in the remodeling of the old houses, because of the effective manner in which they give to the theatres a new and pleasing appearance at small cost.

Carbons

MOTION PICTURE projection carbons might possibly be considered one of the most staple products in the operation of the moving picture theatre.

There is no factor, indeed, which can claim any more attention in the successful operation of the theatre than the light which is used for projection, and quite a little depends on both the quantity and quality of projector carbons kept on hand in the projection booth.

Modern projection demands the best in quality in projection carbons today, and this demand is being met by the carbon manufacturers through their scientific and research departments with products that have kept pace with modern progress.

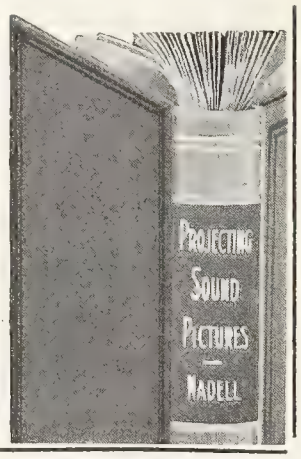
and deeper the nap the more life may be expected of a carpet. Generally, floor coverings and carpets should be of a nature that rest on the floor and give the impression of stability and foundation upon which one may walk with security. A carpet that is fuzzy, light in color and over-decorated has a tendency to give the impression that it is not resting—but rather floating. Obviously this is an unfavorable impression. Carpet padding used under the carpet not only provides a softer and more comfortable feeling to the foot but reduces friction and adds many years to the life of the carpet by keeping it away from direct contact with the hard floor.

Carpets also should be selected with a view to the acoustics of the theatre.

"100% value for any projectionist"



—so says H. J. Schmieder, of Easton, Pa., after examining Nadell's new book, Projecting Sound Pictures. But that's not all. Here are some other comments we have received:

"I consider it the best book of its kind yet published." — E. B. Olson, Supervisor of Projection, Warner Bros. Theatres.

"There is nothing in the theatre that is better value for money than this book."—The Bioscope (British).

"Will give the reader a clear understanding of the intricacies of operating sound equipment."—Film Daily.

"Mr. Nadell proceeds from theory to practice with considerable ease, and combines both elements in an understandable whole." — International Projectionist.

You too will find this the clear, simple explanation of sound equipment, its operation and repair for which you have been looking. Gives the fundamental principles on which all makes of equipment are based. Explains their use so that you can recognize the nature of any sound trouble, trace it to its cause, diagnose its importance, take the right steps to correct it. Show when and how repairs can be made in a hurry—when replacement of parts is necessary. A real key to better sound projection.

Carpet Cushioning

IN THEATRES, where continuous coming and going of patrons subjects the carpets in aisles, stairs and foyers to unusual wear a cushioning under the carpets has been found to add many years to their life. In addition to this practical advantage carpet cushioning gives a delightful sensation of richness and luxury which is important in creating a desirable atmosphere in the theatre. Carpet cushioning is a product made of finely combed, tufted vegetable fibre interlaced through a burlap backing or of animal hair felted under pressure. It is made in thicknesses varying from ¼ to ¾ of an inch. Carpet cushioning also has a bearing upon acoustics.

Chairs, Theatre

TO EQUIP a theatre properly, the first requirement is a thorough understanding of the uses to which the building is to be put. Having determined that, a seating diagram or layout should be made to insure the maximum seating capacity consistent with comfort, safety, facility of entrance and exit, compliance with local or state building requirements, proper sight lines, elevations and other mechanical adaptations and adjustments

The arrangement and width of aisles and passageways should be such that transient patrons may move about with a minimum of disturbance to those who are seated. For this reason, the number of seats in each row between aisles should be kept as low as is possible and consistent with the desired seating capacity. It is well to have not more than ten or twelve seats in a row between each aisle, although this number may, if necessary, be increased slightly. Many theatres, however, have established a maximum of fourteen seats.

The distance between rows varies between 30 and 32 inches. Experience has demonstrated that this distance is necessary to accommodate all sizes of patrons, and to facilitate entering and leaving the center seats of a row while others are seated.

In planning the seats for a theatre, it is a safe policy to plan for the accommodation of persons who are above the average in size, since seating that is too large does not produce discomfort. In the larger theatres, therefore the majority of the seats are 20 inches wide with an occasional 19-inch chair to fill in. An exception to this ruling is the seating for loges, which frequently is as much as 24 inches wide.

Every patron is entitled to a direct and open vision of the stage. Sloping and terracing of floor and the curvatures of the balcony are, of course, intended to facilitate this, but unless the seats are specially made to meet the requirements of each and every part of the house, these avail but little. For so greatly do theatres vary in plan and design that the seating construction problem must be solved individually in each instance.

The relative length of chair legs, both front and back, must be so adjusted as to conform evenly to the slope of the floor and still keep the chair in its normal position. Then the occupant is assured of a natural, easy and comfortable position in sitting. He is neither tilted too far forward nor too far back. His feet and those of the chair should rest very naturally in exactly the same line or plane.

Where there are sloping sides toward the center, a two-fold problem presents itself. Not only must the inclination toward the front be right, but there must be a mechanical adjustment in the fastening of the seats to standards, so that the seats will be perfectly level and parallel with the natural floor level and the sitter will not be tilted at an angle.

The necessary converging of seats from the outer circumference toward the stage, both on the main floor and in the balconies, is another problem. There must be no loss of chair space and resultant decreased capacity, but the symmetry and a general pleasing and orderly appearance must be preserved.

● Look to your seating . . . carefully! Present a comfortable chair to any patron and he, or she, is pleased with both you and your theatre, even before the curtain parts. Relaxation contributes more than half the enjoyment to theatre going. The picture may be an all-starred feature or a dismal box-office "flop". If it is exhibited to an audience physically at ease, it is much more likely to satisfy those who pay to see it. Patrons are commonly known to be less critical about the program when they are allowed to relax in comfortable chairs. Irwin Theatre Chairs, in which solid sitting comfort is characteristic of every model, offer a timely profit-making investment for increased profits in any theatre whose present seating is not up to the standard of public demand. In design, durable materials, careful construction and beauty of finish and fabric, their value is unmatchable. Irwin Theatre Chairs add much to the pleasure of theatre going and thus contribute greatly to the profits of the theatre owner. There is a model priced within the means of every theatre and we have a Reseating Proposal to offer you through our distributor that is exceptional in both installation cost and liberal terms.

The placing of chairs in rows and the arrangement of the aisles, to make ingress and egress as easy, speedy and safe as possible and to conform in every way with the building and fire ordinance of each community, is another important point requiring careful thought and planning.

Frequently, a very simple rearrangement makes possible an appreciable increase in house capacity, and if not in actual increased numerical capacity, actual increased box office receipts by transforming otherwise less desirable and less valuable seats to a higher grade of valuation and desirability.

Almost equally as important as proper arrangement of the chairs themselves, is the quality, comfort and service they will give. The element of comfort is an especially outstanding consideration as the ability to provide rest and ease for the audience during the performance augurs for more solid enjoyment of the show. Roominess, correct springs, smooth, well upholstered back, correctly placed arm rests, a perfectly level placing with the floor, serviceable hat holders, smoothly operating and noiseless seat-hinges—these are but a few of the things that go to make up a comfortable theatre chair.

Strength, stability, durability must be embodied in every chair. A broken seat, while apparently not of great importance in itself, is nevertheless an annoyance that reflects unfavorably on the theatre as a whole.

Talking pictures have injected another element into the problem of seating for higher efficiency, i. e., acoustics. The acoustical properties of the theatre chair are now very important, and for sound-equipped houses upholstered seats have become a necessity due to their sound-absorbent quality. Veneer backs and seats are likely to induce sound reverberation of obnoxious character and may easily mar an otherwise perfect acoustical condition. Therefore, in the selection of seating facilities, the subject of acoustics must now be given most serious consideration.

Chair Covers

IN ADDITION to giving a pleasing and inviting appearance to the auditorium, chair covers serve the practical purpose of coolness and sanitation. An interior otherwise drab may be transformed into a cool, clean, cheerful looking place through their use.

Theatre chair covers have been used extensively in dramatic and larger motion picture houses but it is only recently that by the smaller houses. No doubt one of the causes has been the belief that they were an expensive proposition. This however, is not the case. Recently chair covers have been developed which are reversible, effecting an important saving in laundering costs. There are several things that should be borne in mind in connection with the use of chair covers. It should be remembered that auditorium and balcony chairs as a rule require two distinct and different styles of covers. The auditorium chair should be equipped with a cover which covers the entire chair back while the balcony chair need only have a quarter back. This is because of the slope on which balcony chairs are placed.

Working from blue prints provides the most satisfactory way of assuring a perfect fit of the cover for each chair.

Chair pads for veneer seats are also obtainable, and there are also special chair materials which are intended to be used as aids to acoustics.

Chair Fastening Cement

CEMENT of this kind is for firmly attaching into the floor the metal pieces to which the theatre chair is bolted. Into a hole made in the floor, the metal piece itself, or bolt for its attachment, is inserted, then around it is poured the melted cement. In about ten minutes this cement hardens and holds the metal piece or bolt firmly in place.

When used in reseating, the old metal piece or bolt is removed, a new one inserted and the cement poured around it. Such cement can be procured for around $7.50 per 12-pound can.

Chairs, Folding

THE FOLDING CHAIR, solidly constructed, plays an important role in the theatre today. With presentation and the stagehand, and the need for compactness behind the scenes, the folding chair serves manifold purposes. The durability of this type of chair as made today adds to its value as a stage requisite. Many very small theatres likewise find the folding chair suitable owing to the frequent necessity of clearing the auditorium floor for other forms of entertainment. The folding chair combines neatness, durability and practicability.

Change Makers

SPEED AND ACCURACY are obtained at the box office through the use of coin changing machines which in addition to their time saving facilities offer a valuable protection against annoying mistakes in making change to patrons. With the coin changing machines a light touch at the keyboard is all that is necessary to deliver the correct number of coins to the patron who easily scoops them up from a cup at the side of the change maker. Coins may be delivered either from the right or left side and these automatic cashiers as developed for theatres have been improved in recent months until now they are available in sizes which occupy only about 81 square inches of space in the box office.

In the handling of crowds the coin changer plays a particularly important part in reducing to a minimum delay at the ticket window, and some are equipped with safety locks to prevent short changing when a channel is empty. Changeable Sign Letters

CHANGEABLE SIGN LETTERS are widely used by theatres in the marquee and have proved especially popular, because of the flexible manner in which they permit billing of a current or coming attraction. Changeable sign letters are generally made of cast aluminum with the letter part cut out. When used on the marquee these letters can be moved to make an attractive announcement. They are obtainable in large and small sizes and, in addition, numerals of the same character are also available.

Cleaning Compounds

THEATRE REMODELING and rejuvenation go hand in hand with a general clean-up, to which houses are periodically subjected. In this connection cleaning compounds are available for use, not only for the exterior of the house, but for cleaning painted surfaces, marble, tile, terrazzo and mosaic. These latter materials, much in use in theatre buildings, may be brought back to a pleasing state of newness through the use of proper detergents.

Color Films

THERE HAVE been motion pictures in color for a number of years, but in 1929 was made the first feature picture entirely in color. This proved an added touch of realism to the sound picture, and at once color was incorporated in the production plans of most producers.

Most professional productions on standard film employ the process known as technicolor, a patented method consisting fundamentally in filtering out the blues, greens and reds in recording and superimposing them properly in printing. There are other processes less extensively used, including a two-color additive method.

A new process for amateur and semi-professional work was brought out in 1929 by the Eastman Kodak laboratories. Motion pictures in full natural colors in the 16-mm. size may be made by the use of Kodacolor film and by the addition of a Kodacolor filter to the lens hood of the camera. Provided the light is adequate, the process is no more difficult than making black and white pictures, and projection is accomplished simply by adding a Kodacolor filter to the projector. Minute lenses embossed right on the film cause the colors to register separately and thus do the trick. Since duplicates can not be made from Kodacolor film, the process is still impractical for theatre productions.

Color Hoods

ARTISTIC COLOR effects on electric signs are possible by the use of color hoods which are available in six colors: ruby, blue, green, amber, opal and canary. The color hoods are made of fadeless glass and are made to fit any standard size lamp where they are held in place by spring fasteners, and are readily taken off and replaced for cleaning.

In connection with sign flashers color hoods are an important feature in achieving life and color to make an attention compelling display.

Composition Flooring

MANY PARTS of a theatre especially call for a floor covering other than woven materials, and often composition flooring may adequately take the place of expensive tiles, terrazzo, etc. Indeed, in some of the most elegant theatres, the new types of composition flooring, which is now made in raised sections and patterns suggestive of tile and other kinds of mineral flooring, have been effectively adopted.

Composition flooring is made by a number of companies specializing in this product, and all have their own processes. It may be said, however, that the basic materials are cork or rubber, and natural gums. For the coloring is added color pigments according to the design. The resulting mass is attached to burlap backing. Composition flooring comes in varying thicknesses, depending on the use to which it is to be put, and it may be especially designed.

Condensers

CONDENSERS are single glass lenses, unmounted. They are made in various diameters from 2¼ inches to 8 inches in diameter; the 4½ inches diameter and the 8 inches diameter being used mostly in motion picture work. The condenser is located in the front end of the lamphouse to gather the rays of light from the light source, and bend them, or condense them into a spot of light on the aperture. They are made in different shapes, some being Plano Convex some Meniscus or Moon shape and others Bi-Convex.

Condenser breakage and trouble has been greatly reduced through the perfection and development of heat resisting glass which is tempered and processed to withstand extreme changes of temperature. This, it is declared, has been accomplished without any sacrifice of light on the screen and without impairment of photographic values.

Focal lengths for motion picture work are usually 6½-7½-8½ and 9½ inches; 5 inches, 6 inches and 8 inches diameter condensers are usually used for spotlight projection.

Within recent years there has been a development of what is known as the Parabolic condenser, which has made possible the gathering of more light, and a sharp, concentrated spot on the aperture of the picture machine. These Parabolic condensers have been developed for regular arc projection, high intensity arc projection, and mazda projection. They are a little more expensive than the regular type of condenser, but the results obtained are well worth the price. Prices from $1.50 to $12.

Cooling, Ventilating Systems

CAPABLE of delivering 35,000 cubic feet of fresh air per minute into every part of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems are being adopted by theatres of all sizes. Systems of this type are reasonably priced, ranging in cost from $100 upward.

They may be installed in various parts of the theatre, a common place being below the stage. Under this arrangement distribution of the air is upward, the air passing to the rear of the auditorium and dropping naturally to every seat. In theatres having an organ installed at one side of the proscenium the opposite side of the proscenium affords a good place for a cooling unit. A pent house on the roof at the rear of the auditorium, or on an elevated platform eight or nine feet above the stage floor level, are other manners in which the system may be installed to assure excellent results. In fact, regardless of the nature of the theatre, cooling and ventilating systems of this type may be readily adapted to it.

Manufacturers of this equipment maintain cooling and ventilating experts and offer a service of recommending the most efficient arrangement for the complete cooling and ventilating of a theatre. The systems may be installed without interruption to the regular performances.

Costumes and Costume Fabrics

COSTUMES and costume fabrics for the stage must meet many demands, and for that reason this is a specialized field. These fabrics must be of unusual textures for glittering display behind the footlights or in the spot. The costumes may represent a nation, a period or a class, and such costuming must be the work of a skilled costumer whose knowledge of peoples and periods is unlimited. The fine costume fabrics are both domestic and of foreign make. Costumes are made to order, sold outright, or provided on a rental basis.

Curtain Control Machines

FEW THINGS leave a finer impression on the theatre audience than the smooth and silent opening and closing of the curtain. This is accomplished by curtain control machines which operate automatically. The curtain can be controlled from the booth or from back stage by the simple process of pressing a button.

Curtain control equipment consists of track equipped with cable and snaps to which the curtain is fastened. In opening and closing the curtain may be stopped at any desired point across the stage and may also be reversed at will.

The motor for operating the curtain is usually placed on the stage or it may be placed in the grids or mounted on a platform. This permits the machine, track and curtains to be flied in addition to open from the center.

Theatres of all sizes are now employing automatic curtain control equipment and mechanism of this type has been developed to a high grade of efficiency, contributing immeasurably to audience enjoyment of the program. The price of curtain control machines is around $225 with the track selling at approximately $3 per foot.

A type of curtain control machine specially designed for small theatres with tracks up to 40 feet in length, has been put on the market at a price considerably lower than that of the larger machines.

Curtain Tracks

THE TYPE OF curtain track installed is important for several reasons. It cannot be a makeshift affair, for if it is it may ruin an otherwise good program. Naturally, it must be noiseless and must function smoothly and with little or no effort. A moving curtain attracts attention, therefore that motion must not be accompanied by vibration.

Decorating Products and Service

THE THEATRE to-day has opened a new field for the producer and designer of decorative materials. No other building is as complete in this sense as is the theatre, for in the decorative scheme the theatre has found a factor which encourages patronage. The blending colors, the unique wall designs, the finely cut or moulded grille pieces, modern lighting fixture designs, gorgeous drapes, etc., all lend themselves to the theatre.

Dimmers

THE BEAUTIFUL lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres is accomplished through dimmers which are capable of complete illumination control making possible soft changes and color blending of lights to create a restful and pleasing atmosphere. Dimmers are used by small theatres as well as the large motion picture palaces. They are usually placed at the side of the stage. In instances of smaller installations the dimmer may be operated by the projectionist from the booth.

The magical effect of lighting control and blending as achieved with dimmers is one of the outstanding features of the modern theatre today. On the stage and throughout the theatre dimmers give producers and managers one of their most effective means of creating marvelous effects which unquestionably are important factors at the box office.

Disinfectants, Perfumed

THE NECESSITY of eliminating disagreeable odors in a theatre has led to the development of disinfectants which not only serve to eradicate the odors but leave in the room a delightful perfume fragrance. Disinfectants of this kind are usually sprinkled about the house or they may be used in ornamental cones, placed on the auditorium walls. Particularly during the hot weather months are perfumed disinfectants used extensively to sweeten the air in the theatre and make it agreeable and comfortable. Disinfectants sell for $3.00 a quart and up.

A deodorant which acts as a solvent for the scale forming in urinals and toilets, is also obtainable. It is designed to remove a principal cause of bad odor. Another deodorizing preparation on the market is especially adapted to use in mopping or scrubbing toilet rooms or other places which may be a source of obnoxious smells.

Drinking Fountains

EIGHTEEN drinking fountains about evenly divided between the wall and pedestal type are installed in just one metropolitan theatre alone. While the house is one of the country's largest houses, the drinking water facilities provided easily emphasize the importance of this feature in any theatre.

Drinking fountains should be placed as conveniently as possible for the patron entering and leaving the theatre. In small houses at either end of foyer is a place frequently used. Whether the wall or pedestal type fountain is used depends upon space available, the wall type being used where space conditions are more limited. The wall type is designed with special decorative and illuminating features.

In the finer theatres drinking fountains form an integral part of the decorative scheme of the theatre, being designed in harmony with the balance of the surroundings and in conformity with the architectural treatment of the house.

Earphones

EARPHONES consist of sound receivers attached to head bands and means for connection of the receivers to the main sound system of a theatre so that persons who are hard of hearing may hear the sounds of the picture as well as a normal person. These systems for the hard-of-hearing have made the talking picture as much of a source of entertainment to the person with impaired hearing as the silent picture was before, and through the device, the partially deaf person has been retained as a patron of the motion picture theatre.

Electric Measuring Instruments

THE DEVELOPMENT and improvement in theatre lighting and projection have thrown onto the shoulders of the electrician, as well as the projectionist, many responsibilities. At their command are factors which make or break the show. With enormous switchboards to control, emergency lighting plants, motors, generators, arcs, dimmers, transverters, magnetic appliances and many other involved and sensitive electrical instruments, it devolves on the theatre to provide adequate equipment for their correct operation. In the list of necessary measuring instruments are ammeters, voltmeters, vacuum tube testers and the like. All these and others tend toward improving lighting.

Electric Pickups

ELECTRIC PICKUPS take the sound vibrations from records, transmit them to the amplifiers. The stylus (or needle) runs in a groove on the record and is caused to vibrate according to the groove made at the recording. On the phonograph this needle vibrates a diaphragm located in the neck of the horn, and these vibrations are amplified to audibility by the construction of the horn. Electric pickups are used to convert the mechanical energy picked up from the record by the stylus, which also is the armature of the reproducing unit. A fluctuating audio-frequency voltage is generated in the coil surrounding this armature, which is amplified either through the audio-amplifier (of the radio set) or through the amplifier of a public address or sound picture system.

FANS MAY BE divided into two classes, the portable and the stationary. The latter is the type commonly used in theatres. It is made in a variety of styles and sizes and is used for drawing into the auditorium fresh air or drawing out the foul air. These fans are mounted in a wall opening and in theatres can advantageously be placed in the front or rear of the auditorium and in the lobby. The motors operating these fans are usually supported by a bracket extension of the fan. The motor is generally enclosed to prevent trouble from dust or dirt.

The sizes of these fans range from 10 to 72 inches in diameter.

While the importance of adequate ventilation in the auditorium is generally recognized it has been found that many theatres have failed in providing ventilation in lobbies. Air in the lobby, particularly when crowds are waiting admission soon becomes stagnant and foul, with the result that patrons are unduly wearied and placed in an unfavorable state for enjoying the entertainment.

Film Rewinders

THIS DEVICE is used for rewinding films after they are run through the projectors, and are made in two general patterns, the bench and fire-proof enclosed type. The bench or open rewind is made in one piece types with the dummy and geared end complete in one unit, and others are made so that they can be clamped to a bench or shelf, while some are permanently fastened by means of bolts. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings.

The enclosed rewinds are made in various patterns, both hand drive and motor drive models. The motor drive type is generally automatic in its operation, stopping at the end of the film or should the film break. Some are made with plain bearings and some have their spindles mounted on ball bearings. Some motor drive types also have multiple speed ranges and accommodate either one- or two-thousand-foot reels. One type recently brought on the market also has a detachable grinding and polishing attachment for aiding the operator in keeping his equipment in first class shape as well as keeping his arc lamp in good working order.

Fire Extinguishers

THERE ARE for theatres four types of fire extinguishers: the one quart size hand extinguisher, containing carbon tetra-chloride; the 2½-gallon soda and acid extinguisher; the 2½-gallon foam type, and the portable carbon Dioxide hand type. Good ones of these types are manufactured by many companies. Instructions from fire inspectors should be carefully followed in distributing these through the theatre building. Prices range around $12.00.

Fire Prevention for Projectors

IMPORTANT equipment has been developed which it is said definitely prevents a film fire in the projection machine. This equipment is a safety control device, that is easily installed and which is operated on the regular line voltage. The main control unit and dowser are mounted on the cone of the lamphouse and act as the main light cut off, taking the place of the regular dowser. The dowser is operated from five distinct points of contact, covering every avenue through which a fire could start in the projector while it is in operation or at a standstill with the film in it. All contact points are very sensitive, and the dowser is instantaneous in its action, yet does not depend upon springs to actuate it.

Fireproof Doors

IN PRACTICALLY all states, cities and towns building codes require the use of fireproof doors in certain quarters of the theatre, such as the projection booth, stairwells, exits, dressing rooms, boiler rooms, etc. This demand on the part of the framers of the building codes has been beneficial to the theatre owner in many respects. In the first place it has effected a big saving in insurance. Secondly, and more important, it has safeguarded life and eliminated legal battles and accident and death claims. Before building every theatre owner should consult building code specialists and the fire underwriters.

Fireproof Shutters

AGAIN ENTERING into lower insurance rates are fireproof shutters for the projection booth. Such equipment in the modern theatre has placed the patrons beyond the danger line, so to speak. These safety shutters are so constructed that they drop when film breaks. Certain designs work automatically, while others operate through a release effected by the projectionist. The list price of the shutters range from $9.00 up, depending on size.

Fireproofing Materials

INTO EVERY FACTOR of theatre construction, there should enter fire resisting material. Through such construction, the exhibitor is safeguarding his investment and his clientele. Fireproofing compounds have been prepared for coating scenery, drapes and curtains and other inflammable materials. Today through the use of specially prepared wood, compounds, asbestos, cement, steel and other fire resisting material the owner may feel assured of the safety of his building.

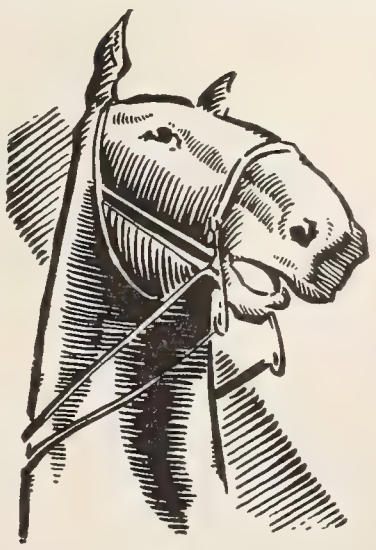
Flashers, Signs

THE SPARKLING life and motion characteristic of so many theatre signs is produced by the use of sign flashers. Sign flashers are made in several types, among them being the motor driven, the mercury contact, thermal and socket flasher type.

The possibilities for attention getting effects through the use of sign flashers is demonstrated daily in thousands of signs equipped with them. Signs employing flashers are generally used in connection with colored lamps or color hoods, the combined flasher and color lending itself to an almost endless interpretation of interesting figures and shapes.



In addition to the interest compelling action which the sign flasher injects in a sign, it is stated that its use effects a saving in current cost over the continuous burning sign. Prices range from $40.00 up.

Flood Lights

FLOOD LIGHTING is accomplished with a lamp equipped with reflector of parabolic form capable of projecting a light to cover a wide area at a distance. For night lighting of theatre buildings lamps usually range from 200 to 1,500 watts. These may be located on the marquise or at some other vantage point opposite or nearly opposite the building. The intensity of the light is governed to a great extent by the type of reflector employed. In general, there are three types: the extensive, the distributing and the concentrating. The former gives a wide smooth distribution of light for close-up work; the distributing reflectors provide a more con-

Frames—Poster, Lobby

POSTER AND LOBBY display frames are manufactured in standard sizes. There are one sheet to hang and one sheet with easel back—three sheets to hang and three sheets with easel back—easel to accommodate a one-sheet and eight combination frames to hang and with 11x14 photographs. Another combination often used is one to take a 22x28 photograph, eight 11x14 photographs and date strip.

Photograph frames are also offered in standard sizes for five or six photographs, 11x14 in size.

Most of the modern theatres are having their lobby display frames and cases built to order to fit the recesses and spaces provided for by the architect. Manufacturers of frames and cases gladly furnish complete drawings and specifications for the theatre owner's approval.

Furniture, Theatre

A NUMBER OF factors should guide the exhibitor in the selection of his furniture. Comfort and restfulness are among the first considerations. Upholstering materials offer a splendid opportunity for accents in the color scheme of the room. Over-elaborateness and that which breathes of the gaudy should generally be avoided.

All furniture depends upon the finish. A glassy varnish finish on any piece cheapens the quality of the framework. It scratches easily and shows dust more readily. A soft finish is always desirable, and this holds particularly true of gold furniture, which looks cheap unless nicely toned down.

Furniture for the men's room should always be of a heavy type, giving a manly and clubby appearance. Leather upholstering is quite proper. Women's rest room should be dainty and more genteel. Cane furniture is appropriate here.

Fuses, Electric

ELECTRICAL FUSES are intentional weakened spots introduced into an electrical circuit and designed to fuse or "blow" due to excess current caused by overload or a short circuit in the line. Thus the circuit is opened before the excess current can damage any other part of the wiring or apparatus forming the circuit. They are purely a protective device and require replacement when the non-renewable type is used, or the renewal link replaced when the renewable type is used.

Fuses are preferable type of protective device because of their lower cost, their enclosed parts, and the absence of moving parts. It is good business to keep extra fuses or renewals on hand at all times. A sufficient supply will prevent a dark house. The theatre owner should not experiment on the use of fuses, but should take the advice of a skilled electrician so that an overload will not result.

Fuses may be more safely pulled than otherwise if a fuse puller is used. This device may prevent burns, injury to the equipment and other mishaps, and it costs but little.

Generators, Motor

THIS ELECTRICAL device is designed to produce direct current for the arc lamp on the projection machine, spotlights or double dissolving stereopticon. It consists of an alternating current motor, directly connected on a shaft to a direct current generator. Motor generators are made for every current requirement to deliver amperages from 20 amperes to 800 amperes.

There are 20 and 30 ampere outfits for reflecting arc lamps; 40, 60 and 80 ampere outfits for the ordinary arcs, and 80, 100, 150 ampere and larger generators for use with high intensity lamps.

Motor generators are made in two types, the series generators and the multiple arc generators.

The series arc is for use with two picture machine arcs. It is so designed that for the period of time needed to warm up the second picture machine arc, preparatory to changing from one picture machine to the other, it will carry both arc lamps at the same amperage without danger of losing the light on the arc lamp on the running picture machine.

Multiple arc generators are designed and built to generate direct current for many arcs. They are used in the motion picture booths where there are two arcs on the picture machines, one or more spotlights and a double dissolving stereopticon and effect machine. The multiple arc generator correctly built, will carry the entire battery or arc lamps and various amperages. The variance in amperage is controlled by the necessary rheostats.

Hardware, Stage

WITH THE GROWING popularity in theatres of presentation acts a need is apparent for equipment to meet the varied physical requirements in the way of stage hardware to accomplish this purpose. The subject of stage hardware takes in many items, large and small, which are equipment essentials in the stage that is to be prepared to house a variety of acts or talent.

Under the heading of stage hardware are included such items as blocks and pulleys of all types, counterweights and arbors, belay pins, cleats, curtain tracks, keystones and corners, pin rails, pin wire, rope, manila and wire, rope locks, sand bags, smoke pocket stage screws, trim clamps, winches, carriers for extra-large screens and horns. Steel curtains and counterweight rigging are also important items of the equipment in the modern stage.

THERE ARE A number of types and arrangements of theatre heating systems, each designed to fit the individual building. One of the systems is known as the fuel-to-air method whereby the transmission of the heating effect from the fuel is obtained without the intermediate processes of transmission through piping and radiators. The volumes of outdoor air entering the system are heated quickly and uniformly, producing comfortable heating and invigorating ventilation in all seasons of the year. The heating units most generally used to warm the incoming air are commonly known as unit heat generators.

Heating Systems, Oil

HEATING BY MEANS of oil is growing rapidly in popularity among theatres. Some of the country's largest playhouses are installing oil heating systems of various makes and types. They are also to be found in smaller theatres. Among the advantages claimed for oil heating is the matter of cleanliness and subsequent savings in draperies and redecorating costs. The operation being automatic, the oil burner requires virtually no attention, effecting a saving in janitor service. Another advantage pointed out is the fact that oil burners give heat only when needed.

Most oil burners are operated in connection with a thermostat so that when the temperature falls even one degree below the desired point, the thermostat establishes connection which starts the burner again. When the temperature goes above the de-

Horn Lifts and Horn Towers

A HORN LIFT is an automatically controlled electric driven elevator used to raise and lower sound horns to their proper places behind the screen. They operate on the hydraulic, cable and drum and screw lift principle, and when the stage is needed for acts, the lift lowers the horn down under the stage. The portion of the stage flooring directly above the lift is attached to the lift, becoming a part of it, and any stage setup located over the lift goes up with it and is ready for use the instant the lift returns to the low level.

Horn towers are structural steel towers on which the horns are fastened. These towers are generally on rubber-tired, ball bearing casters so that they may be moved about silently to properly locate the horns behind the screen. When the horns are not in use the towers can be pushed out of the way.

Insurance

NO BUSINESS MAN today would risk his investment by operating his business without ample insurance. Insurance is obtainable for theatre buildings and equipment to the same extent that it may be procured for other types of establishments, and safety codes and modern methods of construction, installation and manufacture have permitted such a reduction in insurance rates covering exhibitors' risks that ample protection is within reach of any theatre enterprise. Besides the usual forms of insurance covering fire, accidents to employes and patrons, etc., there is rain insurance, which offers exhibitors protection against poor patronage due to storms rising suddenly before show time.

This type of insurance is now used universally to protect the operators of outdoor amusements and sports events, and the financial success of more and more indoor enterprises of this nature are thus being protected, also. When the picture has been bought, perhaps at a high price, and considerable money has been spent in advertising it, a sudden storm can mean a great loss to the exhibitor. Rain insurance protects the exhibitor against this ever-present possibility.

Lamp Coloring

LAMP DIPS or lamp colorings are manufactured by numerous companies, and can be obtained in either the clear color or in a transluscent shade.

There are three types of coloring. One type is for a temporary dip where the color is to be changed often. For such changes, incidentally a color remover can be purchased.

The next type is the color used for dipping lamps which it is desired to color for permanent inside use. This color should not be used for outside lighting as it will not withstand the elements.

The third type is the outside coloring. This is for use on lamps used for lighting electric signs, marquises and other outside lighting. It is a very quickly drying color, taking from three to four minutes to dry. Lamp dip coloring sells for $1.50 per pint and up.

THE VARIOUS lamp manufacturers offer a number of decorative lamps. There are two types of flame shaped lamps used on fixtures with imitation candles and on standing candelabra. They are made in standard base and in candelabra or miniature base, and may be had in frost or sprayed colors—blue and red—flame tint —amber or canary.

Also considered as decorative lamps are the standard globular and pear shaped lamps, which are sprayed in colors as mentioned above.

Lamps, High Intensity

IT IS VERY encouraging, indeed, to note the many recent improvements in the high intensity lamp for moving picture propection.

With playhouses of every increasing seating capacity and consequent increase of projection range or "throw," the high intensity lamp has rapidly become a necessity with very few alternatives for light source in the larger houses.

The high intensity lamp, just a few years ago, while considered a necessity in the larger houses, was also looked upon as a rather troublesome piece of apparatus to be gotten along with because there was nothing else that could serve its purpose. But today the high intensity lamp has been perfected in such measure that it is no longer troublesome or intricate from an operating standpoint, and gives satisfactory results.

Lamps, Incandescent, Projection

THIS TERM may be confusing as there are lamps for motion picture projection as well as lamps for spotlight, searchlight, floodlight, and stereopticon projection. Some are quite different, and each should be used in the service it is designed for.

There are two lamps made especially for theatre projection with professional apparatus. The 900 watt, 30 ampere, 30 volt lamp and the 600 watt, 20 ampere, 30 volt lamp. They cannot be used on the ordinary lighting circuit without a regulator or transformer to change the current to the correct amperage and voltage.

For portable projectors such as are generally classed as "amateur" there are several types of projection lamps in very wide use. There are the 50, 100 and 200 watt lamps for use on 115 volt circuits and the 200 and 250 watt, 50 volt lamps which are operated with a regulator.

All of these lamps are designed to project the most possible light on the screen. The 900 watt lamp produces enough light to work efficiently on throws up to 100 feet. The 600 watt lamp is used for throws shorter than 80 feet. The other lamps are for short throw work, generally with 16-mm. film.

Other lamps designed for spotlight service can be had in wattages of from 100 watts to 10,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines. The 100 and 200 watt sizes are all standard and are carried in stock. There is a standard lamp of 1,000 watts for use on 115 volt lines for motion picture projection. It is not, however, as efficient as the 30 volt type for motion picture work and is generally used for non-theatrical service.

Lamps, Mazda

THE USE of the Mazda lamp has broadened in recent years, and today these lamps are used in projectors in the theatres and on stages of the studios. It has been said, and perhaps rightly, that light sells the show. Especially is this true in the cities where scores of theatres are vying with each other for patronage. In the display signs, in the strip signs, in the marquise, in the lobby and in the theatre proper, the Mazda lamp has made the White Way, whether in the metropolitan centers or in the small towns, whiter. It is being used in the studio as well as theatre. Durable colored lamps may now be purchased with coloring on the inside, permitting the lamps to be washed.

Lamps, Reflector Arc

A CARBON arc lamp for motion picture projection using a reflector for projecting the light through the aperture of the picture machine.

The complete lamp contains as a part of the unit an automatic arc control adjusted to operate at a variance of a fraction of a volt at the arc. The advantage of the reflecting arc lamp is that it will operate at from 20 to 25 per cent of the electrical current necessary to operate the old style arc lamp. The carbons used are much smaller in size, making an additional saving. The reflector arc is now accepted as a necessity by progressive exhibitors, because, in addition to saving electric current, it produces a flat even field of bright crisp white light which is very desirable in motion picture projection.

Lenses

FOR MOTION PICTURE theatre service there are projection lenses and condensing lenses. The latter are also used in projection but are placed in the lamphouse and condense the rays to a spot on the aperture. Projection lenses are objective lenses placed in the projector head.

The prime requirement of a projection lens is to give a bright, well defined picture on the screen without any distortion or color rays. These lenses are made in four sizes: Eighth, quarter, half and three-quarters (diameters, respectively, of 1 11/16, 1 5/16, 2 25/32 and 3¼ inches).

The one-eighth and one-quarter sizes are furnished in equivalent focii of two inches E. F., to eight inches E. F. The half-size is furnished in equivalent focii of four and a half inches E. F. to ten inches E. F., and the three-quarters in equivalent focii of from six inches E. F. to ten inches E.F. There is also procurable a bifocal projection lens with a range of from one-half to three-quarters of an inch in focal length, designed to eliminate the change of lenses in shifting operation from sound to silent films, and vice versa. All the sizes named are standard. Focal lengths are determined by the length size of the picture desired.

Lifts and Elevators for Orchestra, Organ, Stage and Horns

WITH THE ADVANCE in showmanship many new types of equipment have become factors in motion picture presentation and its supplementary entertainment. Not the least of these new factors are the lifts and elevators which play such an important part in the success of programs today. The modern theatre has this equipment.

Lighting Control Equipment

THE MODERN theatre with a well balanced and effective lighing system, has made many demands on the manufacturers of lighting control equipment. Elaborate color effects must be possible and to change the lighting and gradually merge the light from one color to another without attracting the audiences a very flexible control system is required. Even the small control systems permit the operator to produce hundreds of color shades. Generally each color group has its own master control which is cross-interlocked with the ground master wheel device. Efficient control systems are available for every size house, no matter how small or how large.

Lighting Fixtures and Decorative Lighting

WHILE lighting fixtures constitute one of the outstanding features of the theatre today their style and application are obviously best determined by the individual treatment of the theatre and its requirements. It is significant, however, that a number of leading manufacturers have established special departments to give time and attention to the subject of theatre lighting and fixtures.

"Projector Tested" in the famous Graf Laboratory—these lenses insure precise reproduction of your film story

• Operating a special Service Department—Graf changes focal lengths of any make lens by means of an exclusive patented process. Cracked or broken lens can be repaired—and lenses having star cracked or blistered cement can be reconditioned in six hours.

Under the most exacting conditions, every Graf Lens is "pinhole" tested in an actual theatre projector—insuring the severest examination for flatness of field, spherical and chromatic aberation. Then the exact throw and focal length is recorded. Many times more severe than ordinary theatre tests, you are now assured perfect lens performance—reproduction of your film story with clear, clean-cut definition.

Graf Optical Systems, for sound reproduction, both the Magnum and Petit, are giving outstanding service—represent another Graf accomplishment. Designed to comply with your own specifications.

ating the show in the event of a failure of the local power supply. It is said that the financial loss suffered by admissions returned by a theatre through only one power failure a year would more than compensate for the cost of equipment of this type. In addition to financial loss, a power failure during a performance frequently results in loss of life and property through the resultant panic.

Emergency lighting plants are made in several types such as the gasoline engine type, water turbine type, motor generator and battery type. In the case of the motor generator type several sources of power are provided to meet every contingency, which, together, form an interlocking type of protection.

The first source of power for the emergency lights of the theatre is the regular power supply, either from central station lines or from private generating plant. In the case of the private electric plant, if it is automatically operated, it can be so installed with an automatic transfer switch that the instant the regular supply of current fails, the private electric plant is automatically started. The electric plant then supplies the electrical needs of the theatre to the extent of its capacity. This it continues to do for as long as the regular supply is shut off. When this service is again resumed, the plant automatically stops.

The second source for the emergency, exit or hazard line circuits, is a special heavy duty glass jar storage battery, which is automatically kept charged by a motor generator set or rectifier. The capacity of the plant depends upon the total necessary load and the length of time protection is desired. The normal alternating current is fed through the transfer switch direct to the lighting lines and in the event of power failure, the batteries to the lighting lines. The batteries than supply the necessary power until the normal service is resumed, or until the batteries are discharged.

In some states the emergency, exit and hazard light circuits must be of a lower voltage than that of the normal power supply lines. In such cases, a transformer is used to step-down the supply line voltage to that of the emergency circuit voltage.

The third source of supply for the emergency circuits is the motor generator set itself. In case the A.C. transformer circuit, which normally feeds the 32-volt lights, should fail the motor generator set is operated from the man power supply line and connected to the emergency exit light circuits through its battery circuit. The battery will carry the lights only as long as necessary to start the motor generator set. After the motor generator is started the battery floats on the line.

The heavy-duty storage battery is kept continuously charged by means of a motor generator set, which is operated from the regular power lines, on an individual circuit separate from the emergency circuits.

ARE MADE in arc and incandescent types for use on stage—in the booth—in cove lighting, and for head spotting. Most spotlights on the market can be used for spot lighting and for full flood. The arc types are made in sizes of 3 ampere up to 150 ampere. They come complete with stand and attachment cord and connecter. Within the last year, the high intensity spot has appeared. It is an adaptation of the high intensity lamp to spot and flood lighting.

The incandescent spotlights are in sizes of from 250 watt to 2,000 watt. The sizes usually used are 250, 400, 500 and 1,000 watt.

The small head spots of 250 watts are

AN ATTRACTIVE lobby is a boon to business. To conform to the beauty in lobby decoration, colorful and attractive lobby displays have been created. Automatic poster displays in polished bronze are constructed for convenient display of standard stills and photographs, featuring current and coming attractions. Many artistic endeavors have been directed toward the lobby with the result that today few shoddy lobbies greet the patron.

Lobby Display Frames

LOBBY ADVERTISING is an obviously effective business stimulant and in this connection the use of lobby display frames easily ranks first in appearance. With the effective display frames now available it is possible not only to obtain a maximum advertising value from their use but also to add materially to the appearance of the lobby. The front of the theatre may now be "dressed up" in excellent fashion with these frames. In the case of new theatres it is common practice to design lobby frames in conformity with the architectural style of the house.

Music Stands

MUSIC STANDS are made in a number of styles, from those of simple design for smaller houses to more pretentious and ornamental ones for the elaborate theatres.

There are several very practical, up-to-date and attractive designs in music stands including the open, closed, semi-closed and resonant types. A popular open type is one in which ornamental bell-shaped lamp shades are placed one on each side of the music rack just above the level of the top of the music; this type is very practical for musicians on account of the unobstructed view it provides immediately over the top of the music sheet; its simple lines and attractive appearance are unusual and unique.

Of the closed type perhaps a popular kind is made in an elaborate design with lamps concealed above in the music sheet compartment.

Among the newest is the semi-closed type which has a solid rack of the open end design, with a 10-watt lamp concealed above the rack under a triangular shaped shade, or hood; this stand has also a flat table for the convenience of musicians. The new resonant type is of the closed design, having two 10-watt lamps concealed in the enclosure in which the music rack is placed; the resonator is below the music rack; this stand increases the volume and resonance of the orchestra and eliminates all pit light from about 90 per cent of the house. It gives the musicians better light with less wattage. Prices range from $15 to $75.

Manufacturers of music stands are also prepared to supply conductor stands to harmonize with the type of music stand used.

Organs

IT IS HARDLY necessary here to call attention to the ever growing importance of organ music in theatres. Next to the film and projection machines, the organ today is a recognized necessity and a proven box office attraction. Virtually every phase of the organ's place and use in theatres has been discussed in numerous articles in BETTER THEATRES.

Space here will not permit, nor is it desirable, that a lengthy discussion of organ and organ music be given. It is in order to call attention, however, to several facts in connection with organs that are of more or less recent development. One of these is the location of the organ grilles. While these have been conspicuous in the past, usually on either side of the stage opening a number of theatres are now placing the organ grille in the ceiling, directly in front of the center of the proscenium. At the Roxy theatre in New York the organ chambers are located beneath the stage.

Mounting the organ console on an elevator so that the organist may be brought into full view of the audience during a solo is another comparatively recent feature that is winning great vogue. Double consoles are now used in a number of theatres.

In the purchase of an organ the theatre owner should make sure that the instrument is built for theatre work.

In the main, aside from detail considerations, the important thing to bear in mind in the purchase of a theatre organ is whether or not the instrument is designed and built to meet theatre requirements. Demands upon an organ to be used in a theatre and in a church, for example, are obviously at variance. The result is that organs for theatres are built along exacting lines, expressly for the work they are intended to perform.

Organ Chimes

THE THEATRE ORGAN, in the range of musical instruments which it reproduces, is orchestral in performance. Perhaps no musical instrument is as responsive to the human touch. Chimes, marimbas, harps, vibra-harps, celestes, xylophones, bells, glockenspiels—the range of instruments is limited only by the price of the instrument installed. And each instrument must be as finely constructed as the instruments used by the orchestra.

Organ Heaters

REACTION upon organ music and the instrument itself of cold weather and dampness has led to the development of organ chamber heaters which keep the temperature in the chamber at a uniform degree, preventing loss of pitch, and deterioration of the organ. Electric heaters with thermostat control are used for this purpose. Organ chambers are usually tuned at a temperature of from 65 to 75 degrees. If the temperature is allowed to drop 10 degrees below the tuning temperature the metal pipes become flat by a quarter or half tone. A 10 degree rise above the tuning temperature will cause the same pipes to become sharp and further rise puts many of them out of pitch. The effect of dampness is to cause a swelling and consequent deterioration of wooden chests, pipes and other parts in the chambers.

Since organ chambers are not standard in size the amount of heating equipment must be determined for each chamber. The larger the chamber or the greater the area exposed outside walls, the larger must be the wattage of the heater installed. Heaters should be mounted near the bottom of exposed or outside wall so that rising warm air from heater will counteract the descending columns of chilled air. Thermostats should be located at the point the best circulation takes place and out of reach of direct heat from heaters.

Organ loft heaters may be so constructed as to deflect the heat back to the floor of the organ chamber, allowing the hot air to mushroom out before rising through the organ mechanism. This is accomplished by a hooded top.

In large theatres operating afternoon and evening, heaters are usually left in operation 24 hours. In smaller houses they may be disconnected when the show is over and started again by simply throwing a switch when needed.

Ornamental Fountains

ORNAMENTAL fountains are invariably places of interest in the theatre. In addition to their decorative value they create a desirable atmosphere of coolness in the summer time through the sound of the trickling water as it falls into the base of the fountain.

Ornamental fountains may be obtained in many sizes and in many forms. The water pressure is supplied by a small pump operated from light socket current, the same water being used over again in most instances.

Perfumes and Perfumers

DISAGREEABLE odors are unfortunately a usual concomitant of crowds, particularly in such compact enclosures as the motion picture auditorium. These odors may be effectively eliminated by the use of highly aromatic perfumes, method of diffusion is the simple one of which are diffused throughout the air. One placing the perfume in decorative cones, resembling a vase, at various places along the walls. These cones are made of clay and readily absorb the perfume, which may be said to saturate the cones, and the odor radiates from the latter to quite a large area beyond.

Another widely used method is to spray the air with a perfume at suitable intervals.

A trifle less simple and perhaps more effective method is that of placing perfume in a disseminator located at the ventilating fan so that the evaporated liquid or solidified perfume will carry its fragrance through the auditorium along with the fresh air.

Prices vary from 50 cents for the vase-disseminators, to $2.50 for the ventilating system disseminators. A variety of odors are obtainable at from several dollars to $7.50 per pound.

Phonograph Motors

PHONOGRAPH MOTORS are small motors that drive the turntable of a phonograph or non-synchronous device. These replace the spring motor that requires winding. Some motors are universal and work in 110 volts, 60 cycles, or most any lighting circuit. Others work on A. C. current only and are designed for frequency ranges which the purchaser must specify.

Plastic Paint

PLASTIC PAINT is extensively used for decorating auditorium walls, lobbies and foyers of theatres. With this paint almost any sort of rough texture can be developed from the most refined stipple to the shaggiest Spanish palm finish. Sand swirl, two-tone and other effects can also be obtained in a number of colors and color combinations.

Plastic paint comes in the form of a white powder. Before application it is mixed with water; sometimes, also, with coloring matter. It may be tinted with dry colors before application, or the plastic paint may be sized and then glazed with an oil glaze tinted with oil colors. It may be applied on any type of surface and when thus properly applied and treated it can be washed from time to time with soap and water.

In the decoration of theatres today, the use of plastic paint opens up a new field of expression to the architect and decorator. It is not only applicable in many striking and unusual texture effects to walls and ceilings, and in remarkably beautiful blended color combinations—but it is also adaptable to many unique, original and conventional treatments. It can be used in panels and frescoes, in sgraffito and relief work. Sprayed with bronze or aluminum powder over a richly colored background, it produces gorgeous gold and silver effects.

Plumbing Fixtures

EVERY PART of the theatre should be in keeping with the general architectural beauty of the theatre. Also, those parts of construction which are under cover of plaster and other exterior coverings must meet the requirements of building codes. The value of hidden fittings of high quality cannot be too strongly stressed as a factor in efficient and economical theatre operations. Included in these specifications are plumbing fixtures, both exposed and concealed.

Plumbing fixtures play an important part, both in the decorating scheme of a theatre and the cost of insurance. They should, therefore, be investigated by the theatre owner, remembering that they may be had in both white and in colors, and with various distinguishing sanitary features.

Portable Projectors

PORTABLE PROJECTORS are motion picture projection machines which are designed to be set up only temporarily and not for permanent installation in a regular theatre, as a rule, although used there. They are particularly adapted for use in schools, clubs, etc., and may be obtained for installation in connection with leading makes of sound equipment or with sound apparatus built in. There is a model with a heavy pedestal for permanent installation.

Semi-Portable projectors are standard motion picture machines which may be utilized for either temporary or permanent installations. That is to say, these machines, while sturdily constructed, are comparatively light in weight and may be moved from room to room or from one building to another. Specially designed carrying cases are also provided at slight additonal cost for convenience in transporting for longer distances. For permanent installations, the model with the heavy pedestal no doubt has its advantages. Sound apparatus specially constructed for portable machines is available.

Poster Projectors

THESE MACHINES are projectors operated similarly to steropticons, except that instead of employing transparent slides, matter printed on opaque surfaces can be projected upon a screen. They are used in the making of posters for lobby displays and similar purposes. The artist projects a drawing or photograph from a press sheet or other prepared advertising matter, upon the surface on which he is to make his own drawing, controlling the image size by moving the projector nearer to or farther from the objective. The system of mirrors and lenses in the projector gives an image of the same direction and proportions as those of the original. The artist then merely traces along the projected lines, filling in the colors as indicated.

Poster projectors usually allow the use of original subjects as large as six or seven inches long by five or six inches high. Subjects larger than that can be projected and copied in sections.

Programs

UNUSUAL PROGRESS has been made in the publication of theatre programs in the past few years. Today the program is one of the outstanding advertising mediums of the motion picture house. It goes into the home, where it is perused by the family.

In obtaining programs the exhibitors need only specify the names of the attractions and the dates. Within eight hours programs containing effective copy, suitably illustrated, are completed. This is possible through the efficiency of highly organized and ably manned printing plants devoted exclusively to this work. Copy provided in theatre programs carries a well balanced selling "punch" creating a desire to see the attractions. The programs are amply illustrated and complete facts concerning stars, players, author and other matters of interest are included.

In the dissemination of theatre programs many theatres have regular lists of patrons to whom programs are mailed each week while others distribute the programs to patrons as they leave the theatre.

Prominent concerns specializing in this work are:

Program Covers

CONSTRUCTION OF bigger and better theatres has developed a demand for a higher class of advertising. Offset color program covers are representative of the efforts of theatre owners toward increasing artistry and dignity in their advertising. These colored program covers are highly artistic and colorful. The fact that they are extensively used has enabled production of program covers of this type at a very reasonable cost, considering their beauty and effectiveness. In fact, the use of program covers has enabled exhibitors to attain a highly desirable individuality in this phase of their advertising. These program covers combine all the elements of a program announcement with the necessary distinctive features of a high class house organ. Prices range from $3 per thousand to $7 per thousand, depending on size of cover.

Projection Booths and Equipment

THE PROJECTION room, or booth, because of the fact that it is one of the nerve centers of the motion picture theatre, is becoming standardized. Not in size, naturally, but in general construction, and the high standard of equipment, etc. The projection booth, because of the very nature of the purpose it serves, must be fireproof and ideally ventilated. Though standardized in the general meaning of the word, the booth, in its placement, construction and equipment, should have individual treatment for each theatre. The skilled projection engineer should be consulted on this vital phase of motion picture presentation.

There are many things to keep in mind in the purchase of projection room equipment. Certain parts of this equipment must conform to the building codes, it must be practical, it must satisfy the projectionist and it must lend itself to better projection. It is wise in a majority of instances to consult a skilled projectionist before purchasing this equipment, for his knowledge of completeness and product is broad. The projection booth today is an efficiency room with an expert in charge, and the equipment purchaser should be selected with that in mind.

The design and layout of the projection room should have the careful attention of the architect or builder at the time the plans for the theatre are being prepared. The co-operation of projection machine manufacturers or their distributors can profitably be called into use in the planning of a projection room and in considering its equipment. A number of instances are known where the design of the projection room, relegated to last-minute consideration by the architect or owner, has necessitated expensive remodeling when it has been found that beams and other constructional features made proper projection impossible.

The desirable projection room may vary in size but to acommodate two projectors, it should be at least 15 feet by 10 feet, with 12 foot ceiling. This size will also care for a spotlight and slide dissolver. By all means toilet facilities should be provided and a shower bath is highly desirable.

For construction, a floor of 6 inch cement slab is recommended with 4 inch tile wall. Doors, windows and casings should be of steel. There should be two entrances to the booth. A room adjacent to the booth, at least 8 by 8 and well ventilated should be provided for the generator.

It is important that in the event of fire the flame or smoke be kept out of the auditorium and for this reason the aperture on the front wall of the booth should be lined with steel and fitted with steel covers which will automatically drop when a fusible link melts that is over each projector, releasing the aperture covers.

Projection Machines

PROJECTORS HERE referred to are the standard non-portable machines designed for permanent installation, usually in theatres. It is the expressed belief of theatre owners and projectionists that practically ideal projection is possible with equipment available at present, provided it is in the hands of a competent operator. Modern projection machines are the result of many years of improvement and development to meet the ever-growing requirements for the best possible screen results.

Noticeable in the latest developments are the efforts of the manufacturers to keep abreast of the exacting requirements for projection in conjunction with sound reproduction. A type of shutter designed to eliminate the heat from the film and to provide air currents tending to draw dust and dirt from the film, are among the latest developments.

All late model standard projectors are either constructed specially for sound picture projection or are readily adapted to any make or model of sound apparatus, either for sound-on-disc or sound-on-film. The latter method, due to greater thickness and density of film requires the use of much more amperage at the arc and this factor has been met with lamps and lamphouses of greater illuminative output capacity. Also the use of the perforated sound screen has to a very great extent added to the necessity of greater illumination. Moving picture projectors are now constructed more acurately and sturdily than ever before due to the more exacting requirements of talking picture projection and greater area of picture surfaces.

While thousands of dollars are frequently spent in many other departments of the theatre an apparent indifference to the importance of the best possible projection has been shown by too many theatre owners in the past. Fortunately, this attitude is undergoing a very marked change and projection is beginning to receive due attention.

The motion picture theatre, despite the many trimmings connected with its construction today, offers to the public as its chief attraction the film story on the screen Even sound has not made clarity of image less important. That the projected image should be as bright and steady as it is possible to produce by modern machinery and engineering skill goes without saying.

One of the handicaps to the securing of proper projection in the past has been in the delay given this phase of the theatre at the time plans for the house are made. In a measure responsibility for this may be placed with the architect who, in his desire to create a palace of beauty and grandeur has apparently failed to consider that such facilities are without purpose unless the thing which the public pays its money to see—the picture on the screen—is of a quality to produce the highest type of entertainment.

It is not the desire nor the intention here to go into any technical details concerning projection machines. It is rather aimed in these columns to impress upon the exhibitor who is not already alive to the fact that projection in his theatre should have his keenest attention. The picture is the main attraction practically always and any skimping in its quality ultimately will be reflected in decreased receipts.

Public Address Systems

PUBLIC ADDRESS SYSTEMS provide a means of electrically amplifying the voice. The microphone picks up the words, and as electrical energy corresponding to the original sound waves, these "words" are carried through amplifiers to the speakers, where they are transformed into their original physical form as sound waves, only now of much greater intensity than when merely created by the human vocal mechanism. Public address systems are used principally in the theatre for announcements, though it is adaptable to many related purposes. Microphonic attachment may be made at several points in the system, making its function available to the manager in his office as well as backstage.

Pulleys, Variable Speed

THIS EQUIPMENT is used in theatres for such purposes as driving ventilation fans. Because the proper audition of sound pictures requires the reduction of extraneous noises to a minimum, such drives are designed to operate quietly. Another desirable characteristic is an ability to operate without creation of heat. They are constructed for variable speeds so that the actual speed of the drive itself can be varied while the motive power remains constant.

Recording

MOTION PICTURE sound recording is divided into two general types —recording on discs, and recording on film.

In modern electrical recording the sound is picked up by a sensational electrical microphone. The microphone sets up a weak current which pulsates with the vibrations of the sound being recorded. This current is amplified, filtered and again amplified to the strength necessary to operate the mechanism necessary to make the impressions on the wax records. By this system any number of different sounds can be picked up and the volume of each regulated to the desired volume.

In sound-on-film recording, the sound waves translated into electrical energy by the microphone, are further translated into light waves, which affect the emulsion of the film in the usual photographic manner, creating light and dark areas along one side of the film. These areas (depending in their form upon whether the light-valve or oscillograph method of light translation has been used) represent the original sound waves in their light correlatives.

THERE ARE VARIOUS types of these made, from the 10-inch, as used by film exchanges, to the accurately constructed type used on the projector machines. Some have machine embossed sides, wire welded sides, and still another type has die cast sides. Most of the types offered for use on the projectors have large diameter film hubs, which greatly aid in relieving the strain on the projector as well as giving more even take-up tension.

Reel End Alarms and Film Indicators

A MECHANICAL DEVICE placed on the upper magazine of a picture machine to warn the operator that the end of the reel of film is near, takes the name of Reel End Alarm. They are so constructed that they can be set to ring a warning at any distance from the end.

At all times, the amount of film on the upper reel is shown.

Rheostats

AN IMPORTANT item of projection equipment is the Rheostat. A rheostat may be described as a resistor provided with means for varying resistance (opposition). The resistance may be varied by having a contact lever or slider moved over a number of stationary buttons or segments between which sections of the rheostat are connected, by compressing a number of carbon or graphite disc or parts, by using a number of levers or knife-switches for cutting in and out resistance.

Safes, Box Office

THIS IS A SAFE anchored inside the box office into which the cashier may drop silver coins and bills as received from patrons beyond what is needed for purposes of making change. This type of safe has been developed as a result of the many "stick-ups" of theatre box offices in which the robber has obtained receipts running into several thousand dollars. It is widely used in several other trades, the

BUILD BURGLAR PROTECTION into YOUR TICKET OFFICE

THE installation of a YORK Round Door Chest is so easy and economical that you cannot afford to be without this protection for your cash receipts. Anchored in a block of solid concrete, this sturdy little safe defies all menace of fire and theft. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy door. And that will stop any burglar.

When desired, the YORK Chest is also provided with the "Hold-up Partition" as illustrated. Provided with a slot for the insertion of money, this inner door may be kept closed and offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for a YORK Chest in a reasonable length of time.

Let us show you why so many companies, both large and small, have adopted them. Write for illustrated folder.

Schools

THEATRE MANAGEMENT and theatre organ playing are no longer hit-or-miss propositions. Both have become highly specialized. The theatre manager must be trained in administration duties, advertising and technics, and the organist must be able to dramatize the music to accompany the screen attractions. So valuable do chain organizations consider the trained man or woman that they are demanding those persons who have become skilled through graduate work in schools.

Screens

THERE ARE THREE types of screens for motion picture projection, metallic surfaced, white surfaced and beaded surfaced. Sound screens are perforated to permit the issuance of the sound waves from the horns behind.

The metallic surfaced screens are built in various finishes, from a smooth surface to a heavy pebbled surface. The smooth surfaced screen has perpendicular reflective characteristics, while the heavy pebbled surfaces somewhat diffuse the light. In wide houses, the best image is obtained on the latter type. Metallic surfaces, as a rule, are built to fit the requirements of each house.

Flat white or diffusing type screens in most cases are used with high intensity projection. Screen surfaces are made to meet the requirements of mazda, reflecting arc, regular arc and high intensity projection. Prices of screen range from 50 cents to $2 per square foot.

Screens for sound pictures are used with most sound apparatus. They differ from silent screens in that they are porous. When the horns are located behind the screen, a tightly woven canvas would retard or muffle the sound. These screens are perforated or otherwise made porous. Some are coated with a silver finish and are constructed to lace into a frame.

Da-Lite Screen Company, 2715 N. Crawford Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Screen Frames

AFTER ALL, THE picture's the thing, and without stability and solidity of the screen frame the picture is being shown at a disadvantage to both theatre owner and projectionists, to say nothing of the patron. Billowing of the screen is a blow to good projection. Now, too, there is the added element of the steel frame as another form of equipment development.

Da-Lite Screen Company, 2715 N. Crawford Avenue, Chicago, Ill.
Schoonmaker Equipment Company, 276 Ninth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Screen Masks

LARGER SCREENS HAVE come into rather general vogue recently, due to the elaborate type of productions now being produced which, with the use of special lenses have enabled theatres to present outstanding scenes with greater effect and scope. The many opportunities to use the full screen to give added value to important scenes have brought about the development of the screen modifier, or mask which, automatically operated, permits framing of the screen at any desired size. The screen modifier, or mask, was first used in connection with sound-on-film to compensate for the sound on the edge of the film. This equipment is now being used in many other ways, especially in achieving ingenious opportunities for titles, announcements and special trailers.

Screen Resurfacing

TO INSURE proper screen illumination without increasing power consumption or incurring the risk of glare, the screen surface should be kept as reflective as possible. In spite of regular cleaning routine, however, screens gradually get soiled, and in instances in which it is not felt that a new screen is warranted, one has recourse to resurfacing.

When the screen surface was solid, resurfacing presented only the problems represented by the necessity for uniform whiteness and proper reflection and diffusion. The sound screen, however, is perforated (except in rare instances in which the horns may be located elsewhere than behind the screen), and in resurfacing means must be employed to keep the perforations free of the new material. A vacuum cleaner has been used successfully for this purpose.

Exhibitors have used a flat white paint to resurface their screens. However, due to the greater necessity today for an immaculate screen, the practice of resurfacing is increasing, and as a result specific materials and expert methods are available. One of these materials is sprayed on, after the screen is washed, and is of such character that it does not clog the perforations, and that it restores to the screen a high reflective power. One of the characteristics cited in a resurfacing material now on the market is its penetrability, causing it to permeate the texture of the screen fabric, restoring its original tightness.

Signs, Directional

TAKE THE CASE of a patron who comes from the auditorium and asks for directions. If the theatre owner has had this experience he realizes the embarrassment and other inconvenience. The patron is paying his way into the theatre and he deserves every consideration. The modern theatre today is equipping itself with the directional sign. Every business building is doing likewise.

Signs may be considered in two general groups—those that are illuminated and those which are etched on metal or wood without illumination. The illuminated signs, which are highly artistic in finish and construction, are made to read either from one side or both. The lettering in the signs is chipped into the glass and silvered, making it easy to read in daylight. The letters glow in a soft greenish color. Illumination is accomplished with 25-watt showcase lamps. Signs are fitted with lamps, cord and plug ready for attaching to light socket.

Signs—Electric

MOTION PICTURE theatres are dealers in the use of electrical advertising, the usual electric signs at some of the metropolitan houses being the most elaborate of their kind. Since the sign must necessarily be made with consideration for the size of the theatre facade and facilities for anchoring it, the matter is usually given individual consideration, and sketches prepared for the specific building to which the sign is to be fastened.

Sound Equipment, Complete

MUSIC and sound reproducing devices are of two types, synchronous and non-synchronous. The latter use phonograph records, which are cued to the picture. The majority of these machines, which have from two to four discs for the records, are operated from the pit or other location in view of the screen. The synchronous type, however, is operated from the projection booth, employing disc records or film recordings made in conjunction with the picture

Among the developments in motion picture sound is the increase in the employment of the sound-on-film method of reproductoin. Experiment has eradicated many of the disadvantages of this method and increased its advantages.

Sound Equipment Accessories

ACCESSORIES for music and sound reproducing devices are many and varied. This comparatively new phase of the motion picture business has brought new demands upon the theatre. In the word "theatre" are included the exhibitor and the projectionist. These new phases of theatre operation must be studied, and included in the product necessary to operation of such equipment are: Pick-ups, motors, needle cups and covers, automatic stops, headsets, turntables, volume controls (rheostats), electric filter, amplifiers, (power packs), radio tubes, loud speaker units, speakers (magnetic or electro-dynamic), horns (exponential), rotometers, stroboscopic discs, cabinets and cabinet hardware. A well balanced set is imperative and for such a set there are equipment requirements which cannot be overlooked.

There has also been brought out a rectifying device for use with the exciter lamp on the projector. This device eliminates the use of batteries or rectifiers for supplying D. C. current to the filament of the lamp. It consists of a transformer, chokes and condensers, and uses Argon gas tubes for the rectifying unit.

Sound-Proofing

WITH A GROWING tendency on the part of theatre owners to incorporate into the theatre building additional recreational features, such as bowling alleys and ballrooms, the matter of sound-proofing has become a subject of wide interest.

Hearing conditions in an auditorium can be provided for to a large extent in advance of construction from a study of the plans. Acoustical defects in existing auditoriums can also be diagnosed and corrective measures applied with satisfactory results.

Acoustic defects may be corrected by applying an efficient sound-absorbing material on walls or ceiling, as prescribed by a competent acoustical engineer. A number of efficient sound-absorbing materials are available, which may be elaborately decorated without reducing its efficiency.

Speakers and Horns

HORNS AND SPEAKERS used in sound installations are air columns with a belled outlet, or magnetic or electro-dynamic cones (in baffles or horns), used to project the sound waves created by the amplified electrical pulsations. They are attached to amplifiers and usually number two or more, depending on the size of the theatre.

Speed Indicators

SPEED INDICATOR — an electrical device with an indicator which can be located in the booth, on the orchestra director's table and in the manager's office, with the meters or speedometers attached to the picture machine to register at what rate of speed the film is being run through the machine. It indicates feet per minute and also may show minutes per thousand feet. In modern theatres where the performances are run on a schedule with everything synchronized, speed indicators are a necessity. Prices range from $15 a unit, up. Generators extra.

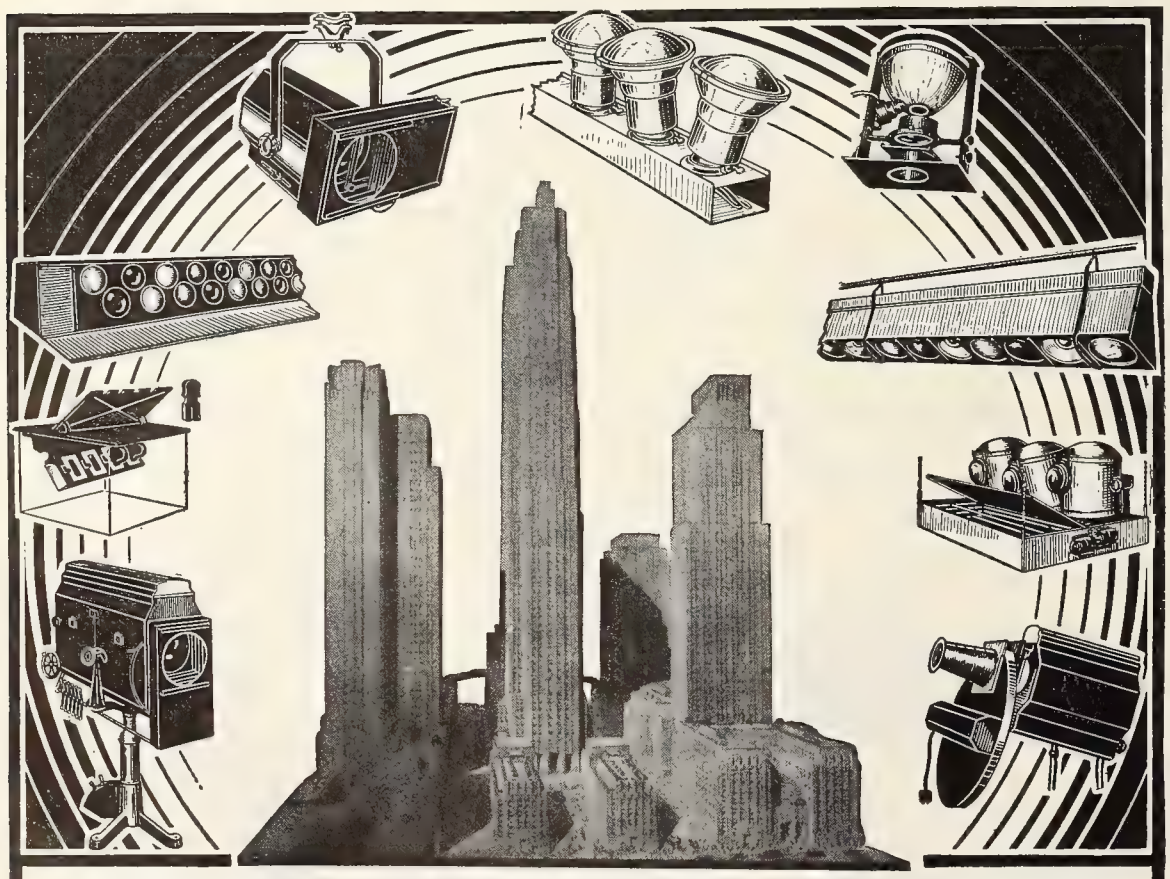
Stage Scenery and Draperies



DRAPERIES ARE an important feature of theatres today. They accent color and give softness and richness to an interior. Architectural lines of doorways and archways are usually distinctively hard and draperies are the mediums by which these lines are softened to give a pleasing appearance.

Switchboards

CONTROL OF LIGHTING through the use of switchboards makes possible the wonderful lighting effects achieved in motion picture theatres today. Switchboards for this work are built in many capacities. Scenes for unusual lighting effects may be pre-selected by such a board and the theatre flooded with appropriate lighting scheme at a proper cue by the simple method of throwing a switch. Lighting control systems are being adopted by theatres of lesser size that heretofore have considered such installations as being only for the larger metropolitan houses.

Manufacturers of this type of equipment are glad to furnish engineering service and consult with exhibitors and architects on various phases of these lighting control systems.

Switches

NEVER in the history of the theatre has electrical equipment played as vital a role as it does today. With the program on a minute schedule, electrical switches in turn have an important duty to perform.

Temperature Control Apparatus

TEMPERATURE control apparatus are devices for automatically controlling the temperature of the auditorium, organ chambers or any part of the theatre where a uniform heat must be maintained. In a control for an auditorium the device is a small thermostat, which actuates a valve on an air-line, which in turn operates the shutters in the air ducts. In the average size theatre several of these will be located at various places and each will operate independently of the other, thus relieving hot or cold spots in any one section. Controls for organ chambers turn on or off electric heaters and also work on the thermostatic principle.

THEATRE TICKETS are available and used in many forms as roll tickets, folded tickets, reserved seat tickets, and ticket coupon books. Roll and folded tickets of the more usual denominations are carried in stock. Tickets are commonly sold in even multiples of 10,000, the price decreasing with additional thousands ordered.

Tickets are made for use with ticket issuing machines and are consecutively numbered. This enables accurate check of tickets sold for each day. Stock tickets may be obtained for 50 cents a roll. Specitl printed roll or center hole folded tickets range in price from $8 for 10,000 to $158 for a million. The admission price must be printed on each ticket, by order of the government.

Syncrofilm
SOUND EQUIPMENT

WEBER MACHINE CORPORATION
59 RUTTER STREET
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Mr. Exhibitor,
Any Street, Anywhere.

SYNCROFILM again leads with the development of a new "WIDE RANGE MODEL C SOUND HEAD."

The WEBER MACHINE CORPORATION is recognized as the largest independent manufacturer of sound equipment in the business today, having without exaggeration in the United States and Canada over 2800 installations now operating.

Syncrofilm again offers its money-back guarantee as in the past. Inasmuch as we have never had to remove our equipment or refund any money on a Syncrofilm Product, we feel justly proud in the statement that Syncrofilm Equipment is unequalled both in quality and in price.

Thru extensive cooperation with the engineering staff of a leading optical manufacturing company, we have obtained the most efficient optical system that it is possible to construct. This optical system incorporated with the use of extensive improvements insures sound quality and machine life comparable to that made by largest sound manufacturers in the world.

We are offering this sound head to the trade at the amazingly low list price of $250.00 per pair, for both Simplex and Powers. This price includes drive belts, photo cells, optical systems, exciter lamps as well as attachment brackets for projectors. Our terms are, either cash with order, or C.O.D., f.o.b. Rochester. The prices quoted are not retroactive.

Here is your chance to cash in on the Nationally known name of Syncrofilm, an equipment that has been tried and proven. Is it not better that you do this than to take a "flier" in purchasing unproven equipment.

Very truly yours,
WEBER MACHINE CORPORATION

theatre. The ticket chopper guards against the resale of tickets. Mutilation of the ticket consists of perforations made on the ticket, which, however, is done in a manner that does not prevent acurately checking results. Trailers

THE EXHIBITOR has his screen for entertainment purposes, but it also is an invaluable asset in promotional work. Trailers are widely used and vary just as widely in style, depending, of course, upon the type of entertainment to be promoted. Trailers on feature pictures may be obtained on a weekly, monthly and yearly contract basis. Other trailers may be designed and produced for some special feature of the program. A great many theatres also have their own title trailer for the news reels, especially when several news reels are combined.

Upholstery Material

USE OF SOUND absorbing upholstering on theatre seats has come into popular demand since the advent of sound pictures. A popular fabric used in this connection is mohair, which combines beauty with important sound properties. Upholstering material of this nature may be obtained in a variety of colors and executed in interesting patterns and designs. It is claimed for this material that it will not fade, does not mat down, and can be kept fresh and clean with little effort. Use of mohair for upholstering is said to produce a marked elimination of reverberations in the theatre auditorium.

Usher Signal Systems

THE USHER SIGNAL SYSTEM provides a sending station at each aisle, equipped with numeral push buttons that give any total of seats that aisle might have. The usher registers on this station the number of vacant seats available, which information is transmitted to the floor or head usher, depending on the size of the theatre. In the larger houses the floor usher relays the information to the head usher. The head usher sends total of all aisles and floors to the doorman who directs the people to the different sections of the house where the vacant seats are waiting.

Vending Machines and Scales

IN RECENT months BETTER THEATRES has inaugurated a department called "Added Income" designed to keep theatre owners informed of possibilities for extra revenue through the use of vending machines and other merchandising ideas.

One large circuit which has recently installed candy vending machines and weighing scales in some 600 theatres has made a careful analysis of possible revenue from such sources and reveal an expected income of between $400,000 and $500,000 annually. Their survey shows that an average of one out of every thirteen persons attending a theatre will patronize a vending machine. According to figures from various theatres, candy vending machines have produced from $50 per month upward, each. Many theatres have found room for three or more machines.

Ventilators

PROPER DISTRIBUTION of air in the theatre is an important feature of correct ventilation. One of the methods of achieving this is through the use of ventilators located in the auditorium floor. Air brought into the theatre is distributed in this manner to all parts of the house. Ventilators of this type which are generally known as mushroom ventilators, may be adjusted to permit the desired amount of air entering the auditorium.

Equipment News and Comment

NEW DIMMER DEVICE

● A new dinner control system has been invented by Joseph and Samuel Saltzman, theatrical electricians in New York City. The system is of hydraulic type, and its tremendous leverage permits it to operate one dimmer or 100 dimmers at the same time, affecting any lighting change at even very slow speeds.

The invention was recently granted a patent, and the first installion was made in the Royale theatre in New York, where it is being used extensively throughout the John Goldn production of "When Ladies Meet," highly successful comedy by Rachel Crothers.

In this production it is necessary to change the lighting effects several times, and in addition to the night and day effects there is a storm which requires considerable slow and fast dimming.

Joseph Saltzman is the chief electrician of the Chanin Brothers theatres, while Samuel, his brother, is chief electrician for John Golden. Both have been in the theatrical electrical industry and have contributed many devices and inventions for the past 27 years.

SPEED CONTROL

● A small speed reduction unit with an enclosed motor drive has been placed on the market by the Merkle-Korff Gear Company of Chicago. This unit has a wide range of application due to its compactness. The overall dimensions are: height, 3⅛ inches; width 3⅛ inches; and depth, 2⅜ inches.

The unit can be supplied for almost any speed required, from motor speed of three thousand revolutions per minute downward. It can be obtained for either clock-wise or counter clock-wise rotation. Both horizontal and right angle drives can be furnished. Right angle drives are available with the output shaft in any position around the 350° circle.

An induction motor of the (shaded pole type) or a synchronous motor is provided although where required same can be supplied with the universal motor for d. c. applications. The gear housing is made so that gears run in grease which is sealed.

This unit has theatrical application to automatic curtain control, timing devices, for stage lighting equipment, relays and automatic color changers.

SIGN-LIGHTING CONTROL

● A new type of sign-lighting control that flashes, dims or brightens the lamps with a wide variety of effects—and which requires neither moving parts nor electric contacts—has been produced in the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company. The control can be applied economically to practically all incandescent-lamp signs and, when used with those which are lighted continuously, produces a more attractive effect and at the same times reduces the operating expense by from 40% to 60%. So compact is the control, a space little more than three feet on a side is large enough to hold all the equipment required to control a sign having 1,500 lamps. Correspondingly smaller space is, therefore, required for smaller signs.

The sign control, as well as many other effects, is obtained by combinations of saturable-core reactors, copper oxide rectifiers and resistance units, built up into non-linear circuits. These circuits have been produced, and their effects are being studied, by Dr. C. G. Suits in the G. E. Laboratory.
